Mr. RANDALL. It is not a matter of royalty only that the Government is committed to; it is bound by its contracts. I am not friendly to patents of this character nor royalties of this character. But here we find the law. Here we find the contracts; here we find these eighteen presses. On the part of the Government are we to break the contracts, break the law, and make useless these eighteen presses? I do not think, nor did the Committee on Appropriations think, that was wise. The committee did, however, think we ought not to provide for any additional presses of this character; that we ought to stop just where we are now.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I simply want to supplement my statement, as I think the committee has not caught the exact idea. If you strike out the part of the paragraph that contains the limitation of plate printers you are then exactly in harmony with the chairman's expression.

Mr. TRACEY. In relation to this matter so much has been said that is not entirely relevant to the amendment that I would like to explain my position somewhat.

I had a conversation with representatives of some of the labor organizations, and gentlemen who were interested in this matter, and I was very much impressed with their sincerity. They at no time represented to me that they had any desire to stop progress; they simply wished to have an investigation, believing that the work is not properly done. Moreover, it happens to be within my knowledge that the officers connected with the Treasury Department and the Secretary of the Treasury are not at all averse to an investigation of this kind, if the House deems it proper to be made. As has been stated here, there is at present an examination of the matter going on before one of the committees of the House. I make this statement, because I am heartily in accord with the desire of those gentlemen, who represent a very large body of laboring people. I do not desire, nor do I believe they would desire, to have the Government violate any contract, and I hope the gentleman [Mr. FARQUHAR] will so word his amendment as to avoid any misconstruction.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I ask unanimous consent to strike out of my amendment the words "and for royalty for use of steam plate presses."

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have the amendment read as it now stands.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read first the amendment and then the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 23, page 13, strike out "not more than two hundred and twelve." In line 1, page 14, strike out the words "not more than two hundred." In lines 3, 4, 5, and 6, strike out the words "and for wages of not more than thirty-eight printers' assistants at steam presses at $1.50 a day each, when employed."

Mr. RANDALL. How will it read as amended?

The Clerk read the paragraph as proposed to be amended, as follows:

For wages of plate printers at piece wages to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rates usually paid for such work, including the wages of printers' assistants at $1.25 per day each, when employed, $398,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. RANDALL. That leaves out the printers' assistants, does it not? Those are the females employed there; I do not want them struck out.

Mr. FARQUHAR. No; it simply leaves out the number.

Mr. RYAN. That is all left in the discretion of the Department.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Yes; where it ought to be.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to know if the words "printers' assistants" remain in the bill, page 14, line 2?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been read twice.

Mr. LAWLER. Well, I am asking for information. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] raised the point that those words were struck out.

Mr. WILKINS. Let it be considered as an amendment to the amendment.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS].

Mr. RYAN. Let the amendment as amended be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment having been reported twice, that can only be done by unanimous consent.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 23, page 13, strike out the words "not more than two hundred and twelve;" and in line 1, page 14, strike out the words "not more than two hundred;" and in lines 3, 4, 5, and 6 strike out the words "and for wages of not more than thirty-eight printers' assistants at steam presses, at $1.50 a day each."

To which the following amendment is proposed:

"Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended in royalty for steam plate-printing machines other than for those now in use by this department."

Mr. RYAN. I want to call my friend's attention to the fact that his amendment does not provide at all for printers' assistants.

Mr. FARQUHAR. It does. It simply strikes out the number "two hundred."

Mr. RYAN. If I heard the amendment correctly, it strikes out "including the wages of more than two hundred printers' assistants." If that is struck out, there is no law authorizing the employment of printers' assistants. Now, I understand my friend's object to be to strike out only the limitation.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the paragraph as amended.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For wages of plate printers at piece rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rate usually paid for such work, including the wages of printers' assistants at $1.25 a day each when employed, and for royalty for use of steam plate-printing machines——

Mr. RANDALL. That leaves out the "thirty-eight."

Mr. FARQUHAR. Yes; that is left out.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want that left out.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Then I ask unanimous consent to insert it.

Mr. RANDALL. The employés must be described. The gentleman's amendment as he has it might throw out every female employé there, and I do not think he intends that.

Mr. FARQUHAR. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the gentleman from New York send up his amendment as he desires to modify it.

The amendment of Mr. FARQUHAR as modified was read, as follows:

In line 23, page 13, strike out "not more than two hundred and twelve."
In line 1, page 14, strike out "not more than two hundred."
In lines 3 and 4, same page, strike out "not more than thirty-eight."

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I am in hearty sympathy with the general principle of the amendment under consideration, believing, as I do, that its purpose is to provide that all the securities and stamps of the Government shall be printed in the highest style of art. I deem it proper, however, that I should correct an erroneous impression, which some of the remarks upon the amendment render it apparent must prevail.

The Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department have not been directed to investigate any question relating to or connected with the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and that committee have not assumed to make any such investigation. Something more than a month ago the bill (H. R. 9623) was introduced in the House, and was referred to that committee. The bill is in the words I will read:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act, all Government securities, bonds, notes, checks, stamps, and drafts shall be printed in the highest style of the art of plate printing from hand roller presses.

SEC. 2. That hereafter the Chief and the Assistant Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing shall be either practical engravers or plate printers.

The bill has been considered in the regular course of business and has had that investigation which it is customary to bestow upon bills by the committees to whom they are referred. At a meeting of the committee, held on the 26th of May, some gentlemen who are advocates of the bill appeared in person and by their attorney and submitted an interesting and instructive statement of the difference between and relative merits of steam and hand roller presses. The principal points presented for our consideration were:

1. The steam press wipes out the fine lines entirely, and injures the fuller lines proportionately, and this destroys the whole effect of the engraving.

2. It hardens the paper on the side opposite to that on which it prints, and such hardening prevents even and effective dampening of paper to receive the subsequent hand-press impression.

3. The steam-press impression is more available for counterfeiting by photographic methods than the hand-press impression, for the lights and shadows in it are lost sight of.

4. The wastage by imperfect sheets printed by the steam press is vastly greater than by the hand press, and this is a great, absolute loss, and in addition is an evidence of the low degree of excellence in even the steam-press work accepted.

5. The introduction of the steam press has led to the adoption of a lower standard for the work accepted. Mr. Sullivan (present assistant chief) directed acceptance of work done by steam press that a child on the street would not object to, and the former superintendent of the bureau, Mr. Burrill, reported to Secretary Folger the existence of a lower standard of excellence as to steam-press work as compared with hand-press work.

6. The steam press prints comparatively damp or dry sheets with the same degree of speed, and in this respect can not exercise the discrimination constantly observed by the hand-press printer.

7. It has not yet been demonstrated that steam-press work is cheaper than hand-press work. Mr. Graves's recent letter to Congress ignores the following sources of expense in connection with steam-press work:

a. The royalty paid for privilege of using a press—$500 for each press.

b. The amounts paid to master-machinist in charge of steam press (Mr. Harley) and amount paid for rebuilding a new press were neither included under head of repairs.

c. The greater wastage in steam press over hand press on account of imperfect sheets thrown out.

To this might be added a fourth most important point:

d. Mr. Graves in estimating comparative performance of two presses has placed it at $4\frac{3}{7}$ to 1. This ignores the fact that all the slow and difficult work is done by the hand press and relatively swift work by the steam press, instead of estimating the performance of the two in doing the same class of work. This error is believed to reduce the proportion from $4\frac{3}{7}$ to a possible 3 to 1, and reduce saving to nothing.

8. Mr. Graves's last report to Congress and letter in Book of Estimates shows that he estimates the capacity of the two kinds of presses as 5 to 1, and upon this basis anticipates saving of (about) $149,000 per year from use of three steam presses. His last letter diminishes this estimated capacity to $4\frac{3}{7}$, and decreases anticipated saving by about $30,000. The other ignored points would about extinguish the remainder of the $149,000.

I do not feel authorized to state the views of the committee, or of any single member of it, and even if it were proper to give publicity to opinions expressed in the committee-room, I can not say that I could accurately state their views. The matter is still under consideration, and no opinion has been expressed by any authorized method. But I can and will say for myself, as an individual, that the examination we have made, and the evidence presented to the committee, have impressed me with the belief that there is a great deal in this matter which merits our most careful consideration.

I think it is already established that machine printing from engraved plates or dies does not produce results which competent judges would accept as work in the highest style of art. All the evidence appears to agree upon that point. As corroborative of that view we have the significant fact that the faces of our currency are not printed on steam presses.

It will not be questioned that it is the duty of the Government to take all proper and possible means to protect its citizens and itself against the circulation of spurious currency, and to accomplish this object it should never issue any obligations or securities except those printed in a style of such perfection as will render the task of counterfeiting them extremely difficult, if not absolutely impossible. The Government should also lend its aid, so far as it can, to maintain the high and intelligent standard which has characterized the skilled plate printers of the United States.

The paragraph of the bill which has been read is in these words:

For wages of not more than two hundred and twelve plate printers, at piece-rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rates usually paid for such work, including the wages of not more than two hundred printers' assistants, at $1.25 a day each, when employed, and for wages of not more than thirty-eight printers' assistants at steam presses, at $1.50 a day each, when employed, and for royalty for use of steam plate-printing machines, $398,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

It is quite evident that if the bill be passed with this limitation as to the number of plate printers authorized to be employed, any inability of the bureau to meet the demands made upon it will be made up by increasing the number of steam presses. I am clearly of the opinion we should not force this alternative upon the bureau, when an investigation may make it evident that the proper performance of the work may require more skilled hand-work and less machinery.

I have before me a petition to Congress which is signed by the general executive board of the Knights of Labor, including the distinguished General Master Workman of the order, Mr. T. V. Powderly, based upon a resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the Knights of Labor, at Minneapolis, Minn., in October, 1887, which I will read:

Resolved by the General Assembly of the Knights of Labor, That we demand that all Government securities, notes, bonds, checks, and stamps shall be printed in the highest style of the art of plate printing, from hand-roller presses, so as to secure the Government and the public against loss by wear and by counterfeiting; and the General Assembly, or any persons or committee appointed to represent the order before Congress are hereby directed to do all that is practicable to give effect to this resolution.

I wish I could have the petition all read, but the portion I submit to the consideration of the House bears directly upon this subject, and is in these words:

It is needless to urge that if the genuine issue is allowed to deteriorate, become debased and unable to stand the usual wear, that the ability to successfully counterfeit those issues is correspondingly increased. A poorly printed bond, bank note or revenue stamp is an open advertisement to the counterfeiter to ply his vocation and cause loss and disaster to a too confiding public. It is, therefore, time that Congress should intervene in the interest of the public and cause a vigorous and impartial investigation.

The plate printers are a body of intelligent, skilled workmen. Their avocation requires a high average of ability. The exercise of care, skill, and judgment is necessary in order to produce good work.

Neither as a body nor as individuals are they opposed to progress. Should it be demonstrated that machinery can be invented which can supplant their handicraft and artistic skill, usurp and fill their places, they will be quick to admit the fact. But that time has not arrived. They claim that the most satisfactory, because the most "secure," work ever done has been and is done by them on the hand-roller presses. The handling, the heating, the putting on of the ink, the wiping of the plate, now heavy, now light, to bring out the effect intended by the engraver, the temperature of the hand as well as the texture of the skin, all requiring the constant exercise of forethought, judgment, and skill—human effort entirely—are attributes of and belonging solely to the printer, which a machine can not supply. Your petitioners are credibly informed and believe that the following facts can be shown, and that they afford sufficient cause for an earnest and impartial examination; and your petitioners believe that the result of an investigation will be to cause such remedial legislation as will in the future protect the Government and give greater security to the public:

First. That by printing the backs of the silver certificates on steam presses the note is inferior and discreditable to the Government.

Second. That the internal-revenue stamps printed on the steam printing presses are greatly inferior; are not as good as many trade labels, and are a disgrace to the Government.

Third. That economy and not security is the primary object of the present management.

Fourth. That at the suggestion of the present chief the law has been so framed as to prevent the employment of a sufficient number of plate printers to perform the work of the bureau in the manner contemplated when the transfer of the entire work to the bureau was made.

Fifth. That the same law which limits the number of plate printers to be employed has enabled the chief to increase the steam printing presses nearly threefold.

Sixth. That the steam printing presses are not furnished by the owners of the patents, but the right to construct them is purchased by the Government. A royalty is also paid on every impression made.

Seventh. That the steam printing presss are so easily put out of order that it requires the whole force of machinists to be employed in the effort to keep them in repair, to the neglect of other and more important work.

Eighth. That the Milligan press, the one most in use, has been condemned repeatedly.

At the request of the committee, Mr. Edward O. Graves, the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, submitted to the committee a letter, from which I will read:

As to the comparative merits of steam printing and hand printing, it may be said that, speaking in the widest sense, steam printing is not equal to hand printing; that is to say, the steam press has not shown its capacity to print the finest grades of work, such as the black faces of notes, bonds, and drafts. This is the conclusion of all the committees which have looked into the subject, and it is accepted by the management of this bureau.

Mr. WILKINS. The securities to which the gentleman has referred are not printed on steam presses.

Mr. WHEELER. Some parts are and some parts are not. As I understand it, the faces of the Government notes are printed by the hand-roller process, but the backs are printed by the steam plate presses.

Notwithstanding his acceptance of this conclusion, Mr. Graves appears to be of the opinion that the green backs of the Government currency and the backs of the gold and silver certificates may be as satisfactorily printed by the process known as machine-plate printing as they can be by hand printers. I think the general public will most likely contend that this work should be done by the Government in at least as high a degree of excellence as is required by private bank-note engraving and printing associations or companies. It is true that work less perfect may answer the purpose, but it is certainly a matter of doubtful expediency, and is worthy of careful inquiry. I will read Mr. Graves's language upon this point:

But there is nothing in this conclusion to contravene the demonstrated fact that the machine can and does print acceptably the green backs of notes and certificates, which are in the easiest grade of printing, and which, when done on the hand presses, are intrusted to apprentice boys and the least skillful workmen. If all of this work could be done by hand by the most skillful and conscientious workmen in the most careful manner and under the most favorable conditions, there is no doubt that the printing by that process would best carry out the intention of the engraver; but, taking into account the actual conditions under which work must be done in a large establishment like this, the various degrees of skill and intelligence among its workmen, and the purpose to which the work is to be applied, it is equally clear that the so-called machine plate printing now being done by this bureau is as satisfactorily done as if it were intrusted to hand printers.

The committee of which I am a member have accepted an invitation from Mr. Graves to visit the bureau and continue our examination of the subject.

With my present information, I am inclined to the opinion that all of this work should be done "by the most skillful and conscientious workmen in the most careful manner." Much has been said regarding the relative cost of hand and machine work; but, as the entire subject is of great interest, I will submit so much of the letter of Mr. Graves as bears upon the matter which is affected by the paragraph of the bill and the proposed amendment. It is in these words:

There are in use in this bureau for this purpose four general classes of presses: (1) ordinary surface-printing or typographic presses; (2) a steam-power plate-printing press of the Homer Lee pattern; (3) steam-power plate-printing presses of the Milligan pattern; and (4) ordinary hand-roller presses.

SURFACE-PRINTING PRESSES.

The surface-printing presses are used to print the tints on certain varieties of internal-revenue stamps and on many kinds of drafts, checks, and warrants, the green charter numbers on national-bank notes of the series of 1882, and the seals on all national-bank notes.

Similar presses are used in the office of the Treasurer of the United States to print the seals on United States notes and silver certificates. The tints and seals are printed from steel dies by the ordinary surface process, the effect being produced by the raised lines of the die instead of by the depressed lines of the plate as in plate-printing. The printing done by this process does not equal plate-printing in fineness and delicacy, but it is believed to answer its purpose sufficiently well so far as the seals and tints are concerned.

The chief purpose of the elaborate printing upon the public securities is to prevent counterfeiting, and there is nothing to show that the use of the surface-printing process in printing seals and tints has facilitated the counterfeiting of the securities upon which it has been used. The printing of seals and tints by the present method in this bureau and in the Treasurer's office requires the services of six pressmen, eleven feeders, and two counters; the annual cost is about $25,500. To print them by hand by the plate-printing process would require the services of ninety plate-printers, ninety printers' assistants, and fifteen other operatives, and the annual cost would be $248,700, an increase over the present cost of $222,200.

The ornamental charter numbers in green ink on the backs of the national-bank notes of the series of 1882, printed by this process, are, in my opinion, of a quality unfit to be used on the public securities. The backs of the national-bank notes of the series of 1875 are printed in two colors, and consist of a green border of lathe work and ornamental work, embracing denominational counters and the legend, and of an engraving of some appropriate subject from American history beautifully engraved and printed in black. The two colors afford a pleasing contrast, while the two printings and the quality of the work furnish excellent protection against counterfeiting.

In the backs of the series of 1882 the old borders have been retained, but the beautiful black vignettes have been dropped, and the space formerly occupied by them has been filled in with geometric lathe work of a cheap and open design. These backs are printed in brown ink, and over the lathe work covering the center of the plate the charter number of the bank is printed in green ink from brass dies on an ordinary power press. The combination of the two printings is ugly in the extreme. It does not furnish the best security against counterfeiting, and it is greatly inferior to the backs of the series of 1875, which it replaced. It would, in my opinion, be wise policy to restore the two plate printings of the old design.

In a letter addressed by me to the Comptroller of the Currency January 11, 1888 (Appendix K), I earnestly urged this change. To carry this suggestion into effect would require the services of 7 plate printers, 7 printers' assistants, and 2 other operatives, and would involve an additional cost of $12,000 per annum.

The inferiority of surface or relief printing to plate printing is due to the fact that when the impression is made by raised lines the lines must have an appreciable thickness, while in printing by the plate process, where the dampened paper is forced into the incised lines of the plate, the lines may be of extreme thinness and yet print clearly. In relief printing the line is only a colored surface of paper, while in plate-printing it is a cast from the depressed lines of the plate.

THE HOMER LEE PRESS.

Next in the scale of excellence is printing by presses which perform automatically, without the aid of a plate printer, all of the operations of plate printing, including the inking-in, the wiping and the polishing of the plate, and the taking of the impression. The Homer Lee press in operation in the bureau is of this class. This press has been used exclusively of late in printing the green internal-revenue stamps for tobacco of the denominations of 2 and 8 ounces. While the impressions produced by this press have not the fullness and richness of color of the best hand work, they are perfectly clear and sharp. In security against counterfeiting, which is the ultimate test of their excellence, they are fully equal to hand work. It is not at all material that the printing should conform to the arbitrary system of hand printing so long as the essential element of security is not sacrificed.

This press was highly commended in a report made April 30, 1883, by a committee appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury (Appendix F). The Secretary, on May 24, 1884, by an indorsement on this report, directed the chief of this bureau "to acquire the Lee press now in the bureau, as well as three presses of the cylindrical pattern recommended by the committee, other presses to be acquired as the needs of the Department shall dictate," but, for some unknown reason, the owner of the press failed to submit terms for the sale of any of his presses to the Government, and repeated attempts since made to renew negotiations with that object have failed. The press now in the bureau is the property of Mr. Homer Lee, and a royalty is paid to him of $1 for each 1,000 perfect impressions printed on it. To replace this press with hand presses would require five additional plate printers and five printers' assistants, and would increase the annual expenses of the bureau $5,124.

In the spring of 1885, the four years' contract then running being about to expire, a question arose in the Post-Office Department as to the process to be adopted for printing the postage-stamps for the next four years. The Postmaster-General, after a personal inspection of the Lee press in operation in this bureau, decided to have the stamps printed by the "all steam" process, i. e., by a press which, like the Lee press, performs automatically all of the operations of plate printing. By direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, this bureau submitted proposals for the work, but being unable to obtain additional presses of this kind, it was unsuccessful in the competition. The award was made to a private company, which prints the stamps on an automatic press of its own devising, not open to public use.

I am informed that the printing of the stamps is entirely satisfactory to the Post-Office Department. Certainly the appearance of the stamps themselves shows no impairment of the quality of printing. The bill under consideration requires the postage-stamps to be printed on hand-roller presses. On the basis of the bids of 1885 this would involve an additional annual cost of $22,784.73, chargeable to the postal revenues, out of which the expenses of printing the stamps are paid. The postal-notes are printed by the same company, and, it is understood, by the same process, under a contract made 1887.

THE MILLIGAN PRESSES.

Approaching most closely to hand printing is the printing done by the Milligan press. It is the recent introduction into this bureau of additional presses of this pattern that has led to the presentation of the bill under consideration.

One or more of these presses have been in operation in this bureau during the last ten years, and numerous reports concerning the press have been made to Congress or the Department, all of which pronounce in favor of its economy and efficiency for the lower grades of work, such as internal-revenue stamps and the backs of notes. The first of these reports was made to the Secretary of the Treasury June 9, 1877, by a committee of which Mr. George W. Casilear, then superintendent of the engraving division of this bureau, was chairman, and Mr. Ward Morgan, then and now superintendent of printing, a member (Appendix A). The press reported upon was the original press of this construction then in experimental operation. They reported that "there are certain classes of work which might be satisfactorily printed upon the press with more economy and more rapidity than by hand press." In consequence of this report the press was introduced into the bureau.

February 26, 1879, a committee, of which Hon. Hiram P. Bell, M. C., a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, was chairman, made an elaborate report to the Secretary on this and another steam press (Appendix B). They reported that, "in our judgment, several classes of printing might be done on that (the Milligan) press in a satisfactory manner and with considerable saving to the Government." They further reported that "it might be to the advantage of the Government to procure a limited number of presses to be used in printing such securities as, hereinbefore indicated, might be executed thereon," and that "the question of economy is settled beyond dispute, by the statistics furnished by the chief of the bureau, in favor of the steam presses." The committee, in its report, divided the various classes of securities produced by the bureau into three grades, and placed the backs of notes in the third or lowest grade. In pursuance of the recommendation made in this report, five additional Milligan presses were built and set in operation in the bureau.

May 8, 1882, Mr. O. H. Irish, the chief of the bureau, made a report to the Secretary of the Treasury concerning steam presses (Appendix C), in which he said:

"The work executed upon these (the Milligan) presses is that recognized in the business as of second quality, mainly composed of lettering, lathe, and scroll work, such as backs of notes, certificates, and such stamps as the 2, 4, and 8-ounce tobacco stamps. The excellence of the impressions of this class of work executed on steam presses is equal to impressions of the same class of work executed upon hand presses."

In July, 1882, a committee composed of seven experienced officers of the Government, two of whom were from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, was appointed by the Secretary to consider the relative merits of the Homer Lee and the Milligan steam plate-printing presses. The committee reported (Appendix F), among other conclusions, that "the Milligan press has demonstrated in its work in the bureau that it can print certain securities with an acceptable degree of excellence;" and "that the press has executed the impressions done by it at a considerable saving over the hand presses. * * * The committee must, therefore, conclude in favor of the adaptability of this press for certain classes of securities." This committee also rated the backs of notes as work of the third or lowest grade. A minority of the committee, consisting of the two members from the bureau, though non-concurring in the findings of the majority relative to the Homer Lee press, concurred in all the other statements and recommendations of the majority, including, of course, those concerning the Milligan press. (Appendix G.)

The conclusions of the majority of this committee in favor of the Lee press did not commend themselves to the Chief of the Bureau (Mr. Burrill) and he accordingly presented to the Department a protest (Appendix H) against the further introduction of presses of this pattern, whose work did not, in his opinion, compare favorably with that of the Milligan presses. In this protest he said:

"The Milligan press is * * * a hand printing press so far as the application of intelligence to the polishing process is concerned, and its condition of work (sic) and the standard of the passage of it in its examination are the same as for the hand presses."

Immediately after I took charge of the bureau, in May, 1885, the question of the introduction of additional presses of this pattern was referred to me by the Secretary of the Treasury for report. There were then in operation in the bureau six Milligan presses, which were engaged exclusively in printing 2 and 4 ounce tobacco stamps. The records showed, however, that they had printed acceptably large quantities of the greenbacks of United States notes at a considerable saving of expense. As, however, there was still a greater saving in printing tobacco stamps on them, the stamps were substituted for the backs of notes when the quantity became sufficient to keep the presses fully occupied.

The unanimous reports in favor of the Milligan presses by all of the committees which had examined them, the favorable judgment that had been expressed concerning them by my two immediate predecessors as chief of the bureau, the fact that only a small share of the securities—which experience had amply demonstrated they could print acceptably and economically—was being printed on them, and the further fact that no additional presses of the Lee pattern could be obtained, all constrained me to report to the Department, after full and careful consideration of the subject, that it would be wise policy to acquire more presses of this pattern. I therefore recommended (Appendix I) the purchase of six more Milligan presses. The recommendation was approved by the Department and the presses were procured and set in operation in the bureau between November, 1886, and January, 1887.

The printing of the backs of the one-dollar certificates, which had been begun upon the old presses of this pattern, was transferred to the new presses immediately after their introduction. Shortly afterwards the printing of the two-dollar backs was also transferred to them, and more recently the backs of the five-dollar and ten-dollar certificates have, to a greater or less extent, been printed on them. All of the one-dollar backs printed since January 21, 1887, and all of the two-dollar backs printed since April 29, 1887, have been printed on these presses. At present they are printing the backs of all the one-dollar and two-dollar certificates produced by the bureau.

For evidence of the quality of this work it is only necessary to refer to the backs of the certificates of these denominations, which are now being issued at the rate of 148,000 certificates a day. In clearness, sharpness, and uniformity of impression, and all the qualities which tend to prevent successful counterfeiting they are up to the highest standard. They may lack something of the fullness of color of the very best hand-printing, but this lack is only to be detected by a close comparison of backs printed by the two methods, and is more than compensated for by the superior clearness of the steam-printed impressions.

Soon after the beginning of the current fiscal year it was found that, in consequence of the operation of the provision granting fifteen days' leave of absence to all of the employés of this bureau, and of the unprecedented demand for tobacco, cigar, and cigarette stamps, the bureau could not meeet the demands upon it with the facilities it then possessed. As the force of plate-printers was limited by law, under the wise policy of specific appropriations pursued by Congress, the only possible relief was through the introduction of more labor-saving printing-machines (Appendix J). Accordingly, by authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, six additional Milligan machines were bought and set in operation, increasing the number of these machines owned by the Government to eighteen.

The new presses were at first applied to the printing of 50-cigar stamps, and afterwards of 2 and 4-ounce tobacco stamps and the backs of silver certificates. The 50-cigar stamps are printed in black ink, which is more difficult to work than the green ink used on the other securities printed by the steam presses, and therefore they do not come quite up to the same standard of excellence as the other securities printed by this process. They do, however, compare favorably with much of the printing of the same class done on hand presses. Their quality has steadily improved since the first attempt to print them by steam, and there is no doubt that with added experience it will still further improve. These stamps are pasted on boxes of cigars to indicate the payment of the internal-revenue tax, and, from the way in which they are issued and used, are not exposed to the same risk of being counterfeited as notes or bonds.

All of the Milligan presses recently introduced have been procured on the same terms as those previously in use; the Government pays the cost of construction, a royalty of $500 for the privilege of constructing each press, and a royalty of $1 for each 1,000 perfect sheets of securities printed thereon. There is an average net saving to the Government of more than $4 for each dollar of royalty paid. The cost, exclusive of royalty, of the six presses bought in 1886 was $5,500, and of the six bought in 1887, which were of stronger construction, $7,500.

As to the comparative merits of steam printing and hand printing, it may be said that, speaking in the widest sense, steam printing is not equal to hand printing; that is to say, the steam press has not shown its capacity to print the finest grades of work, such as the black faces of notes, bonds, and drafts. This is the conclusion of all the committees which have looked into the subject, and it is accepted by the management of this bureau. But there is nothing in this conclusion to contravene the demonstrated fact that the machine can and does print acceptably the green backs of notes and certificates, which are in the easiest grade of printing, and which, when done on the hand presses, are intrusted to apprentice boys and the least skillful workmen.

If all of this work could be done by hand by the most skillful and conscientious workmen in the most careful manner and under the most favorable conditions, there is no doubt that the printing by that process would best carry out the intention of the engraver; but, taking into account the actual conditions under which work must be done in a large establishment like this, the various degrees of skill and intelligence among its workmen, and the purpose to which the work is to be applied, it is equally clear that the so-called machine plate printing now being done by this bureau is as satisfactorily done as if it were intrusted to hand printers.

Although this press is spoken of as a "steam" press it retains all the advantages of the hand printing process. Only the purely mechanical parts of the work which require power without special intelligence or skill are done by machinery. The ink, plates, and materials are the same as those used on the presses operated by hand.

Plate printing is separable into four distinct operations: (1) The inking in of the plate by rolling to and fro over it an inking roller charged with ink from an inked slab; (2) the wiping of the plate by rubbing it with a thin muslin cloth; (3) the polishing of the plate by rubbing the hand over a cake of whiting and then over the plate until the ink is entirely removed from the smooth surface of the plate and left only in the depressed lines, and (4) the taking of the impression by laying the inked plate face upward on the plank of the press, placing the dampened paper on it, and forcing the plank and plate under an iron roller covered with several layers of thick felting and adjusted at such a height as to force the paper down into the inked lines.

It is evident that all of these operations, except the third, are purely mechanical, and it might be expected that they would be better and more uniformly performed by a well-devised and properly adjusted machine than by hand, especially as the manner and thoroughness with which they are done by hand are left to the judgment of a large number of operatives. The precison and uniformity with which these operations are performed on the steam press show that this expectation is well-founded. The polishing of the plate on the Milligan press is done by hand precisely as on the hand press, with the advantage that the printer works continuously at this process without constantly changing, as on the hand press, from one operation to another. The consequence is that the backs of the certificates printed on the steam presses are, as a rule, more thoroughly polished than those printed on the hand presses.

Four plates are worked at one time on each steam press, being carried around the square frame of the press by an endless chain in such a way that all the plates are subjected to one or the other of the four operations at one time. There is a very short interval between any two consecutive operations, so that there is avoided the loss of time which takes place on the hand presses in moving the plate from the press to the stove on which it is heated and inked, and back again, and in the printer himself passing from one side of the press to the other as each impression is taken. It results from this saving of time that, although each plate on the steam press on an average prints slightly more impressions in a given time than a plate on a hand press, the time devoted to each operation for each impression, as shown by actual timing, is somewhat greater on the steam press than on the hand press. Nor is there any evidence that the steam press impairs the paper and so makes the securities printed on it less durable.

While there is no exact way of determining the degree of pressure applied to the paper by the impression roller on either the hand or the steam presses, there is no reason to believe that it is greater on one press than on the other. In both cases the pressure is regulated by the printer, and enough is applied to make the printing full and clear without blurring or "mashing." If too much pressure is applied in either case the ink will be forced out of the lines of the plate, and a confused or "mashed" impression produced.

Careful measurement of the sheets immediately before and after printing on the steam press shows that the paper is not stretched in the least by the operation, and repeated tests by the paper-testing machine of impressions printed by hand and by steam show that the tensile strength of the two does not vary. This machine is devised expressly for testing the strength of paper, and indicates instantly and accurately the tension under which it breaks. The flimsy cotton paper used for the revenue stamps is printed under the same pressure on the steam presses without injury or perceptible lessening of strength.

Competent engineers have computed that but one horse-power is required to operate a steam press. Much of this power is consumed in running the bare machinery of the press, and the remainder is divided among the three operations of inking-in, wiping, and making the impression. Four layers of felting, with an aggregate thickness of at least one-fourth of an inch, interpose between the roller and the paper, and any pressure applied to the paper must be exerted through these. The plates pass easily and smoothly under the roller without any perceptible jar. Before a pressure could be applied which would injure the paper, it is probable that the chain which carries the plates would break, or the driving-belt slip or fly off.

The final test, however, of the durability of any issue of securities must be the rapidity with which they return for redemption. The statistics on this point make a most favorable showing for the new silver certificates. The issue of one-dollar notes of the series of 1874 began August, 1874. By June 30, 1875, the end of the fiscal year, there had been issued $13,797,435. (Finance Report, 1875, page 483.) At the same time there had been presented for redemption $1,559,967 (ibid., 488), or 11.3 per cent. of the actual issue. The issue of one-dollar notes of the series of 1875 began in September, 1875, and by the end of the fiscal year the amount issued was $8,214,193. (Finance Report, 1876, page 509.) The redemption at this time had reached $463,842 (ibid., page 514), or 5⅔ per cent. of the amount issued. The issue of one-dollar silver certificates began in September, 1886. By June 30, 1887, there had been issued $14,156,000, while the redemption amounted to but $176,503, or 1¼ per cent. (Finance Report, 1887, page 18.) A tabulated statement will make this comparison even more striking:

Issue.	Issued in first fiscal year.	Redeemed in first fiscal year.	Percentage of redemptions to issue.
One-dollar notes of 1874	$13,797,435	$1,509,969	11.30
One-dollar certificates of 1886	14,156,000	176,503	1.25

To March 31, 1888, there had been issued $23,016,000 in one-dollar certificates, and $14,264,000 in two-dollar certificates. To that date there had been redeemed only $871,509 in one-dollar certificates, and $428,110 in two-dollar certificates. The redemptions in eighteen months of an issue of more than 23,000,000 one-dollar certificates were but little more than one-half the redemptions in ten months of an issue of less than 14,000,000 one-dollar notes of the series of 1874.

The records of the Treasury Department may be searched in vain for any other issue of currency which has withstood the wear and tear of circulation so well as these certificates. The issue of small notes had been suspended for more than a year prior to the issue of the small certificates, so that the certificates circulated very actively and were subjected to much more than ordinary wear. On the other hand, the great need of the certificates for current use by the public and the impossibility of supplying at once the deficit in the small circulation have doubtless kept in circulation many certificates which, under ordinary conditions, would have been presented for redemption.

When the issue of one-dollar United States notes was maintained at about $25,000,000, the average annual redemptions were from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000 (Finance Report, 1887, page 53), showing that the average life of a note of this denomination is less than three years. There are now outstanding more than 23,000,000 one-dollar certificates. They constitute a mass of paper weighing 230,000 pounds, and measuring, if piled together, sixty cords, exposed to all the vicissitudes of circulation among 60,000,000 of people. It would be surprising if in this vast mass of paper certificates should not be found in every stage of dilapidation.

The steam printing presses are now printing considerably more than one-third of the work of the bureau. To replace them with hand presses would require at least seventy-three additional printers and thirty-three additional printers' assistants, and would add $95,465 to the annual cost of maintaining the bureau. It would be entirely impossible to provide accommodations for the additional force of operatives in the building occupied by this bureau. If to this be added the operatives required under the proposed measure to do by the plate process that part of the printing of securities now done by the relief process, the additional force would be swelled to one hundred and seventy printers, one hundred and thirty printers' assistants, and seventeen other operatives, making a net increase of two hundred and ninety-five in the number of employés, and increasing the annual expense $329,665. Adding the increased expense of printing the postage stamps by hand, the annual expense resulting from the passage of the bill would be $352,449.73.

This calculation is on the basis of the work now being produced by the bureau. Under the estimates for the next fiscal year the additional force required would comprise 427 persons, and the additional cost, including the postage-stamps, would be $436,921.74.

It would be utterly impossible to do by the hand-roller process within this building all the work required for the production of the quantity of securities now being turned out by the bureau, to say nothing of any prospective increase of production. Many parts of the building are now overcrowded, and some of the employés are compelled to work in rooms not suitable for the purpose.

The first step necessary to carry out a requirement that all the printing should be done by hand would be the purchase of additional ground, and the next the erection of a large addition to the building now occupied by the bureau.

In view of all these considerations I am constrained to report against the propriety and necessity of the proposed provision that all Government securities shall be printed on hand-roller presses.

* * * * * * *

Respectfully, yours,

E. O. GRAVES, Chief of Bureau.

The committee also received a communication from Mr. Ralston, in behalf of the Knights of Labor, commenting upon and replying to the letter of Mr. Graves, and in order to give the House their views of the matter, I also submit so much of Mr. Ralston's letter as refers to the question now under consideration. It is in these words:

SIR: I beg leave to submit the following reply to report sent by Mr. E. O. Graves to the Senate Committee on Finance on May 9, 1888, which report has recently, I understand, been laid before your committee.

Mr. Graves's report as to the expediency of discontinuing steam-press work for plate printing is designed to cover the two questions as to relative excellence of work and economy as compared with hand printing. Upon the question of excellence of work permit me to call your attention to the following features of Mr. Graves's communication. About page 13 Mr. Graves says:

"As to the comparative merits of steam printing and hand printing it may be said that, speaking in the widest sense, steam printing is not equal to hand printing."

He then attempts to qualify this statement by applying it only to the black faces of notes, bonds, and drafts, and intimating that the same rule does not hold good in what he is pleased to regard as a lower grade of work, such as backs, etc. That this supposed qualification is in itself baseless he shows on the following page, when, in referring to the matter, he says:

"If all this work [green backs] could be done by hand by the most skillful and conscientious workmen, in the most careful manner, and under the most favorable conditions, there is no doubt that the printing by that process would best carry out the intention of the engraver," etc.

I submit that if Mr. Graves does not now have in his employment "the most skillful and conscientious workmen," who will do their work "in the most careful manner," or if he does not supply them with "the most favorable conditions," he owes a prompt and satisfactory explanation to Congress, and should not be allowed, without being held to the fullest accountability, to plead such wants in such a controversy as this. Should a private firm obtain a reputation for the finest work, and afterwards, upon producing inferior work, strive to explain its deficiencies by suggesting "the actual conditions under which work must be done in a large establishment" (page 14), a reduction of business would soon attest the insufficiency of the excuse.

But the report under consideration shows that, however much Mr. Graves's conclusions may be affected by his love for the steam press, in his own heart he recognizes the correctness of the position taken by the Knights of Labor. About page 4, after referring to the present degradation of the work performed in his bureau upon the national-bank notes, contrasting the former beautiful plate printing of the Landing of Columbus, in black, surrounded by a green border of handsome and intricate design, with the present common brown print, with surface printing of a number in the center, he says of the latter:

"It does not furnish the best security against counterfeiting, and is greatly inferior to the backs of the series of 1875, which it replaced. It would in my opinion be wise policy to restore the two plate printings of the old design."

We are content to accept Mr. Graves's statement upon this point, and to apply the same reasoning to the faces of the silver certificates, etc., which now receive a single plate-printing, together with a surface printing of the seal. We believe it is true of these notes, as well as of the backs of the national-bank notes, that the present method of production "does not furnish the best security against counterfeiting." Mr. Graves shrinks from the conclusion of page 2 (?) of this report (possibly on account of supposed added expense), yet logically he must come to it.

On page 2 of the report Mr. Graves very truly says that "the chief purpose of the elaborate printing upon the public securities is to prevent counterfeiting," and on page 3, referring to the former backs of the national-bank notes, he says, "the two printings (plate printings) and the quality of the work furnished excellent protection against counterfeiting." He also explains why it is that plate printing is superior to surface printing.

Yet in spite of these opinions, so frankly expressed, the fact is, that instead of the three plate printings which make the face of the earlier United States currency a thing of beauty and a defiance to the arts of the counterfeiter, we now have a single plate printing with one surface printing, while the national-bank note backs have fallen from two beautiful plate printings of intricate designs to one plate printing and one surface printing, and the backs of the silver certificates now receive a single green plate printing, executed not in such manner that the "quality of the work furnishes excellent protection against counterfeiting," but after such fashion that the champion of the steam presses confesses, on page 11, they "lack something of the fullness of color of the very best hand printing."

I need scarcely remind your committee that, as I have heretofore explained, the want of "fullness of color" indicates that the finest lines have been utterly wiped out and extinguished, and the remaining ones have not received their full effect, and the whole has been rendered therefore more easy of reproduction, as having less decidedly the protective characteristics of plate-printing.

Before leaving the subject of comparative excellence of work, it may be worth while to refer to Mr. Graves's remarks on page 12 as to the 50-cigar stamps. He admits that they "do not come up to quite the same standard of excellence as the other securities printed by this press." The same fact has also been admitted, as we are prepared to show, by Mr. Morgan, chief of the press-room. But Mr. Graves is not deterred from the use of the steam press on these stamps for this reason, as he immediately finds that "from the way in which they are issued and used (they) are not exposed to the same risk of being counterfeited as notes or bonds."

Here is another plain intimation that superiority of workmanship is a protection, coupled with a more than doubtful statement of fact as to liability to counterfeiting. The records of the secret service show that numbers of counterfeit plates of revenue stamps are yearly taken and destroyed.

HOMER LEE PRESS.

In speaking of this press (page 4) the idea is conveyed that no plate printer is needed for it. This is erroneous. A plate printer is employed at $5 per day.

Mr. Graves confesses the inferiority of the work done by this press, for he says "the impressions produced * * * have not the fullness and richness of color of the best hand work." I have already commented upon the meaning of an expression similar to this. Again Mr. Graves inferentially admits that the production of this press is not tested by the same rigid rule as is applied to hand work, for he says (page 5):

"It is not at all material that the printing should conform to the arbitrary standard of hand printing, so long as the essential element of security is not sacrificed."

Here is a distinct recognition of a different standard for the work of this press from that used for hand work, and I have already alluded to the existence of such different standard as to the Homer Lee press, as shown by the report of ex-Chief Burrill:

To quote Mr. Burrill's exact words:

"That this substitution [machine for hand polishing, etc.] has not accomplished successful results is demonstrated by the fact that the quality of work done upon it [the Lee press] in this bureau has not reached a standard sufficiently high to be measured by that which governs all other work."

And he continues with much more to like effect.

THE MILLIGAN PRESS.

I need scarcely refer to the half-hearted commendations of this press quoted by Mr. Graves. I am not surprised to learn, knowing the conditions surrounding the test, that a Treasury committee reported that "certain classes of work might be satisfactorily printed on the press with more economy and more rapidity than by hand press," or that another committee found that several classes of printing "might be done on that press in a satisfactory manner and with considerable saving to the Government," or that non-practical chiefs, such as Mr. Irish and Mr. Graves, should be imposed upon in this matter. We have but to bear in mind the fact that in the competitions between the two presses special instructions have been quietly issued to the printers employed on the steam press to use methods not employed in the ordinary course of steam printing and calculated to produce exceptionally favorable results for that press.

Mr. Burrill is quoted as reporting to the Department that "the Milligan press is * * * a hand printing press, so far as the application of intelligence to the polishing process is concerned, and its condition of work is and the standard of the passage of it and its examination are the same as for the hand presses."

While I do not wish to question the sincerity of Mr. Burrill in his belief as to the standard for examination of the work of this press, we are prepared to show again, as we have shown before, that the then and now assistant chief of the bureau directed acceptance of work done by steam press that a child on the street would not object to.

COMPARATIVE ECONOMY.

It is a difficult thing to learn from the reports of the bureau anything at all satisfactory concerning the relative cost of steam and hand printing. Mr. Graves says, on page 13 of this report, that "there is an average net saving to the Government of more than $4 for each dollar of royalty paid." Let us see about this. Mr. Graves is much more modest than formerly. In making up the figures upon which he based a recent answer to a House resolution (see Executive Document No. 210, Fiftieth Congress, first session) he estimated the cost per thousand impressions on the steam press at $6.28; on the hand press, $15.51; leaving a net gain by the use of the steam press of $9.23, instead of $4, for each dollar of royalty paid. Mr. Graves's figures somewhere lack the prime element of accuracy.

But there is reason to believe that his statement this time is, as before, wide of the mark. In Ex. Doc. 224, Forty-seventh Congress, first session, we find that a committee, giving the matter more careful attention than Mr. Graves ever seems to have bestowed upon it, reported that the cost of printing 1,000 impressions by hand, in green ink, was $11.26; 1,000 impressions by steam-press, $8.61, exclusive of royalty. This would give a saving of $2.65 for each dollar of royalty paid, or, including royalty, make steam press work, with all its imperfections, only .15— per cent. cheaper than hand work.

I have heretofore alluded to the many errors involved in Mr. Graves's estimate submitted to Congress. Let me now add that they vitiate every figure contained in the report we are now considering.

Examining the figures he has presented seriatim, we find that he estimates that printing tints and seals, now done by surface printing for $25,500, would cost by plate printing nearly ten times as much, or $248,700. Let us charitably suppose that in presenting such a statement as this Mr. Graves was simply outrageously imposed upon. Besides a manifest exaggeration in his figures, Mr. Graves in compiling them has ignored the fact that after the passage of the bill before your committee a very large proportion of the work now done upon the surface printing presses of the bureau would still remain to be executed in the same manner.

To replace the Homer Lee press by hand presses he estimates would call for the employment of five additional plate printers and five assistants and would increase the annual expense by $5,124. Inasmuch as Mr. Graves's highest estimate has been that one press did the work of five printers, and as one printer with an assistant is already employed to take charge of this press, under no circumstances could more than four additional men and four assistants be called for. But Mr. Graves's estimate of additional cost is also further erroneous for the same reasons that his estimates of comparative expense of the two presses is erroneous.

Mr. Graves further states that to replace the steam presses in the bureau would require the employment of at least seventy-three additional printers and thirty-eight additional printers' assistants, and add $95,465 to the annual cost of maintaining the bureau.

Inasmuch as there are nineteen steam presses with their pressmen now at work in the bureau, he estimates these presses as performing as much work as nineteen and seventy-three men would do. In other words, that they are equivalent to ninety-two men, and therefore work in about the proportion of five to one. In his recent report to Congress (Executive Document No. 210, Fiftieth Congress, first session) he estimated the production of one press as equal to four and three-sevenths men on hand presses, and as I have before shown your committee, to arrive at this result he ignored most important elements. We see, therefore, that no reliance can be placed upon his estimate just referred to.

Certain minor points of the communication we are considering need but a passing glance. At the beginning of Mr. Graves's administration 235 plate printers found employment in the bureau. Now it contains but 187. If we are told that this reduction is in consequence of the Congressional enactment restricting the number to 187, we have to say that this restriction was made at Mr. Graves's request. Our special reason for referring to the reduced number is to answer, as far as the fact goes, the allegation that the bureau is not large enough to contain the printers necessary to do its work by hand.

The Government already owns sufficient ground about the present bureau on which to place without inconvenience another building of the same size were the necessity for it to exist. But there should be no question of economy when the safety of the Government issues is the matter under consideration. Upon this point we can not do better than quote from the report of the Committee on Banking and Currency (H. R. No. 150, second session Forty-third Congress):

"All these circumstances have satisfied the committee that methods of printing, numbering, sealing, and issuing of the securities of the United States ought to be adopted which will approach the nearest to being absolutely secure against error and fraud, even if such methods should be much more expensive than others having less guaranties of protection."

And again (page 20) with regard to internal-revenue stamps:

"While the individual citizen may have comparatively little interest in the stamps, the public revenues are heavily involved. These suffer, and the honest tax-payers are defrauded if counterfeit stamps are altered or there is an unauthorized and dishonest issue of genuine stamps. To prevent counterfeiting the highest attainable artistic and mechanical skill in the execution, together with the use of distinctive paper, is believed to be the most effectual means."

The views of the committee which signed the foregoing opinions were adopted by Congress, and the legislation at that time recommended by them was enacted into law.

It may be that, as contended by Mr. Graves, a smaller per cent. of silver certificates (printed on both steam and hand presses) have returned for redemption within a given time than was formerly the case with the United States legal tenders. The explanation is twofold. First, the silver certificates were issued at a time when there was a great dearth of notes of the lower denominations. They met an immediate and pressing want for change, and were therefore not readily presented for redemption. Second, the silver certificates are printed upon paper of a much tougher fiber than that used for the legal tenders, and they may therefore be expected to continue in circulation a longer time.

Neither of these reasons at all affects the question of hand and steam printing. Our contention is simply that the printing of the back by steam calenders the face and renders it less suitable to receive the subsequent face impression, and that thereby the face impression is deteriorated. Upon this point I again refer to my former communication to you.

The condition of the postage-stamps printed on a steam press may be satisfactory to the Post-Office Department. It can hardly be to any one who cares for excellence in governmental work. We are prepared to exhibit to your committee sheets of stamps purchased without selection, and displaying the most striking variations in color and shading in the different parts of the sheet, in one stamp the fine lines being wiped completely out, and in its near neighbor the lines having been left so full of ink as to produce a "mashed" impression.

Every effort has been made by the committee to progress with their inquiry into this important subject as rapidly as possible. Though not specially authorized or ordered by the House, the examination is of that character which it is the duty of every committee to enter upon in considering the bills referred to it.

I therefore say that I am in hearty sympathy with the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR], for without the adoption of such an amendment it might be impossible to carry out proper measures to enforce the law, as I think the majority of this House and of the people at large believe it ought to be enforced in regard to the printing of the securities of the greatest Government on the face of the earth.

Mr. RANDALL. I have some apprehension as to the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] in so far as it proposes to strike out the restrictions as to the number of persons to be employed. If that limitation be struck out, I apprehend that, perhaps not the present superintendent, but some future superintendent might assume that he had the authority to employ any number of plate printers that he deemed proper, and thus under pressure, whether political or otherwise, he might exhaust the annual appropriation in less than the year, thus creating a deficiency. It has always been found safe to make these limitations. The printing in that bureau has never been behind, so far as I know; and if the gentleman from New York, upon reflection, will leave in the bill the limitation as to the number of employés, and content himself with the proviso of the gentleman from Ohio, I think that may be a very desirable way of disposing of this subject.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I desire merely to say that if this limitation is not removed from the bill, all that the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing will have to do is to go to the Secretary of the Treasury and say: "The number of plate printers provided in this bill is insufficient to do the work; and, consequently, I desire that steam presses shall be put in, by means of which I can get out the work with ease for the money provided."

Mr. RANDALL. But here comes the proviso, which will prevent that.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Even that proviso will not prevent it.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, yes, it will.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Why?

Mr. RANDALL. Undoubtedly it will. I think, upon reflection, the gentleman had better agree to be content with the provision in the form I have suggested. The appropriation is an increase of $14,000 over that of last year, and the number of employés is increased from one hundred and eighty-seven to two hundred and twelve in one case, from one hundred and eighty-eight to two hundred in another case, and from twenty-six to thirty-eight in another.

Mr. PETERS. If the statement of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] be correct, it would be cheaper to dispense with these steam presses altogether.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the proviso come in, which he can put in as strong language as he knows how to use. I do not think the object of the committee was to give the head of that bureau unlimited authority. Let the amendment be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended in royalty for steam plate-printing machines other than for those now in use by this Department.

Mr. RANDALL. That covers it, I believe.

Mr. RYAN. It does not go far enough. It should prohibit the purchasing of any more of these steam plate-printing machines.

Mr. RANDALL. It does.

Mr. FARQUHAR. If that is the proviso it will do what is desired.

Mr. STAHLNECKER. I submit the following amendment.

Page 14, line 18, insert:

"Provided, There shall not be an increase of the number of steam plate-printing machines in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; and that hereafter not exceeding 75 cents royalty shall be paid for each 1,000 perfect impressions made upon steam plate-printing presses."

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is not right. Strike out the last half of the amendment.

Mr. STAHLNECKER. Very well; I will strike out the last half of it.

Mr. WILKINS. That is really the amendment I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS] that the gentleman from New York [Mr. STAHLNECKER] offers the amendment as a substitute for the entire pending amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I am free to say if I could in any way reach that royalty I would knock it out.

Mr. RYAN. None of us know how to reach it exactly.

Mr. STAHLNECKER. I think my proviso will reach it, that there shall not be any more increase of the number of steam plate-printing machines in the Engraving and Printing Bureau.

Mr. RYAN. That provision makes it impossible to employ any more steam-presses if it is passed.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Put it on, then.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is this agreed to by the Committee on Printing?

Mr. WILKINS. The Committee on Printing has nothing to do with it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. This is the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the Secretary of the Treasury will take care to see whether we can not get rid of this royalty.

Mr. WHEELER. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of saying in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. STAHLNECKER] certainly has my full approval, and I feel authorized to say that it is thoroughly in accord with the views of the majority of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department. About half of the committee or more are in the Hall, and the amendment certainly has their approval. And this is the only committee, so far as I know, which has anything before it in relation to the matter.

Mr. WHEELER withdrew his formal amendment.

Mr. STAHLNECKER's amendment as modified was agreed to.

The question recurred on the following amendment of Mr. MCADOO:

Amend by striking out these words in lines 5 and 6, page 14, "and for royalty for use of steam plate-printing machines."

Mr. RYAN. The effect of that will be to prevent the use of presses now owned by the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. We have not the power to do that, the law and contract prevent. We have gone as far as we could, to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to make inquiry to see whether that royalty could not be got rid of.

Mr. MCADOO's amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. On page 14 I move to strike out in line 2 "$1.25" as the wages provided for printers' assistants, and in lines 4 and 5 "$1.50 a day" for wages of printers' assistants at steam presses, and in lieu thereof to insert "$2" a day.

In supporting this amendment I hope no member of this House will hesitate. The question of labor is one of the most important before the country at this time, and the Government should set the example in dealing with its own employés. They should provide for them what will be sufficient to give them a fair living for themselves and families. You can not get a dinner for less than $1.25. How much less then will $1.25 a day or $1.50 a day provide a living for a family—a wife and three or four children? It should be $2 a day at least.

The question was raised the other day in reference to the employés in the Botanic Garden, when it was provided in the appropriation bill their pay should be a dollar and a quarter a day. It was alleged in this connection by some members present that it was the duty of the Government to employ as cheaply as it could. On that point I beg to differ with those gentlemen. The employés in this department are not mere merchandise, as was then pretended was the case. They are flesh and blood, and are entitled to the protection of the Government. I trust this House will not permit anything to be inserted in the legislation of this House providing for employés working for less than $2 a day. They can not support their families for less than that amount. The pages on this floor get more than $2 a day, and it is not too much. It is certainly necessary that the Government employés of the skill necessary to do the work provided for in the pending paragraph should receive at least $2 a day.

Mr. WHITE's amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lighting of rivers: For establishing, supplying, and maintaining post-lights on the Hudson and East Rivers, New York; the Delaware River, between Philadelphia and Bordentown, N. J.; the Elk River, Maryland; Cape Fear River, North Carolina; Savannah River, Georgia; St. John's River, Florida; at the mouth of Red River, Louisiana; on the Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, Tennessee, Illinois, and Great Kanawha Rivers; on the Columbia and Willamette Rivers, Oregon; Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers, California; and on Puget Sound, Washington Territory; the Light-House Board being hereby authorized to lease the necessary ground for all such lights and beacons as are for temporary use or are used to point out changeable channels, and which in consequence can not be made permanent, $235,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Since this bill came from the committee there has been received from the Light-House Board a recommendation in connection with the Connecticut River, and I will ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD,
Washington, June 15, 1888.

SIR: The following is a copy of a telegram sent you to-day:

"The board recommends in letter to Department that there be appropriated for establishing the necessary lights and other aids to navigation on the Connecticut River, from its mouth to the head of sloop navigation at Hartford, Conn., the sum of $15,000."

Respectfully, yours,

JAMES F. GREGORY,
Major of Engineers, United States Army, Engineer Secretary.

Mr. J. C. COURTS,
Clerk Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move the following amendment: To insert, in line 17, after the words "New Jersey," the words "Connecticut River, Connecticut."

The amendment was adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

The message further announced the approval of bills of the following titles, namely:

An act (H. R. 8560) to establish a Department of Labor;

An act (H. R. 1844) to promote agriculture, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 1483) for the erection of a public building at Monroe, La.;

An act (H. R. 8279) to authorize the county of Laurens, in the State of Georgia, to construct a bridge across the Oconee River at or near Dublin, in said county and State;

An act (H. R. 7509) granting to the New York Harbor and Beach Railroad Company a right of way;

An act (H. R. 322) for the relief of B. M. Parish;

An act (H. R. 2151) for the relief of L. B. Burton;

An act (H. R. 2695) for the relief of Charles W. Mosler;

An act (H. R. 8965) to authorize the Postmaster-General to cancel mail contract numbered 30100, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 7052) relating to postal crimes, and amendatory of the statutes therein mentioned;

An act (H. R. 611) for the relief of Mrs. P. L. Ward, widow and executrix of William Ward, deceased;

An act (H. R. 7490) for the relief of Sidney W. Whitelaw;

An act (H. R. 6575) for the relief of James L. Alsip;

An act (H. R. 2167) for the relief of George E. Oliphant;

An act (H. R. 8266) for the relief of Mrs. Clarisa G. Green;

An act (H. R. 6520) granting an increase of pension to Charles P. Ward:

An act (H. R. 5844) to increase the pension of William Clark; and

An act (H. R. 3922) to place the name of Casper Seibel on the pension-roll.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNDER THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Public buildings:

Repairs of the Interior Department and Pension buildings: For repairs of buildings, $8,000.

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the twentieth line insert:

"For two elevators and additional water-closets in the Pension building, $18,000."

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that I have visited the Pension building and have been particularly interested in the way the employés are obliged to run up and down the stairs to get at the different file-rooms, and there is very much time lost in that way. I believe by putting in these two elevators the greatest convenience will be afforded to the employés, and the file-rooms can be placed upon the upper floor of the building, which is now almost useless, and much more room utilized in the Department by making that change. I think it is a measure of economy.

I also believe that the water-closets are most inadequate for the employés there.

Mr. RANDALL. What amount is fixed there?

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. Eighteen thousand dollars.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no occasion for the elevators at all. I do not know about the closets.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair). Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know whether it is subject to the point of order. There is no law authorizing it, of course. This building is finished. The floors are easy of access. Anybody who has walked up and down the stairs there knows there is no necessity for elevators.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this is subject to the point of order.

I want to say, sir, that in my judgment it is a matter of economy to put in one or two elevators in this building. The upper floor of that building is now practically unoccupied, and can be occupied only for file purposes; but if there were one or more elevators there these files could be readily accommodated on that upper floor, and would be of easy access, and additional rooms, as stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin, afforded in the rooms below.

I believe beyond that that it would be a matter of economy to the Government to put in the elevators, and that in the course of two or three years it would save the amount of the expenditure to the Government. I do not think that the amount that is asked for is necessary, however. I think that one elevator there, costing say $6,000, would be ample for the present, and that no more would be necessary than one. I do not believe that more than $12,000 would be necessary for two.

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. I have put in this amendment two elevators, because I have with my own personal knowledge of such matters, practical knowledge, included all the expenses of the employés, of steam, and everything. That is the reason I have made it of that amount.

But I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Kansas, for I know the necessity for at least one elevator there. I know the upper story, as my friend said, can be utilized for file-rooms if there can be any mode of access to them; and by the construction of this elevator it will enable us to have the files removed from the first floor and put them above. I believe it is economy to the Government to do so.

Mr. RANDALL. I feel with my colleague on the committee that if there is to be an elevator or two elevators there, they ought not to cost over $6,000 each. The committee must bear in mind that with an elevator must also be provided one or two conductors; and this proposition not only fastens on the Government an expense now, but a permanent expenditure hereafter. It is true these elevators were estimated for, but they were not strenuously pressed.

Mr. RYAN. I move to amend so as to provide for one elevator at a cost of $8,000.

Mr. RANDALL. You know $6,000 is enough. Our elevator here only cost $5,000.

Mr. RYAN. Very well, make it $6,000.

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. RYAN. My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH] modifies his amendment so as to embrace mine. In other words, he accepts my amendment providing for one elevator at a cost of $6,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I think expenditures of this kind are the least burdensome of any that are made. I hope the amendment will be agreed to. When I first came to Congress there was no elevator at this end of the Capitol. We first put in one in one corridor, and recently have added another in the other corridor. Gentlemen have found these elevators very convenient and useful. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that the amendment includes other matter besides the elevator.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the amendment be read as it now stands.

The Clerk reported the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent that this amendment be inserted after line 16, on page 45, which is its proper place.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Capitol: For work at Capitol, and for general repairs thereof, including wages of mechanics, workmen, and fresco-painter, $35,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Insert after line 23:

"And for an improved plan of ventilation for the Hall of the House of Representatives, to be selected upon public competition under the direction of the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, $1,000 in all."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I offer that amendment for a reason that I think will be appreciated by every one who is compelled to spend a portion of each of these days in this Hall. It is time we had some system of ventilation that ventilated. We have machinery already; but it does not seem to perform the required work. My amendment is simply to give the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics the right to select, after public competition, the plan which they think is best adapted to the purpose. It is all left in the hands of a committee of this House. I hope the amendment will be made, so that those who come after us and fill more worthily the seats we fill will have occasion to rise up and call our memories blessed because of the good work we did in these sweltering days of June.

Mr. RANDALL. There have been thousands and thousands of dollars expended in that direction; as much as $30,000 at a single period.

This Hall will not be properly ventilated until members cease to smoke within its limits and cease to spit tobacco juice in the apertures in the floor. If the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] can induce the members of the House to correct their habits in these particulars the atmosphere of the Hall will be much purer.

Mr. WEAVER. That is a matter of morals.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will remind my friend from Pennsylvania that in the last Congress I introduced a resolution to put a stop to the filthy habit of which he speaks, and to a large extent it was stopped. I will also call his attention to the fact that twice during the present session I have risen to points of order with reference to smoking, and all I have secured has been invidious remarks from the victims.

Mr. RANDALL. One thousand dollars to secure a plan to prevent this abuse will amount to nothing.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand. But I believe if this practice were stopped, still it would remain a fact that the thermometer would attain an altitude in this Hall that is entirely inconsistent with personal comfort. I do not ask that any extended appropriation be made; but I do ask that the small sum of $1,000 be set apart to allow this committee to advertise for plans and to select the one which, in their judgment, is the best. Then they will have to go to the Committee on Appropriations to secure the adoption of that plan. The scepter will not depart from Israel even if this amendment of mine is adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am very glad to aid in the adoption of any provision that will improve the ventilation of this Hall; but it can never be improved until the whole system now in use is changed. I have called attention on this floor several times to the fact that the whole system upon which the Hall is ventilated is wrong; that, in other words, they begin at the wrong end; they bring the fresh air in at the bottom and let it out at the top.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will suggest to the gentleman that he can put in his plan.

Mr. SPRINGER. I was about to suggest it is not necessary to appropriate $1,000. If any gentleman will write to a manufacturer of such apparatus whose address I will give him he can find a plan with out any cost at all that will bring about the desired result.

What is needed is to pump the foul air out from the floor and let the fresh air come in from the top. If we will just change the present plan, turn it end for end, and reverse the operation that is going on, we will have no difficulty about ventilation. This is not mere theory or mere experiment. The hall of representatives and the senate chamber in the new state-house at Springfield, Ill., are ventilated upon that system, and they are very well ventilated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There may not be so much gas there as there is here. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Probably not, but there is just as much importance attached to the ventilation of those halls as to the ventilation of this, and it is just as difficult in theory and in practice to accomplish it; but it has been done by the system I have described, which gives perfect satisfaction to everybody. I have never heard a single complaint in regard to the ventilation of those two halls. The system seems to be absolutely perfect, and, as I have said, it is just the reverse of the system we employ here. The air that has been breathed should be pumped out at the bottom, and if that plan is adopted here we shall have no more trouble in regard to the ventilation of this hall.

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. I have had some experience in ventilating by power, and I have found that you can not push air, but you can pull it by proper machinery. You can exhaust every particle of air from this Chamber by using the proper appliances; but the work must be done in a different way from that in which it is done now. We try here to force pure air in, but that can not be done. You can not push a rope, but you can pull it; and in like manner you can bring in pure air enough to ventilate this Chamber as well as anybody can desire.

A MEMBER. I wish you would do it.

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. The gentleman says he wishes I would do it. The gentlemen who have charge of these public buildings have a good deal to learn in regard to ventilation. What this Chamber needs is a powerful fan to exhaust the air from the Chamber by means of registers below, letting the pure air come in from the top. We have adopted that plan for the ventilation of our schools and other public buildings in Milwaukee, and it gives perfect satisfaction.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, there have been a great many theories on this subject before the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, because there has been just complaint that this Hall is not well ventilated; but in my judgment we shall never have it properly ventilated until we reach the outside air. Members will observe that this Chamber is a box within a box. Now, I believe in the air that God Almighty sends through, and until you run this Hall out to the windows I do not think you will ventilate it properly. I do not know that I shall oppose the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN], but I have given my idea of what must be done before you can have this Chamber properly ventilated.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. BUCHANAN; and there were—ayes 24, noes 33.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I now offer the same amendment with the addition of the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. RANDALL. That has just been voted upon.

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; the amendment is changed.

The question was taken on the amendment as modified, and it was rejected.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Now, I offer an amendment for the same purpose, making the amount $750, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was rejected—ayes 29, noes 37.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Now, I offer an amendment for the same purpose, making the amount $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was rejected—ayes 29, noes 34.

The Clerk read as follows:

Building for the Library of Congress: For continuing, under the control and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, the construction of the building for the Library of Congress, including the appointment of all persons employed in connection therewith at the rates of compensation, as follows: architect, $5,000; assistant architect, $3,000; superintendent of construction, $4,000; one chief clerk, who shall act as disbursing agent, and who shall give bond in such sum as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, $2,200; and the services of skilled draughtsmen, civil engineers, computers, accountants, copyists, and such other services as the Secretary of the Interior may deem necessary and specially order, may be employed in the office of the architect and superintendent of construction, together with such mechanics and laborers as may be necessary to carry into effect the appropriation herein made for construction of said Library building and to be paid from such appropriation; for the construction of the western front of the building, the reading-room, and the book repositories connected therewith, $500,000; in all, $514,200; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to contract for any portion of the said western front of the building, reading-room, and book repositories.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word in order to say a few words on this provision of the bill. The inquiries which have been made lately into the subject of this Library building tend to raise a doubt as to whether upon the present plan the work should proceed. I hold in my hand the report made to this House by the House Committee on the Congressional Library at the first session of the last Congress, and I ask the Clerk to read the paragraph which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

The measurements of these architects, together with the figures of the steady growth of the collections reported by the Librarian, demonstrated that no possible enlargement of the Capitol which would be agreed to as feasible could possibly afford accommodation for more than a few years' increase, after which we should be confronted at last by the necessity of a separate building, after incurring all the cost of building on to the Capitol a costly annex of stone and iron, unfitted for any other purpose. Any enlargement of the Capitol which would accommodate the Library even as it stands, with room to arrange it, would cost much more than a separate building, because it must necessarily be constructed in the same costly style, with carved Corinthian architecture. Mr. Walter, the former Architect of the Capitol, estimated the cost of an extension of the west front at $4,500,000. The present Architect, Mr. Clark, estimates it to cost $4,200,000, while the plan of a building adopted by the committee is to cost only $2,323,600.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the Clerk to read from the remarks of Hon. Mr. Singleton, of Mississippi, chairman of the committee, delivered in this House March 24, 1886, when the bill authorizing the purchase of a site and the erection of this building was pending.

Before that is read, however, I wish to call attention to the fact that according to the report of the committee to the House the cost of the building was to be $2,333,600. There were two projects before Congress. One was the enlargement of the present Library; and the argument in favor of that project was that for accomplishing the purpose of a Congressional Library, the Library must be easily accessible to the two Houses of Congress.

For this reason the Library had remained in its present location, having been enlarged from time to time and greatly improved within the last twenty-five years, and made as nearly as possible fire-proof, an expenditure altogether, I think, of $750,000 having been made upon it with the view of the Library being retained in its present location for the convenience of the two Houses of Congress. In opposition to the plan of enlarging the Library in its existing location was the plan of having a separate Library building at some point away from the Capitol.

Mr. RANDALL obtained the floor and yielded to Mr. HOLMAN.

Mr. HOLMAN. The report stated the fact that one architect had estimated the cost of the enlargement of the old Library rooms at $4,500,000; that Mr. Clark, the Architect of the Capitol, had estimated the cost at $4,200,000. The report then went on to say that the plan of a separate building was more economical, because on the plan named in the bill then pending the cost would be $2,333,600. I now ask the Clerk to read from the volume I have sent to the desk the paragraph to which I have referred from the remarks of the Hon. Mr. Singleton, to show exactly the appropriation which it was stated would be required for the completion of the building as proposed in the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The appropriations asked for will be $500,000 to begin the work, $1,000,000 at the next session to continue it, and $823,660 at the succeeding session to complete it. This, of course, does not embrace the purchase of a site. It is confidently believed that these sums will finish the building so far as needed at present and for many years to come; and no further outlay need be made by the Government, utilizing, as before stated, the fees from the copyright system to put in shelving, etc., to meet the growing wants of the Library.

Mr. HOLMAN. The three successive appropriations stated in the remarks of Mr. Singleton, as just read, amounted to $2,333,600. That estimate, I admit, did not embrace the cost of the site, for which $550,000 was appropriated. The site ultimately cost $580,000, which, so far as I am able to learn, was reasonable enough. I do not know that there is any ground of complaint in that regard, for there was purchased for that sum an immense tract of land, over 2 acres, I think, in the heart of the city, and with a vast body of solid, substantial buildings.

The question now is, what ought to be done in the present state of things? It is now known that the lowest estimate for this building is $7,000,000. The House some months ago directed a committee of its number to inquire into these matters, and some inquiries have been made. The committee finds that the lowest sum named by any architect as the probable cost of this building, instead of being $2,333,600, is $7,000,000.

Mr. WEAVER. What is the highest estimate?

Mr. RANDALL. About $12,000,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. The lowest estimate is $7,000,000 for a building which is to be much larger than the great structure known as the State, War, and Navy Department building; and this is to accommodate a library containing a collection of books which, I believe, is valued at $750,000. The State, War, and Navy Department building cost about $10,000,000. The estimate when the structure was commenced was far below that sum. Congress entered upon the construction of this Library building with the best assurances it could obtain, including the statement which has been read from the report of the Library Committee and speech of General Singleton, one of the most excellent gentlemen who ever sat in this House, that the cost would not exceed $2,323,600. Yet at the very threshold of this undertaking, before the foundation of the building has been laid, the House is informed that the structure will cost at the least $7,000,000, without any possibility on our part of determining what may be the ultimate cost.

Mr. MACDONALD obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. HOLMAN.

Mr. RYAN. Before the gentleman from Indiana proceeds further, I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], who has charge of this bill, that in view of the importance of this subject he ought to throw this question open to general debate for some limited period. There can be no satisfactory discussion of the question under the five-minute rule. Here is a question of vast importance: Whether this House will ratify a fraud and imposition upon Congress to the amount of millions of dollars. The question is certainly sufficiently important to justify general debate for a limited time.

Mr. RANDALL. How long a discussion does the gentleman ask?

Mr. RYAN. For the rest of the day, I think.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Indian Affairs have notified me that they would like the Committee of the Whole to rise at half past 4 o'clock so that the Indian appropriation bill may be disposed of. I would like to comply with that request. I am willing to agree that this debate shall continue till half past 4 to-day, and for one hour to-morrow.

Mr. RYAN. All right.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the Committee of the Whole will rise before half past 4, as I have a proposition which I desire to submit in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I will agree, then, that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] may finish his remarks this evening——

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire only a few minutes more.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest, then, that general debate on this question run on till quarter past 4 o'clock this evening, and continue for an hour and a quarter to-morrow. Of course I appreciate the kindness of the gentlemen who have remained here and permitted me to go on with the consideration of the pending appropriation bill, and I do not wish to do anything against their consent in this connection.

The CHAIRMAN. What time does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] seemed to agree the committee should rise at 4 o'clock. I am content with that, the understanding being that we shall have general debate not to exceed two hours, which I would suggest. I will not attempt arbitrarily to limit members of the House in exposing an imposition which has been practiced upon Congress. In my judgment they should have full liberty to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to permitting general debate on the bill for two hours?

Mr. RANDALL. Two hours, I think, is long enough.

Mr. HOLMAN. One-half of that time will be enough.

Mr. RANDALL. Say one hour and a half.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to throw the slightest reflection upon the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. Singleton, who reported this bill to the House originally. The bill was frequently before the House previous to that time. The gentleman who reported the bill certainly acted in good faith, believing the statements made in his report and in the speech which he made to the House. He was authorized by the best information which could be obtained on the subject. And I desire to disclaim at once any thought of casting the slightest imputation on his motive. He is not now a member of the House, but I simply call the attention of the committee to the fact that the House of Representatives was deceived or misled in reference to this matter, whether such was the intention or not.

There can be no question, Mr. Chairman, that this House was deceived in the passage of the bill in reference to this Congressional Library. That measure had been defeated wh[illegible]ever brought in, and the large expenditure now shown to be inevitable was suggested as the probable cost, for the original sum suggested was $8,000,000, and so long as it remained at that sum it could not command a majority of the House. Whenever it was attempted to be passed on that basis it always failed. It came in in the Forty-seventh Congress, and again in the Forty-eighth Congress, and finally it was brought before the Forty-ninth Congress, with the report to which I have called attention.

We were told then that here is a structure which can be built cheaper than you can enlarge the present Library; for almost half what the enlargement of the present Library will cost. On that statement, as I think it was understood by the House, on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill on a yea-and-nay vote, there were yeas 159, nays 68. So the House passed the bill which had repeatedly before that time passed the Senate but had always been defeated, or at least been postponed, in the House.

I take it for granted that the gentlemen were deceived. The House was certainly deceived as to what kind of a measure it was entering upon. It is not the question now whether the House would enter upon the building of a Library building to cost $7,000,000 or more; that is not the question. The question is, whether the House of Representatives can consent that legislation shall stand which has been the result of clear misapprehension.

I do not care whether fraud was intended by any person or whether deception was intended by any person; but the important fact is that in the passage of the bill the House itself acted under a misapprehension of the facts. They were assured the building would cost two or three millions of dollars. They were assured it would cost less than the enlargement of the present library. Instead of that it is now discovered that it would cost vastly more than enlarging the present library rooms.

We might pass over a difference of half a million or a million of dollars; but when the difference amounts to $5,000,000, or more, Congress should pause before they carry on a work which had been authorized under a clear misapprehension of the facts, no matter whether there was an intention on the part of any one to create a misapprehension or not on the part of Congress.

Mr. HOOKER. What amount of money was paid for the site of the building as it now stands? What progress has been made as to the construction of the building?

Mr. HOLMAN. The appropriation at the time was $1,085,000. Five hundred and fifty thousand dollars for the purchase of the site in the first instance, and $35,000 afterwards; making in all $585,000 for the site; and that sum was paid for the site. I have remarked that as far as I am able to form a judgment the amount paid for the site was reasonable enough. As to the value of the property taken, I am not considering that feature of the transaction, for as to that Congress could not have been misinformed.

Mr. HOOKER. What are you going to do with it?

Mr. HOLMAN. The cost of the site was more reasonable than purchases made in other large cities for similar purposes have been. From my standpoint, no such purchase was justifiable, even if a Library building must be built, for the Government had ample real estate equally available.

Mr. HOOKER. How far has the plan been adopted?

Mr. HOLMAN. Congress adopted a plan. That is, Congress adopted the plan of the building. It was specially designated in the bill. During the discussion, and when the House voted on the proposition the plans were before the House. The question was whether we should enlarge the old building at a cost of $4,500,000 or take this magnificent structure named at a cost of two or three millions of dollars, or whether any expenditure at all was justified for the purpose. Many gentlemen opposed any scheme for a large expenditure, believing the whole movement for a new Library building wholly unjustified.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Is that the estimate made by the architect?

Mr. HOLMAN. I presume so. It was, I presume, the basis upon which the Library Committee acted in recommending the passage of the bill.

Mr. WILKINS. But who furnished the figures, the architect?

Mr. HOLMAN. I take it for granted that they were furnished by the architects whom the committee consulted.

I wish to say here that the inquiry and examination as to the facts ordered by the House have not been completed, so I can not speak with confidence as to the exact source of information upon which the report made to the House by the Library Committee was founded.

But I was about to state, in response to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER], that the cellar of this proposed building is partly done. A portion of the concrete foundation is already laid, and contracts have been made for that work and are being carried into effect. Contracts have also been made for some of the material, perhaps for some of the granite for the basement.

Granite alone, as I understand, is to be used, no other form of material being used for the walls except perhaps brick for the inside work. Appropriations are proposed in this bill of about $500,000, which would be ample in any event for present purposes, as next year's appropriations would be available after the 4th of next March; and if it was desirable to suspend the work in its present form and extend the proposed building to other uses and purposes, which I shall presently suggest, the Government would lose nothing thereby.

But, Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest this: Would it not be well now for us to determine what ought to be done in view of the fact that no material loss will occur if the work is suspended and a different and less expensive plan adopted? It seems clear that this expenditure, to the vast amount which is inevitable, if the work is carried on on the present basis, ought not to be permitted even if public interests justify the erection of a new Library building and the abandonment of the present spacious library rooms, spacious for the purposes for which the Library of Congress was established.

During the last few years a great many suggestions have been made as to the inadequacy of the present Supreme Court room. It is well known that the old Senate Chamber, while the most beautiful and perfect chamber in this respect in the country, filled with historic memories, a place that I hope will never be appropriated to any purpose less dignified and honorable than the place of holding the sessions of the Supreme Court of the United States, yet it is thought by many that that room is not large enough for the purposes of the Supreme Court, and there is a growing demand, whether justified or not, for a larger place. The proposition is, I understand, before the Senate to purchase a site and erect thereon a Supreme Court building.

Now, I wish to submit that if both of these expenditures must be made why not economize by uniting the two together on that expensive piece of land—that $585,000 site you have purchased for the library. I as a member of this body am not willing to act upon the old proposition with the facts before us. But, acting upon it as a new proposition why not combine two purposes together, and if, after all, Congress is still determined that that old historical library established by our predecessors generations ago, shall be removed from its old quarters in the Capitol, why not combine this projected library edifice with rooms adapted to the sittings of the Supreme Court of the United States as a part of it?

Why could not both purposes be accomplished at the same time, because the movement for the construction of Supreme Court rooms will be irresistible, eventually, judging from past experience? If the House shall pause now they could invite plans for the combined purposes, for the Supreme Court building and the Library building, on the great site you have on hand. But in that connection, Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit that these changes should be carefully considered. The law library, which must necessarily be accessible to both Houses of Congress, can not well be taken out of the Capitol. I suppose there is not a member of this body, or at the other end of the Capitol, who has not occasion frequently to consult it, as well as the other branch of the Library.

Mr. RANDALL. Every day.

Mr. HOLMAN. And yet it is obvious that with the Supreme Court elsewhere and the law library elsewhere, you will lose advantages for information required on the spur of the moment which your predecessors have found indispensable for generations. I repeat, therefore, why not stop here now for the present and consider this matter; consider the propriety of the two purposes for which the two buildings are required in order that the plan may be brought before the House with a little more reliability of detail and authoritative information as to the cost, and consider also whether the scheme is justified by any public necessity. Would it not be better than to carry out a measure of legislation manifestly the outgrowth of a misapprehension on the part of the members of the House?

I wish to add further, sir, that this new Library building movement has been largely from the beginning under the control of the Senate. The Senate organized the movement some years ago, back as far perhaps as the Forty-sixth or Forty-seventh Congress, and a joint committee on additional accommodations for the public Library was appointed. It remained a joint committee until the beginning of the Forty-eighth Congress, when the House declined to appoint its part of the committee. But it still remained as a Senate committee; and under the auspices of the Senate almost exclusively this whole measure has been carried out from beginning.

A commissioner visited Europe, it seems, under the auspices of the Senate to examine the great library structures of the Old World. The expenses were paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, as I suppose; at least they were paid. I know some little of the current appropriations myself, and gentlemen about me know something about them, but I venture to assert that the Senate never honored the House with the information that money was being appropriated for that purpose. It might have been all right, but the House surely ought to have known of this movement on the part of the Senate. If the Senate sent its representative abroad for an examination of the libraries and library edifices of Europe so as to provide reliable data on which to commence this magnificent structure which is comtemplated, surely the House should have known something of it. So that I can say, so far as the House is concerned, our information is necessarily meager because it has been from the very inception of it a Senate enterprise.

The measure was prompted by the Senate, was inaugurated by the Senate, and was passed over and over again by the Senate, and always objected to by the House until the House was informed of the comparatively moderate sum necessary to carry the measure into effect, the plan as it came from the Senate involving practically as was alleged but a small expenditure, compared with the original estimate of $8,000,000, and greatly less than the enlargement of the old Library rooms in the Capitol.

On that argument that bill was passed. The question is whether this House will feel it consistent with the duty that Congress owes to the country to carry out a measure of legislation that was the result of misapprehension when the real facts are discovered early enough to prevent any material loss or embarrassment.

Mr. HOOKER. I would like to ask whether there has not been a plan adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. The plan was incorporated in the act.

Mr. HOOKER. In the act that passed both Houses? Do you propose to suspend the work and vary that plan now?

Mr. RANDALL. The same power that made the act can change it.

Mr. HOOKER. After you have made your contracts?

Mr. HOLMAN. Very few contracts have been made.

Mr. HOOKER. You have adopted a plan.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; but we can change it by law.

Mr. HOOKER. You can not change it so far as the $600,000 that bought the site is concerned.

Mr. RANDALL. The $585,000 that bought the site can not be changed. That is gone. But that is not thrown away. The proposition that I suppose the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will make will be a modification of the plan whereby the further use of this site in a public direction may be provided for.

Mr. HOLMAN. A Supreme Court room in connection with the Library, if the Library movement must go on.

Mr. HOOKER. Would not that necessarily postpone the erection of the Library for some time?

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the hurry about it? The building will not be constructed during the next seven years at any rate.

Mr. RANDALL. You and I will not live to see it finished.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope we may.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope so too, but I do not think so.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope you will not impede its progress while you are living.

Mr. HEMPHILL. How much is the building going to cost?

Mr. HOLMAN. Seven millions, at least.

Mr. GOFF. Who makes the estimate of seven millions?

Mr. HOLMAN. The superintendent and others as to the minimum cost of the proposed edifice.

Mr. RANDALL. The building is going to cost more than the State, War, and Navy Department building. That building cost between ten and eleven million dollars.

Mr. RYAN was recognized.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman will yield to me, I desire to move that the committee now rise.

Mr. RYAN. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PEEL. I desire to submit the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8565) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 56.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 8, 9, 28, 29, 34, 35, 36, 37, 44, 45, 46, 47, 49, 50, 53, 54, 55, 57, 58, 61, 63, 65, 66, 67, 69, 70, 72, 73, 75, 76, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, and 92, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out in line 13 of the amendment the words "survey or resurvey," and insert in lieu thereof the word "allotments," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Insert after the word "California" the words "in suit, Byrne vs. Alas and another," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "This sum to be in full satisfaction of all claims against the Government growing out of such service;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out in line 4 of said amendment the words "one thousand eight hundred," and insert in lieu thereof "one thousand five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out from said amendment the word "previously" and insert in lieu thereof the words "to be;" and the Senate agree to the same.

S. W. PEEL,
JOHN M. ALLEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. L. DAWES,
P. B. PLUMB,
WILKINSON CALL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The following statement accompanied the conference report under the rule of the House:

The managers upon the part of the House beg leave to submit the following report of their action on Senate amendments to H. R. 8565, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes:

The Senate added 92 amendments.

Amendments numbered 1, 6, 7, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 26, 27, 28, 39, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 64, 71, 72, 73, 74, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, and 90 are all immaterial, simply changing phraseology, form, punctuation, etc.

Amendments 2, 3, and 4 consolidate the Nisqually and S'Kokomish agencies, with the Quinaielt, and fix salary of agent for consolidated agency.

Amendment 5 reduces salary of agent at Osage agency, Indian Territory, from $2,200 to $1,800.

Number 8 increases salary of new superintendent of Indian schools from $3,000 to $4,000.

Number 9 appropriates $65,000 to pay balance of outstanding Kansas or Kaw scrip. This is an acknowledged debt, bearing 5 per cent. interest, and is to be paid out of Indian funds held by United States.

Number 13 strikes out $10,000, on page 19 of bill, to pay last installment to Omahas.

Numbers 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24 change the expenditure of amount appropriated to Santee Sioux, of Nebraska, giving to those roaming $50,000 instead of $80,000, and those engaged in agriculture $100,000 instead of $70,000, leaving aggregate same as original bill.

Number 25 covers or includes transportation of supplies to Sioux in Dakota without increasing the amount appropriated.

Number 29, on page 31, changes cost of school-houses for Medawakuanton band in Minnesota from $2,000 to $1,000, but does not change aggregate appropriated.

Numbers 30, 31, 32, 33 strike out all the appropriation for Indians in Montana receiving rations at Fort Peck, Fort Belknap, and Black Feet agencies, because bill ratifying agreement with them in which the same amount, or the amount agreed on in said agreement, had become a law since the bill passed the House, which appropriation takes the place of amount appropriated in original bill.

Numbers 34 and 35 decrease amount to Navajo from fifteen to seven thousand dollars for pay of employés, etc.

Number 35 appropriates $15,000 to continue work on ditches, reservoirs, portable mills, material for houses, etc.

Number 36 appropriates $10,000 to pay bona fide settlers for their improvements in New Mexico because of their inclusion in Indian reservation.

Number 37 gives $6,000 for support and education of the Seminole Indians of Florida.

Number 38 strikes out a clause on page 40 providing that the various amounts in original bill for Montana Indians at Fort Peck, and Fort Belknap, and Blackfeet Indians shall not be expended, provided the bill then pending which supplies funds to take the place of amounts appropriated becomes a law; the bill having become a law, this clause was not necessary as amendments numbered 30, 31, 32, and 33 struck out the original appropriation for these Indians, etc.

Number 40 simply gives Hoopa Valley agency a carpenter.

Number 50 appropriates $1,000 to pay Charles F. Larrabee of Indian office for extra services as a member of Indian commission that procured various valuable agreements of Montana and Minnesota Indians. This service was arduous and dangerous; at same time very efficient.

Number 51 appropriates $2,500 to pay Shirley C. Ward for professional services as attorney at law for the Mission Indians in California. This work was done under employment of Attorney-General of the United States; the work being successful and the fee being reasonable in the opinion of Department, is allowed.

Number 52 appropriates $300 to pay Anna Adamson as teacher at Indian school at Mission agency, California.

Number 53 appropriates $10,176 to pay award of Court of Claims to Wallace W.

Rollins and Otis F. Presbrey for professional services for North Carolina Cherokees in certain suits in United States court.

Number 54 appropriates $10,000 to establish bridge across Wind River on Indian reservation in Territory of Wyoming.

Number 55 appropriates $3,000 to purchase river front on Columbia River at The Dalles in Oregon for benefit of Warm Spring Indians for fishing, etc.

Number 56 appropriates $2,000 to enable the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Cœur d'Alene Indians for part of their reservation.

Numbers 57 and 58 change the amount appropriated for day and industrial Indian schools from $725,000 to $750,000.

Number 59 strikes out transportation of pupils to Carlisle school, and limits expenditure to not exceed $167 to each pupil.

Numbers 61 and 62 increase the appropriation of $15,000 to erect school building at Carlisle to $18,000.

Number 63 corrects aggregate of Carlisle appropriation.

Number 65 fixes compensation of superintendent of Indian school at Chilocco at $1,500.

Number 66 same for superintendent at Genoa, Nebr.

Number 67 limits appropriations for heating, repairs, erection of building, etc., at Genoa, Nebr., at $5,000.

Number 68 appropriates $10,000 to support Indian school at Grand Junction, Colo.

Number 69 appropriates $1,000 for transportation of Indian pupils to Hampton school to be educated without further cost to the Government.

Number 70 fixes salary of superintendent of Indian school at Lawrence, Kans., at $2,000.

Number 75 fixes salary of superintendent at Indian school, in Salem, Oregon, at $1,500.

Number 76 strikes out appropriation of $20,000 for support of Indian school in Alaska.

Number 77 appropriates $25,000 to establish Industrial school in Ormsby County, Nevada.

Number 78 provides that children of Indians who have accepted lands in severalty shall share equally in school with other Indian children.

Number 91 extends laws of Montana over territory lately acquired from Montana Indians, lying in the counties of Choteau and Dawson.

Number 92 allows lands of Umatilla reservation to be sold at agency instead of local land office, etc.

Having fully explained all the Senate amendments and the conference report, showing the action of the conferees of the two Houses, we respectfully ask that the report be adopted.

S. W. PEEL,
JOHN M. ALLEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to make a brief statement. This is the report of the committee of conference on the Indian appropriation bill, and we are considering in the House at this time the sundry civil appropriation bill. Now, there has evidently been a confounding of two items, as I will explain. The estimate for the Alaska schools is $50,000. The estimate for Indian industrial education for children of both sexes in Alaska is $20,000. The sundry civil bill includes now but $25,000 of the $50,000, and this report of the committee of conference shows that the Senate has stricken out from the Indian appropriation bill the House provision giving $20,000 for the Indian industrial schools in Alaska. Last year there was an appropriation of $45,000. By the condition of the sundry civil bill and by this action of the Senate on the Indian appropriation bill there is left but $25,000 out of $45,000, whereas $75,000 has been asked.

I can tell the House in a moment how this happened. Education in Alaska ought to be, and is, recommended by the Commissioner of Education and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to be made a unit, and the purpose was to add the $25,000 to the $20,000, making $45,000, or so much more as might be thought proper for that purpose. The Committee on Indian Affairs of the House, conforming to the estimates of the Secretary of the Interior and of the Indian Bureau, very rightly omitted the $20,000, and it was put on by an amendment in this House. The bill went to the Senate, and the Senate, heeding the proper recommendation of the Secretary, that the Indians, the whites, and the Aleuts should have one system of education, have omitted that $20,000, and the matter is now in this condition, that instead of having $75,000 for the Indians and whites, you have but $20,000 for the whites; and the Indian schools in Alaska for the children of twenty-five thousand Indians are left unprovided for.

I call attention to this now, not for the purpose of resisting the conference report, but in order that the House, when it resumes consideration of the Senate bill to-morrow, may add the proper sum for the Indian industrial schools of Alaska for the coming year to the proper sum to be allowed to the Alaska Indian fund. I think the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs will say that I have properly stated the situation in reference to this matter.

Mr. PEEL. I think the gentleman has made a very correct statement, at least so far as the action of the Committee on Indian Affairs is concerned. No estimates came to us for the Indian schools in Alaska for the coming year, but when the bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole that item was put in on the floor, and was afterwards struck out. The reason given was that it would be provided for in the general educational fund for that Territory, and for that reason we concurred in the amendment striking it out.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations took action only on the part that it had been accustomed to take action on heretofore.

Mr. McCOMAS. I understand that. I simply wanted to direct attention to the matter, so that the error of confounding these two items might be corrected.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Indian Affairs surely have charge of a matter relating to Indian schools.

Mr. McCOMAS. Yes, sir; they had at that time.

Mr. RANDALL. And the Committee on Appropriations took charge of the appropriation relating to the white school.

Mr. McCOMAS. That is right; but now, by reason of both being united and the two committees working on different estimates, one is omitted entirely. I have here letters from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Commissioner of Education, and the Secretary of the Interior. But this matter can be arranged on the other bill. I only wanted the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs to state that I was right in this matter.

Mr. PEEL. Now let us have a vote.

Mr. BURROWS. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of this report [Mr. PEEL] whether there is any matter embraced in it which was not included in the bill as it passed the House or in the Senate amendments.

Mr. PEEL. No, sir; there is no new matter whatever.

The question being taken, the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3182) making an appropriation to enable the several Executive Departments of the Government and the Bureau of Agriculture, the Government Printing Office, and the Smithsonian Institution, including the National Museum and the Commission of Fish and Fisheries, to participate in the Ohio Centennial, to be held at Columbus, Ohio, from September 4 to October 19, 1888;

A bill (S. 1051) to amend the act giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad, in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 2496) granting the use of certain lands to the city of St. Augustine, Fla., for a public park, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 2948) for the relief of William B. Stokes, M. M. Brien and William T. Haskins;

A bill (S. 1553) to provide for the purchase of a site for the erection of a public building at Oakland, in the State of California;

A bill (S. 157) for the relief of Newton S. Murphy; and

A bill (S. 111) for the relief of William N. Keightley.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendments bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 8372) authorizing the sale of a portion of the Winnebago reservation, in Nebraska;

A bill (H. R. 4691) for the relief of John P. Hageman; and

A bill (H. R. 128) for the relief of John Fletcher.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 7255) for the relief of A. B. Tyan with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the House concurrent resolution for the correction of an error made in the distribution of a document known as "Fish and Fisheries."

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 8565) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HERBERT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 10556) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let it be understood that all points of order are reserved on that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). All points of order will be reserved.

LOAN OF TENTS, ETC., FOR GETTYSBURGH REUNION.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution authorizing the loan of tents and tent equipage to the veteran organizations of the Society of the Army of the Potomac.

Whereas at the annual reunion of the Society of the Army of the Potomac, held at Saratoga, N. Y., in 1887, a resolution was passed extending to all the sur-

ivors of the Army of the Potomac and their guests, to meet in fraternal reunion n the twenty-fifth anniversary of the battle of Gettysburgh, July 1, 2, and 3, 888, on the field of Gettysburgh, and as the invitation has been generally extended and accepted, the survivors of the two armies will be largely represented ton the occasion; and

Whereas it is apparent that this Congress will not make a money appropriation to measurably meet the expenses of properly celebrating such anniversary: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to loan to the committee in charge of quarters of the Society of the Army of the Potomac such tents and tent equipage as may be needed for the sheltering of the veteran organizations participating in said anniversary, and that to prevent loss or damage resulting from the use of such tents and tent equipage, the Secretary of War is authorized to detail troops to take charge of the same and to provide for their safe-keeping and transportation under the direction of the Quartermaster-General.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. KILGORE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry: Does that carry with it an appropriation?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It does not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BURROWS. I shall object for the present, until I have an opportunity to examine the resolution.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman objects now, it ends the matter for the session, because the celebration comes off in two weeks, and unless this authority be given now——

Mr. BURROWS. I say to the gentleman that I desire to examine this resolution, and if I have no objection to it——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It will be too late.

Mr. BURROWS. To-morrow will not be too late.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It will.

Mr. BURROWS. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman thinks proper, let him object.

Mr. BURROWS. I do object, until I can examine the resolution.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution. There is nothing in it which a child ten years old can not comprehend. It simply provides for a loan of tents.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] representing the Committee on Military Affairs to renew the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I renew that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As this is suspension day, and as that committee is entitled to the call, the Chair recognizes the gentleman.

Mr. BURROWS. That committee has been called.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But I withdrew the proposition.

Mr. KILGORE. I make the point that the Committee on Military Affairs has already been called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state, in response to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Texas, that when the committee was recognized in a previous part of this day, it moved a proposition on which no quorum voted, and the proposition was withdrawn. There was no action taken, and therefore, in effect, there was no recognition; and the Chair takes cognizance of the fact that the Speaker of the House at that time said that he would recognize the gentleman from Illinois when the Committee of the Whole should rise this evening, if he desired to be recognized to renew his motion.

Mr. BURROWS. The gentleman from Illinois asked unanimous consent for the consideration of this resolution.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I did in my individual capacity.

Mr. BURROWS. I am addressing the Chair. The gentleman did that on his individual responsibility, as he had of course the right to do. That proposition was objected to. Now the gentleman, as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, proposes to suspend the rules. My objection to that is that the Committee on Military Affairs has been already recognized to-day for such a motion; and whatever may have been the fate of that motion, whether successful or unsuccessful, the committee is not entitled to another recognition, but the next committee is entitled to be called. And in the second place the rule provides, and it is well settled by parliamentary law, that where a motion is voted down another motion can not be made to the same effect.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Michigan raised his point of order, which the Chair has decided. I hold the gentleman has no right to debate this any longer, as it has been settled.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has the right to discuss the question of order.

Mr. BURROWS. I have nothing further to say. It is a clear violation of the rule to recognize a committee to suspend the rules, and if not successful to recognize that committee again. If that be true, the Chair can recognize every succeeding Monday motions to suspend the rules from the same committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion there was no votes and therefore no action on the motion as no quorum appeared. It was withdrawn. If the motion had been insisted upon and it had gone over on the adjournment of the House, it would have come up the first business in order on the next occasion under the rule when this class of business is in order. It would have been the first business on the next Monday when motions to suspend the rules are in order from committees. There is no action on the part of the House when a want of a quorum is developed. So as an original proposition the Chair recognized the gentleman to move to suspend the rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I make that motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. BURROWS. Does the Chair hold that the motion to suspend the rules is pending?

The CHAIRMAN. No, it was withdrawn.

Mr. BURROWS. Does the Chair hold he can recognize the same committee to make the same proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does under the circumstances. The gentleman having the matter in charge withdrew it, and thereupon the House went into Committee of the Whole to consider the sundry civil appropriation bill. After some time spent in committee the committee rose. Thereupon the gentleman from Illinois was recognized, when he renewed his motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I insist on the question.

Mr. BURROWS. The only thing I wish is to examine the resolution. If on examination I find it all right I will make no objection to it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That will be too late. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BURROWS. I demand a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the second be considered as ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. I object to that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. TOWNSHEND and Mr. BURROWS.

Mr. CULBERSON. Does the Chair decide that it is in order for the same committee to repeat the motion to suspend the rules when the first motion has been voted down?

The CHAIRMAN. On the first motion a quorum failed to vote and the motion was withdrawn; and then after the House had come out of committee the motion to suspend the rules was renewed, which is now the question before the House.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 69, noes 3.

Mr. BURROWS. No quorum.

Mr. BAYNE. Is a motion to adjourn in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at this time. When the tellers make their report it will be in order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the House should adjourn during the present division, does not this motion expire with the day?

The CHAIRMAN. No; but it will remain before the House until disposed of, whenever this class of business is in order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move, by unanimous consent, the resolution be made the special order for 11.30 a. m. to-morrow, and the previous question be considered as ordered upon it.

Mr. BURROWS. I demand the regular order. Let us do one thing at a time.

The tellers having resumed the count, reported—ayes 71, noes 3.

Mr. BURROWS. No quorum. I suppose I need not keep on repeating that.

Mr. WILKINS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask unanimous consent that this proposition may go over as unfinished business until to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BURROWS. I think we had better have the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WILKINS. At the request of several gentlemen around me, I will withdraw that motion.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pending the renewal of the count by tellers the Chair will lay before the House a request of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MCSHANE].

On the 25th of February last a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury was transmitted to the House in regard to the bill for paving and grading around the site of the post-office at Lincoln, Nebr. This was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, but was subsequently reported back by that committee and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The latter committee now desire to be discharged from its further consideration and have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. Why?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that this being in continuation of work already in progress, it properly belongs to that committee.

Mr. RANDALL. Does it not break the limit?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; this is in regard to paving around the building.

There being no objection, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was discharged from the further consideration of the communication and accompanying bill, and the same was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. ROBERTSON to print remarks in the RECORD on House bill 6115.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FORD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 39.

Before the vote in the negative was announced—

Mr. BUCHANAN. Pending the announcement of the vote, I desire to state that I believe the terms of my last request were misunderstood.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will announce the vote first.

On this question the ayes are 39, the noes 36. Before announcing the result the Chair will entertain the proposition of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. BUCHANAN. My proposition was that this pending question should come up in the morning after the reading of the Journal, without any limitation as to the previous question.

Mr. BURROWS. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the announcement of the vote just taken. The ayes have it, and the House stands——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I demand tellers on that vote.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND and Mr. BURROWS were appointed tellers.

Mr. SPINOLA. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPINOLA. Will it be in order to make a short speech at this time on the question of the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Only by unanimous consent. If there be no objection the gentleman will be permitted to proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPINOLA. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, with the most profound kindness to our friends on the other side of the House, who have manifested a spirit to filibuster this proposition out of time, that I have stood here acting for the survivors of the Army of the Potomac in endeavoring to persuade the Congress of the United States to contribute a small sum of the money which is now corroding in the Treasury towards paying a few absolutely necessary expenses in connection with the twenty-fifth anniversary of the great battle of Gettysburgh.

Mr. Speaker, the moons of five and twenty years have cast their soft light upon the graves of the men who fell upon that bloody field. The rays of five and twenty rising and setting summer suns have cast their shadows over the hills and valleys amongst which that battle was fought; and the survivors, who are but few and far between, as my friend General Sickles, who sits by me, suggests, are anxious to again assemble in fraternal feeling, in friendship and in love, and to pass the old canteen from one hand to another, to re-establish the friendships which existed before the war took place. [Applause.] And, sir, that has been my only motive in asking the House so frequently to consider this question favorably. But to my utter amazement, and to my astonishment and great regret, which I can not find language even to express at this time, I have been met for the third time in these efforts by an opposition coming from that side of the House, who claim to be such strong and stalwart friends of the veterans of the Union Army. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. And in justice to this side of the House you ought further to say that that opposition was from one man only, who stands absolutely alone and unaided.

Mr. SPINOLA. Well, sir, that is for you to settle amongst yourselves.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We have settled it by voting with you constantly on this proposition.

Mr. SPINOLA. And I am very much obliged to the gentleman from New Jersey and those who have aided him.

Mr. FARQUHAR. And the gentleman might state further that the very proposition which is now before the House emanated from this side of the House.

Mr. SPINOLA. Yes, sir; and our committee reported it back, but your side, which assumes to be the special guardian of the Union soldiers, have failed to comply with the recommendations of the Military Committee, who have adopted this resolution unanimously, which only asks the loan of some few tents to shelter the veterans when they shall come together upon that famous field.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I want to say there is not a Union soldier on this side but what has voted for this resolution.

Mr. SPINOLA. Sir, it has been repeatedly done heretofore.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Where is the Union soldier?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Every one of them has done so.

Mr. SPINOLA. I am very sorry I have been compelled to make these few remarks.

The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House, according to previous order, adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Mr. McPHERSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3187) making an appropriation of $150,000 to enable A. de Bausset to build an airship to convey passengers and freight through the air, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENT TO CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. GEORGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance for certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PNEUMATIC GUN-CARRIAGES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, that order is closed. The first Order of Business on the Calendar under Rule VIII will be stated.

Order of Business 1382, being the bill (S. 2515) to provide pneumatic gun-carriages for the War Department, was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to contract with the Pneumatic Gun Carriage and Power Company for one 8, one 10, and one 12 inch gun-carriage, to be built under the company's system, at a cost not exceeding in the aggregate $60,000.

SEC. 2. The Secretary is also authorized to contract with the aforesaid company for one 10-inch disappearing carriage, to be built under the company's system; and the Secretary is also authorized to purchase such other type of seacoast or disappearing carriage as he may deem proper; the total cost of the carriages provided for in this section not to exceed $100,000.

SEC. 3. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act the sum of $160,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a report?

Mr. HAWLEY. The original bill was referred to the War Department for advice and recommendations, and the Ordnance Department suggested a substitute bill, which is the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. I hold in my hand the letter of the Secretary of War and of the Chief of Ordnance in favor of the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have them read at the desk, please.

Mr. HAWLEY. I send them up to be read.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, April 7, 1888.

SIR: In reply to the request of your committee, dated the 29th ultimo, for the views of this Department upon Senate bill No. 2515, Fiftieth Congress, first session, appropriating $150,000 for the manufacture by the Pneumatic Gun Carriage and Power Company of pneumatic gun-carriages for the War Department, I have the honor to invite attention to the inclosed report of the 4th instant by the Chief of Ordnance, who recommends that instead of the amount above named, $160,000 be appropriated, and that the provisions of the bill include the procuring and testing of different types of seacoast disappearing and other carriages.

This amendment is embodied in the accompanying draught of a bill, which I concur with him in recommending as a substitute for the bill submitted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. J. R. HAWLEY,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., April 4, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith letter of the 29th of March, from the Senate Military Committee, inclosing S. 2515, bill "to provide pneumatic gun-carriages for the War Department," and to report:

A proper carriage is not second in importance to the gun itself, and its determination is, equally with the gun itself, a matter of close study and successful trial. The original pneumatic carriage made by this Department has, by its results, forced itself into public recognition and favor. Much has, however, yet to be done and learned to reach that completeness and perfection so absolute in handling heavy masses and resisting the heaviest strains.

Disappearing carriages are not a novelty, but recent successes in the use of the pneumatic principle in England exhibit such a marked stride in the solution of the problem that the inclosed provisions ought not to be ignored or disregarded.

One hundred and fifty thousand dollars may be more than is necessary to provide the carriages mentioned in this bill, but as this question of carriages is a vital one and demands much study, trial, and experiment, I would recommend that the provisions of the bill be extended to include the procurement and test of different types of seacoast disappearing and other carriages that possess merit sufficient to justify the expenditure.

The inclosed bill should be so modified; and I inclose draught of bill embodying this amendment, which I strongly recommend may become a law.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. V. BENÉT,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the chairman of the committee would inform us if he can, as I have no doubt he can, what is the Pneumatic Gun Carriage Company and where it is located? Is it a corporation or a partnership?

Mr. HAWLEY. I suppose it to be a duly organized corporation, from the fact that the Navy Department has been making contracts with it. I have also a report by a board of officers of the Navy Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have you told us all you know about the Pneumatic Gun Carriage Company? Where is it located? Where are the works?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have not examined the history of the company itself; I trust that to the War Department. I trust that the War Department will not make a contract with a company unless it appears to be a duly organized and responsible company. The bill does not direct the Department to do it. The Department itself is satisfied as to the legal existence of such a company and as to the value of the work, and the Department is authorized to contract. It has never been known, in my judgment, to contract with a company that has no existence.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I dare say that may be so, and still I suppose it would not be unlawful or even impertinent for a Senator to inquire where the company was located and who composed it, as a matter of interesting information?

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not intimate that it would be. I intimated my belief that the company had a legal existence, and that the Secretary of War would certainly be satisfied on that point before he made a contract.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand the Senator to say he does not know where the works of this company are?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have not myself examined the legal organization of the company.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where are the works located?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know. All I know is that they have made their carriages and exhibited them at Sandy Hook, and that the reports are favorable to them. In the report of the naval board it is stated that the company offers—

To build at the South Boston Iron Works, under the inspection of one of the members of the present board, one Powlett pneumatic gun-carriage, etc.

It is proposed to build the guns at the South Boston Iron Works. I do not know that the company has any established works of its own. It owns the patent and has made some carriages which have given great satisfaction.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL BUILDING FOR NATIONAL MUSEUM.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to call up Senate bill 3134, Order of Business 1555.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3134) for the erection of an additional fire-proof building for the use of the National Museum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Vermont moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which has been read.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $500,000 for the erection of a fire-proof building for the use of the National Museum, to cover 300 feet square, and to consist of two stories and basement, to be erected under the direction of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in accordance with the plans now on file with the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, on the southwestern portion of the grounds of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. MORRILL. There is a full report by the committee on this bill, Report No. 1539, which I presume most Senators have already seen. I shall not therefore ask for its reading unless some Senator desires the letter of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution to be read, which is very full on the subject.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from Vermont if this building will correspond with the National Museum building?

Mr. MORRILL. It will, but it is one story higher.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is the old building of the National Museum full?

Mr. MORRILL. It is more than full. They have more than enough to fill another building of equal size. The proposed building will contain room equal to three times the present amount of the existing museum, and the pressing necessity for it will be seen by the report that is made and by the urgency of the officers of the Smithsonian Institution that the bill shall be acted upon at the present session.

Mr. BECK. I rose to make an inquiry of the Senator from Vermont. I did not observe any provision made as to who is to superintend the building, or at what time it shall be finished, or anything in that regard. The bill seems too indefinite.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator knows that so far as the Regents of the Institution are concerned the other building was constructed in an extremely short time and very economically.

Mr. BECK. I know it was. I ask if the building is to go on under the same general supervision that built the museum a few years ago.

Mr. MORRILL. The bills are precisely identical in language.

Mr. BECK. Then it is all right.

Mr. MORRILL. There is a single verbal amendment that I desire to have made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 11, after the word "Grounds," it is proposed to insert the words "of the Senate;" so as to read:

In accordance with the plans now on file with the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWIN DE LEON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Order of Business 1387, the next bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 631) for the relief of Edwin De Leon, reported adversely from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be indefinitely postponed, if there be no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. Had not the bill better remain on the Calendar, as the Senator who reported it is not present?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, he is here.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be indefinitely postponed, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

JOHN D. MAXTED AND ROBERT J. B. NEWCOMBE.

The bill (H. R. 878) for the relief of John D. Maxted and Robert J. B. Newcombe was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to John D. Maxted and Robert J. B. Newcombe, of Manistee, Mich., $636, for extra excavation performed by them under the direction of the United States superintendent in the construction of the Sturgeon Bay life-saving station, in the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. FAULKNER May 23, 1888:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 878) for the relief of J. D. Maxted and Robert J. B. Newcombe, have carefully examined the same, and report:

The committee find that the House report, No. 969, accompanying H. R. bill 878 clearly and properly presents the facts on which the petitioners in this case ask relief, and the said report is therefore adopted, as follows:

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 878) for the relief of John D. Maxted and Robert J. B. Newcombe, having considered the same, report:

"That the claimants in October, 1885, entered into a contract with the Government for the construction of a life-saving station at Sturgeon Bay Canal, Wisconsin, and that among other items of labor to be performed by the claimants by the terms of the contract was an excavation of 1,200 cubic yards of earth, sand, and loose gravel, to prepare a place for the foundation of certain buildings which were to be erected; but in the prosecution of the work it was found expedient and necessary to excavate about 10,000 cubic yards of such earth, sand, and gravel in addition to the 1,200 yards called for by the said contract.

"Mr. William Henry, the superintendent in charge of the work on the part of the Government, makes an affidavit that such extra excavation was necessary and practically unavoidable, and that it was done at his request and by his direction, and that it was duly approved of by Colonel Rogers, the engineer officer in charge.

"This claim for extra work was referred to the Solicitor of the Treasury, who under date of October 28, 1886, gave it as his opinion that under the contract the extra work could not be paid for, as it was not authorized in writing by the Secretary of the Treasury, but that under the circumstances it was a proper case to present to Congress.

"The amount named in the bill, that is $636, is the amount estimated by the civil engineer in charge of the work as the amount that should be paid for the extra work.

"The committee recommend that the bill do pass."

The committee report H. R. bill 878 favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There does not seem to be any reason in this report why the bill should not pass; but it must have been an extraordinary engineer or Government officer who had charge of the work, in whose plans 1,200 cubic yards of earth were required to be removed for the foundation when it was found necessary after they began the work to increase that by 10,000 yards, more than eight times the amount of the estimated excavation by the engineer.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state to the Senator from Vermont that the committee do not find that 10,000 cubic yards, as stated in the House report, was the proper amount actually excavated as extra work. The Senator will recognize that at once from the amount that the committee allowed in the bill, $636. Ten thousand cubic yards was the amount claimed by the contractor, but the engineer in charge reduced it very considerably; in fact to four thousand and something. That was caused by the shifting of the sand at the point to a great extent and by the determination of the Government engineer, after the contract was made, to remove the sand that had accumulated some 20 feet from the building, which, under the estimate, was only to be some 5 feet from the building. But the shifting character of the sand rendered it absolutely necessary, in order to protect the building, that it should be removed farther from the building after it was erected, and for that reason the allowance was made.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF DEEDS.

The bill (S. 2658) to validate acknowledgments taken before the commissioners of the circuit courts of the United States, or the commissioners of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, of deeds to be recorded in the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the deeds for the purpose of conveying lands situated in the District of Columbia, acknowledged since the 16th day of September, A. D. 1850, before any United States commissioner appointed by the circuit courts of the United States, or by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and duly certified under the hand and seals of such commissioners, are declared valid and sufficient to pass the fee-simple or other estate intended to be conveyed, and bar dower, in the real estate therein mentioned, in favor of parties claiming under and through such deeds: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to divest rights heretofore acquired, of record, in good faith, by purchasers or creditors of the parties to such deeds or other instruments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], who reported the bill, explain what is the present state of the law in the District of Columbia, and the necessity for the passage of the bill.

Mr. FAULKNER. There has been no act that I have been able to find that would ratify any supposed defective acknowledgment since the date given in the bill. The object is to confirm all deed that were acknowledged before commissioners of the circuit court of the United States or commissioners appointed by the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

I call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to section 1778 of the Revised Statutes, which authorizes the commissioners of circuit courts to take acknowledgments of deeds. There is no question in my mind as to the validity of those acknowledgments; but the question has been suggested in the District of Columbia by the title companies that exist in this District, and they have refused to warrant or guaranty the title where the deed has been acknowledged either before a commissioner of the circuit court or a commissioner appointed by the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

That has produced such a condition of affairs that several instances have been brought to the attention of the committee affecting the title to property in this way. Deeds have been acknowledged before these commissioners in trust. The parties proceed to enforce the provisions of the trust by the sale of the property. It has resulted in the title companies refusing to guaranty the title, in purchasers refusing to purchase, and throwing ultimately the property upon the beneficiaries of the trust, bought in order to save themselves, they being confident that the title was good under the provisions of the law as it stood. Consequently it has been very unjust and injurious to a great many persons who were owners of property and have been forced to give deeds of trust and mortgages upon them.

I called the attention of all the title companies to this bill, and the attention of the supreme court of the District of Columbia to it. The modifications made in the bill are modifications in accordance with the suggestions of the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia. They have urged and suggested and advised the passage of a bill similar to this with the amendment suggested by the committee, which is in accordance with their recommendation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The statutes of the United States concerning the acknowledgment of deeds in the District of Columbia, section 441 of the statutes relating to the District of Columbia, provide, among other officers who may take acknowledgments, thus:

Sixth. Before any commissioner of the circuit court of the District appointed for that purpose.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state to the Senator from Vermont that the title companies hold that the supreme court of the District of Columbia is not a circuit court within the meaning of that section, and that although the commissioners appointed by the supreme court of the District have proceeded to take these acknowledgments in accordance with that section they are not willing to guaranty the title conveyed under those acknowledgments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think they are mistaken about that, with great respect; but that would be no objection to passing the bill if there is any doubt about it in their minds.

Another doubt occurs to my mind that I should like to hear the Senator from West Virginia relieve, as doubtless he can. Under the laws in this District deeds by the husbands of married women require the assent of the wife and her acknowledgment in a certain way.

The question is, supposing Congress to pass this act, whether, inasmuch as the married woman stands in that peculiar relation, it is within the power of Congress to divest an estate which she still holds because she has not acknowledged before the officer required by law, and was under no obligation to join in the deed by force of any contract as the husband was. The question is whether it would divest her by force of this act of her right to dower after her husband died which had not been divested by the act which she did before an unauthorized person, just as if an authorized commissioner had taken her acknowledgment in a different way from that required by law. Then the question is whether in such a case Congress would have the power to pass an act which would make the title of the grantee good notwithstanding she had not acknowledged in the manner required by law, which I should very much doubt.

I am not objecting to the passage of the bill, but I think it right to call attention to it, so that if anybody ever looks at the discussion he may not be misled again in respect of supposing that everybody agreed that the effect of the bill would be to divest the title of a married woman that had not yet been divested for want of a proper acknowledgment.

Mr. FAULKNER. I have no doubt the object and purpose and intention of the bill is to confirm and make valid any technical defect in the acknowledgment of a married woman in the conveyance of land under a deed; and I have no doubt in my own mind of the constitutional power of the Legislature to pass such a bill to confirm and ratify a defective acknowledgment. In fact it is frequently done in almost every State of the Union; and it has been sustained in my State and in the State of Virginia to my certain knowledge by the highest courts. It is generally customary in my State, after every constitutional convention, and it has been the case in Virginia, to pass an enabling act similar to this one, and such acts have always been upheld and sustained by the courts as valid and constitutional provisions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no doubt, as it respects the real grantor, the owner of the property who has executed the deed and who has received the consideration for it, that it is within the power of the legislative authority to rectify any informality, to waive it, to obliterate it, that may have existed in the acknowledgment, or to make a deed good that was not acknowledged at all; but it is open to considerable question, I think, whether the law would apply to the case I have named of the wife. However, I am not stating that as any objection to the passage of this bill, but as a matter that ought to go into the discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to validate acknowledgments taken before United States commissioners appointed by the circuit courts of the United States, or by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, of deeds recorded in said District."

LUCIEN GOYAUX.

The bill (S. 1582) for the relief of the estate of Lucien Goyaux was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the representatives of Lucien Goyaux $1,545 for hospital stores, vehicles, harness, and saddlery taken from him at Baton Rouge, La., for the use of the United States Army, during the war of 1861.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SPOONER May 23, 1888:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1582) for the relief of the estate of Lucien Goyaux, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

The committee adopt the report submitted through Senator CAMERON at the Forty-eighth Congress, which was as follows:

"In August, 1862, Lucien Goyaux resided at Baton Rouge, La., and was engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling saddles, harness, and other goods usually kept in establishments of that kind. Col. Halbert E. Paine, colonel of the Fourth Wisconsin Infantry, was at that time in command at Baton Rouge. Soon after the battle of August 5, 1862, at Baton Rouge, Col. Halbert E. Paine, by Special Order No. 5, 1862, directed Maj. Frederick Frye, of the Ninth Connecticut Infantry, to collect horses and equipments to mount patrols detailed from the different regiments, and to take possession of such property as was necessary for that purpose and for the supplying of ambulances and transportation teams.

"Under and in pursuance of said order Major Frye, on the 12th of August, 1862, took possession of Mr. Goyaux's store and his stock of saddles, harness, etc., contained therein.

"On the 6th of October, 1862, a board of survey, constituted under Special Order No. 45 of the Department of the Gulf, consisting of Col. H. E. Paine, Fourth Wisconsin Volunteers, Lieut. Col. O. W. Lull, Eighth New Hampshire Volunteers, and Capt. William Roy, Twenty-first Indiana Volunteers, was appointed by order of General T. W. Sherman and directed to assemble at Camp Parapet on Thursday, October 6, 1862, at 10 o'clock a. m., to take proof, appraise, and report upon the stock of harness, etc., belonging to L. Goyaux, alleged to have been taken for the use of the forces of the United States by order of the commanding officer. This board assembled pursuant to the order, and on the 4th day of January, 1863, reported to the commanding general that they had attended to the duty assigned them, and had taken all the testimony offered by the claimant, Goyaux, as well as the testimony produced upon the part of the United States, and that it appeared from such testimony that Goyaux was the owner of the stock of goods, and that he was loyal to the United States, and they recommended the payment of $1,845, the value of the goods taken and used by the Army. This allowance was approved by Brig. Gen. T. W. Sherman, commanding.

"Subsequently, on the 6th of March, 1863, the matter was again investigated by a court of inquiry under Special Order No. 6. This court recommended that the claimant should be paid the sum of $1,545.

"The following are the items allowed the claimant by the two boards:

11 sets of harness	$350.00
20 saddles	400.00
72 bridles, girths, and surcingles	150.00
150 whips	100.00
Saddlery hardware	150.00
13 saddlebags	50.00
51 collars	75.00
1 wagon	60.00
1 dray	60.00
3 bales of moss, taken and used for hospital purposes	50.00
Total	1,545.00

"In 1863 Goyaux presented his claim to the War Department for payment. It was investigated, and on the 23d of September, 1863, Chauncey Smith, the Solicitor of the War Department, made a decision thereon. He states as follows:

"'Upon the claim of Lucien Goyaux I have the honor to report that in my opinion the loyalty of the claimant is fully established, and that he is justly entitled to a part, if not the whole, of the claim, but there is no appropriation out of which he can be paid by the Department.'

"Goyaux died November 20, 1871. He was a native of France, and it appears that his widow and children did not know that he had ever become a citizen of the United States. The widow and children of Goyaux caused the claim to be presented to the French and American Claims Commission, but upon investigation it was discovered that Goyaux had become a naturalized citizen of the United States in 1857, and, consequently, he being an American citizen, the French and American Claims Commission could not adjudicate the claim. The claim was cognizable before the Southern Claims Commission, but Goyaux died a few months after this commission was established, and it is satisfactorily shown that his legal representatives had no knowledge whatever that the claim could be considered by the Southern Claims Commission until long after that commission expired by limitation of law.

"The original claimant, Goyaux, was diligent in asserting his claim.

"We are satisfied that the property hereinbefore described was taken pursuant to the order of Colonel Paine, the commanding officer; that it was adapted to the use of the Army, and that it was actually used by the Army. We are also satisfied that it was of the value of $1,545.

"We therefore report back said bill and recommend that it do pass."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS FOR ADVANCES IN WAR OF 1812.

The bill (S. 610) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and settle the accounts of certain States and the city of Baltimore, growing out of moneys expended by said States and the city of Baltimore for military purposes during the war of 1812, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over to the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask that that bill be not passed over. The purpose of the bill is simply to place the States covered by the bill exactly upon the same equality as four States already relieved by an act of Congress of precisely the same kind. It has been discussed fully.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That bill is an important bill and involves a great deal of money. There ought to be a discussion and examination of the preceding cases that are said to be precedents, and we ought to know something about precisely what is the nature of the claims which justify Congress in paying interest. It is too important a bill, I suggest to my friend from West Virginia, to be taken up when the Senate is so very thin.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the objection withdrawn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should renew it if it was.

Mr. PLUMB. My impression is that the accounts of the State of Maryland for advances or expenses in the war of 1776 are not settled yet. Those ought to be taken out of the way before we come down to those of 1812.

Mr. FAULKNER. I, of course, do not insist on the present consideration of this bill, as the Senater from Vermont has suggested that there may be a division called for, which would, of course, stop the matter, but I think the Senator from Kansas will find that so far as the State of Maryland is concerned as to the war of 1812, all her claims have been settled. It is not the State of Maryland, it is the city of Baltimore that is more interested in this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill takes its place on the Calendar under Rule IX.

MEDICAL CORPS OF THE NAVY.

The bill (S. 262) to increase the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over to the Calendar under Rule IX.

NEW BERNE NATIONAL CEMETERY ROAD.

The bill (H. R. 4320) to authorize the construction of a graveled or macadamized road from the city of New Berne, N. C., to the national cemetery near said city was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the necessity for the United States building that road explained.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have the report read?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; if there be one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. WALTHALL May 24, 1888:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4320) to authorize the construction of a graveled or macadamized road from the city of New Berne, N. C., to the national cemetery near said city, having considered the same, report as follows:

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill for the reasons set forth in the following report of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives:

"[House Report No. 1287, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4320) for the construction of a macadamized road from the city of New Berne, N. C., to the national cemetery near that city, submit the following report:

"There are buried in the national cemetery near the city of New Berne, N. C., over 3,000 Federal soldiers. The grounds are inclosed within walls built of shell rock, of which material the house for the superintendent (a neat two-story building) is also constructed.

"These grounds are situated on a bluff overlooking the Neuse River, a sheet of water about 1 mile in width. The distance from these grounds to the corporate limits of New Berne is about 1½ miles, and the only road now connecting it with this city, or by which it is approachable at all, is a narrow, private cart road, liable at any time to be closed by the owners of the lands over which it runs, and which, during certain seasons of the year, is grown up with weeds and made almost impassable by the encroachments of the plowmen who cultivate the adjacent fields. The owners of these lands, your committee is informed, are willing to donate to the Government the right of way over them.

"The macadam to construct this road will have to be hauled by rail between 75 and 100 miles, and according to approximate estimates made by Mr. Owens, of the War Department, the cost of its construction will reach about $20,000, which estimate is hereto attached and made part of this report.

"WASHINGTON, D. C., February 18, 1888.

"DEAR SIR: In accordance with your request I hand you herewith approximate estimate of cost of shell and of macadam road from the city of New Berne, N. C., to the national cemetery near that place.

"The distance from the city limits to the cemetery is reported to be a mile and a quarter.

"If shells could be obtained in sufficient quantities at the price usual where shells abound a good road of the above length, 25 feet wide, with a depth of 18 inches of shells, could be constructed for $15,000, possibly less, depending on the supply and price of shells.

"I am informed that the city of New Berne has at present a contract with the oyster-canning factories for filling with shells a dock in the harbor, and that therefore a sufficient supply of shells for the proposed road could not probably be obtained this season.

"I estimate the cost of a macadam road as follows:

6,000 cubic yards earth work, at 20 cents	$1,200
5,000 cubic yards macadam, in place, at $3	15,000
1,000 cubic yards bank gravel on top, at $2	2,000
Drainage and sundries	500
Engineering and contingencies	1,300
Total	20,000

"It might, perhaps, be done for less, but it is better to make the appropriation $20,000 and then only the amount necessary need be expended.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"W. H. OWEN,
"Civil Engineer, Quartermaster's Department.

"Hon. F. M. SIMMONS, M. C.,
"House of Representatives.

"Your committee think there is urgent necessity for the immediate construction of this road, and recommend that the said bill, after being amended by striking out, in line 9, the word 'thirty,' and inserting for it the word 'twenty,' do pass."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi what is the nature of the soil between the city of New Berne, over this distance of a mile and a half, and this cemetery, in order to understand what is the necessity of expending $20,000 to build a macadam road to this cemetery, which ought to have a nice and convenient road to it we all agree, but if the soil in the neighborhood of New Berne is like a good deal of the rest of North Carolina that I have seen—and I speak of it with great respect as neither of her Senators is here to defend her—there is no need of building a macadam road at that great expense as distinguished from an ordinary dirt road, such as we have in Vermont. But if it is a deep clay soil it might be a different thing; but a good, ordinary turnpike road, in almost all soils except the deep black soils of some bottoms, is perfectly adequate and sufficient for every such purpose. I should like to know what sort of a country that is?

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1451) for the completion of a public building at Wichita, Kans.;

A bill (H. R. 9512) for the erection of a public building at Brownsville, Tex.;

A bill (H. R. 10234) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 183) authorizing the loan of tents and tent equipage to the veteran organizations of the Society of the Army of the Potomac.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7255) for the relief of A. B. Tyan.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8565) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2930) to authorize the Paris, Choctaw and Little Rock Railway Company to construct a bridge across Red River at or near Hook's Ferry, Red River County, Texas, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

TENTS FOR GETTYSBURGH CELEBRATION.

Mr. WALTHALL. Mr. President——

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment to make a request? I ask the Senate if it will not take up and consider immediately the joint resolution concerning the loan of tents to the Society of the Army of the Potomac just received from the other House. My reason for asking is that the time is very short indeed to get these tents.

Mr. WALTHALL. I am perfectly willing to yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. Res. 183) authorizing the loan of tents and tent equipage to the veteran organizations of the Society of the Army of the Potomac; which was read the first time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed now to the consideration of this joint resolution. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Connecticut please explain that resolution?

Mr. HAWLEY. The Society of the Army of the Potomac thought it desirable to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the great battle of Gettysburgh, and in a fraternal spirit invited those who had been on the opposite side to come. To their great surprise the invitation is being accepted very generally. Arrangements for transportation have been made at very small figures indeed. The attendance promises to be so large that the Society of the Army of the Potomac is a good deal alarmed concerning the entertainment of these people at the small village of Gettysburgh. The ordinary three or four thousand dollars from its own little revenues devoted to such entertainments is entirely swamped, and in their despair they turned to Congress for a little money to help them out. In this they were not successful, but this will enable them to do something towards the end in view, and the old soldiers have drawn this resolution and it has been amended in such a way as to put the tents in charge of the Quartermaster's Department. I think the Senate will be willing to concur with the House, which has passed it this morning.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEW BERNE NATIONAL CEMETERY ROAD.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4320) to authorize the construction of a graveled or macadamized road from the city of New Berne, N. C., to the national cemetery near said city.

Mr. WALTHALL. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont asked me a question which I am not sure that I am prepared to answer accurately. He asked me what was the character of the soil in the neighborhood of New Berne, N. C., where this cemetery road is proposed to be constructed. I would have said, but for an expression in the report, from my general knowledge of that country that it was sandy soil; but I see from the report that the only approach to the cemetery now is by a narrow, private cart-road, liable at any time to be closed by the owners of the lands over which it runs, and which, during certain seasons of the year, is grown up with weeds and made almost impassable by the encroachments of the plowmen who cultivate the adjacent fields.

From that I infer that the land is used for cultivation, and is not sandy, as I would have otherwise supposed.

It does not occur to me that the objection made to this bill by the Senator from Vermont ought to prevail, no matter what the character of the soil may be. There is no means of approaching this cemetery where there are more than 3,000 Federal soldiers buried, except by a narrow road liable to be closed up by the land owners, thus cutting the cemetery off from all approach from all directions.

As to the necessity of a macadamized road there, I may state that I can see no reason why this particular cemetery should be discriminated against as to the character of the approach to it provided by legislation. I think I am safe in saying that all the national cemeteries, at least in the Southern portion of the Union, have had macadamized roads or other permanent roads provided for them when Congress has been applied to; and I do not know of a single instance where an application has been made for a reasonable appropriation for that purpose, accompanied by an estimate from a proper engineering officer, when this body has acted adversely upon such a proposition.

Now, whether the present road be a sandy road—a very uncomfortable sort of road to ride over, as the Senator knows, and there are many such roads in that country—or whether it be an ordinary dirt road liable to become muddy and impassable in the winter season, it seems to me that in the one case or the other the Government ought to prepare a proper approach to its cemetery where 3,000 Federal soldiers are buried, and that it ought to be a permanent road; it ought to be a road durable and lasting, just such as are provided for other cemeteries.

The engineer in charge has estimated that it will cost within the neighborhood of if not quite the amount provided in the bill. The report shows that there is now no proper approach to that cemetery, and that the only means of reaching it may at any time be cut off, and the custom has been to make provision for macadamized roads under these circumstances. I see no reason why there should be an exception made against this cemetery. I know that there are several of these cemeteries in the Southern States, with which I am more familiar than I am with those in the Northern States. I know that there is one in the neighborhood of New Orleans, where, before Congress took action in the matter, the road in the winter was miry and almost impassable, and I know there is one in the State of Mississippi, in the northeast corner, at Corinth, where the region is high and dry, and the road in the summer time was reasonably good, but Congress when applied to made provision for a macadamized or a gravel road in both those cases, and in three or four others which I could mention.

In fact, sir, I know no case where Congress has been applied to to provide a permanent, lasting road to one of these cemeteries, and there was no proper approach already, where the application has been refused.

I am sorry that I can not state to the Senator from Vermont exactly the character of the soil, but I take it that it is soil which is cultivable, from the fact that it is stated that the road is liable to be interfered with by the encroachments of farmers who cultivate the adjacent fields. But whatever the character of the soil, the road ought to be constructed as proposed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think I shall be suspected——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has spoken once on this bill. He can only proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. WALTHALL. I hope the Senator will be allowed to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think I shall be suspected, Mr. President, by any soldier of the United States of an intention to discriminate against any soldier of the United States, dead or alive. I think the soldiers of the United States, so far as I know them—and I know a good many of them who are citizens as well—desire that Congress, in maintaining proper respect for and taking care with proper decency of the burial grounds of their old comrades, shall do it as their own States do in respect to taking care of their dead and their cemeteries, and that is, do everything that is just and decent and proper and necessary, but not to be extravagant and not to do things that are wild and unnecessary. In the part of the country where I live, where there are some of these cemeteries and many other cemeteries, and little hilly places that are devoted also to other purposes, anybody who proposed to build a macadam road from the village nearest to one of these cemeteries would be considered either insane or corrupt, unless the nature of the ground on which the road was to be built required it to be macadam for the ordinary and proper and convenient purposes of passage. Honor to the dead soldier, as we understand it, does not consist so much in the character of the materials which compose the road that leads to his grave as it does in imputing to his memory other considerations and a different kind of gratitude.

So I think I shall not be considered saying anything injurious to the gratitude that we all owe to the dead and to the living as well; by suggesting, by way of inquiry rather than otherwise, that the idea of paying more money for a road to a soldiers' cemetery than would be paid for a road to any other cemetery, and the useless expenditure of money in useless contrivances in bringing rock to make macadam by railroad 75 miles unless the nature of the soil requires that sort of thing, would be an objection to anybody that studied it. So I leave that part of it there and come to the real point.

I said before that there ought to be a road there and a public road which the private owners could not close up if they wished to do so, and a good road, and whatever money is necessary for that purpose ought to be appropriated; but what is unnecessary, like laying a pavement, sending down the asphaltum or the granite-block men, is certainly doing a wrong to the soldiers of the United States who pay taxes, and doing no good to the memory and no honor to the memory of those who lie buried there or in any other place. And inasmuch as in the part of the country with which I am familiar it never has been thought useful or necessary to build a macadam road where gravel and the ordinary soil properly taken care of would do, I made these inquiries.

To continue appropriations of public money for public buildings in unnecessary places, unnecessary expenditures for doing things that ought to be done, expending more money than is decently useful and necessary for the object, I do not think will commend itself to the people of the United States, or to the soldiers of the United States, and it should not to anybody else.

I do not know any reason therefore for going into a measure of this kind in respect of the character of the materials of which this road is to be constructed as distinguished from having a good road there. I do not see the use of spending more money than is necessary.

I do not find in the report any statement at all that a macadam road is required for public convenience, and utility, and ease in reaching this place; but it seems to be taken for granted that $20,000—over $10,000 a mile—is to be spent for building a road, for the land is not to cost anything, the mere macadam that is nine-tenths of it evidently (the breaking of the rock, the hauling of it, and laying it down), and we are to spend this for building a road a mile and a half from the little city of New Berne to this sacred spot. As representing the soldier taxpayers, I call attention to it because, so far as it appears, I do not see the necessity, while we must have a road there, of spending so much money in building it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, in some cases these cemeteries are upon public roads already existing, which the cities and the localities in general are bound to keep up; but in a number of other cases—and I presume it to be so in this—the public in general has no interest in the road. The county authorities there outside the limits of the village of New Berne are under no legal obligation to make a respectable road, and the result of refusing to appropriate in this case would simply be to leave this with this ordinary old road across the fields to grow up with jimson weeds and sometimes crowded upon and practically abandoned.

Now, as to the character of the road, it is a common thing to build a good piece of road down that coast of shell. There is nothing finer than an excellent shell road. That could be done in this case probably by waiting awhile, but there is a contract, I understand from the report of the engineer, that calls for a good deal of the shell that is furnished about New Berne to shell a dock in the harbor, and therefore if the road is to be a shell road the building of it must be postponed for some time. There is said to be no objection to waiting a year or so until the supply of shell is ready to build an excellent shell road. But the bill does not require the expenditure of $20,000. It gives that as the extreme limit. "So much thereof as may be needed" is to be used for building the road.

I do not think that the Military Committee, in recommending the passage of the bill reported by the Senator from Mississippi, has departed at all from the general policy of the Government, which has been to put these cemeteries in excellent order, build a respectable and nothing more than a respectable wall, and to put a good porter and keeper and lodge there, and then, if needed, to make the approach to the cemetery passable, because in many cases these cemeteries being kept so nicely are places of public resort, and I am glad indeed that they are. It is becoming in the Government to keep them in order.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I am willing to vote whatever is necessary to make a proper road to and proper provision for the decent, respectable preservation of the cemeteries for the soldiers; but it occurs to me that one way of testifying our respect for their memories is to respect the rights of the living so far as not to vote extravagant and unreasonable appropriations. The idea of appropriating $10,000 a mile for the construction of a road of this kind, it seems to me, is not just to the living. I shall not, therefore, vote for the bill.

Mr. WALTHALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi having once spoken, is there objection to his speaking further? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALTHALL. I only wish to say a word in reply to the Senator from Vermont.

I do not agree with the Senator that the roads to these national cemeteries ought to be constructed with the same idea of economy that they are to private cemeteries. As a purely economical scheme, it would perhaps have been well not to have established these cemeteries. The cemetery at New Berne itself was established at great cost. There was considerable outlay of money, in my judgment, very properly expended in the preparation of this cemetery—they are all alike, I believe—in beautifying the grounds, providing the headstones, and in inclosing the grounds with a wall such as is described in this report.

We are not able always to show our respect for the dead resting in private cemeteries by an outlay like that. We are not always able to provide a handsome two-story building for the person in charge of a private cemetery, as is done, it appears, in this national cemetery at New Berne. We would like, if we were able, to beautify the private cemeteries as these national cemeteries are beautified. We would like, if we were able, to inclose them in the same way, and provide a superintendent, to be liberally compensated for his services. But it is not always that that can be done in the case of a private cemetery. The Government, however, is able to provide a permanent, lasting, and creditable approach to each of these national cemeteries, and it has never refused to do this. So far as my knowledge extends, whenever application has been made to the Congress of the United States to do for the national cemeteries elsewhere what this bill proposes to do for this cemetery in North Carolina, it has been granted.

The Senator says that in the report of the engineer officer it is not recommended that the road be a macadam road. That is true. He was not asked for his views as to the character of the road. Congress having always determined in every single instance that I can now recall when a road was to be constructed to one of these national cemeteries that it should be a macadam road or a shell road or a gravel road, it was not for the engineer to say that this ought or ought not to be a road of one of those classes. He was asked what the expense would be, and he gives the reasons why a shell road could not be constructed at that particular point, and the reasons why a macadam road would have to be resorted to.

The distinguished Senator from Vermont seems to have been seized to-day with rather a sudden spasm of economy in reference to this matter. He considers that this appropriation is extravagant; and if he can induce a majority of the Senate to change its policy as to this matter already adopted with reference to other cemeteries, I am sure I am content; but for one I do not think it is an extravagant use of the public money to provide a permanent approach to a national cemetery, which has been established at a considerable expense to the Government, to make it conform in its plan and appearance to the approaches to other national cemeteries of the Government.

I say that if on the idea of economy this bill be defeated, then there is a discrimination against this particular cemetery at this particular point, and the Senate of the United States will refuse to do for this cemetery, where there are 3,000 Federal soldiers buried, what it did without a word of objection within the last six weeks for another in the same section of the Union where there were less than 1,300. If it is proposed to adopt a more economical system or plan with reference to the approaches of these national cemeteries now, when roads have been constructed to nearly all of them, the responsibility shall not rest on me. I reported this bill, and I shall support it, because it is doing for this cemetery what has been uniformly done for all others in like condition.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

WILLIAM T. CRUMP.

The bill (S. 353) for the relief of William T. Crump was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill will be passed over, the majority and minority reports not having been printed, and the Senator who reported the bill being absent.

RAILROAD BRIDGE OVER RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

The bill (H. R. 2527) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North by the Duluth, Rainy Lake River and Southwestern Railway Company was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 6, line 17, after the word "reasonable," to strike out "rates or," and in line 19, after the word "such," to strike out "rates or;" so as to read:

Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railway trains, and, at the option of the said corporation, may be used for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and for foot-passengers, for reasonable tolls to be fixed by the Secretary of War; and the Secretary of War shall have the right, from time to time, to revise such tolls.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, after the word "act," at the end of line 1, to strike out "so as to prevent or remove all material and substantial obstructions to the navigation of said river by the construction of the said bridge," and in line 6, after the word "act," to insert "so as to prevent or remove all material and substantial obstruction to the navigation of said river by the construction of said bridge;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved; and any alterations or changes that may be required by Congress in the bridge constructed under this act so as to prevent or remove all material and substantial obstruction to the navigation of said river by the construction of said bridge shall be made by the corporation owning or controlling the same, at its own expense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 4, after the word "in," to strike out "and for any district in which said bridge or obstruction touches" and insert "whose territorial jurisdiction said bridge or any part thereof is located;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction caused by this bridge to the free navigation of said river, the cause may be tried before the circuit court of the United States in whose territorial jurisdiction said bridge or any part thereof is located.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On page 3, line 41, after the word "war" at the end of section 2, I move to strike out the period and to add:

And no such change shall be made until so approved.

The same amendment that was agreed to in the Senate yesterday, in substance, on another bill of this character.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

RED RIVER BRIDGE AT HOOK'S FERRY, TEXAS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2930) to authorize the Paris, Choctaw and Little Rock Railway Company to construct a bridge across Red River at or near Hook's Ferry, Red River County, Texas, which was, on page 2, line 10, to strike out the word "change" and insert the word "changed."

Mr. COKE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment be again read and read in connection with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read, and also the part of the bill proposed to be amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. Line 23, page 2, the proposed amendment is to strike out the word "change" and insert "changed;" so as to read:

And the said structure shall be at all times so kept and managed as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels through or under said structure; and the said structure shall be changed, at the cost and expense of the owners thereof, etc.

Mr. COKE. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that the amendment of the House is simply the correction of an error in the copying of the bill as sent from the Senate. The word "change" was used when it should have been "changed."

The amendment was concurred in.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

A bill (H. R. 1451) for the completion of a public building at Wichita, Kans.; and

A bill (H. R. 9512) for the erection of a public building at Brownsville, Tex.

The bill (H. R. 10234) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Mr. FRYE. In my absence Order of Business 665 was passed over. It is the bill (S. 1786) to regulate appointments in the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States. I ask unanimous consent to go back to that order, and take up the bill for consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the Senator from Maine who reported this bill explain the proviso, whether the effect of the proviso and the bill together is to legislate out of office the whole body of these surgeons who are now in service, or what it means. I see the last clause is, "And the President is authorized to nominate for confirmation the officers in the service on the date of the passage of this act," which I suppose he would have the right to do anyway. I should like an explanation as to what the effect of the bill is in regard to the officers now in service.

Mr. FRYE. I do not understand that it legislates any officer out of service. That amendment was put in at the request of the Treasury Department. The bill was reported to the Senate two years ago by our committee, and reported again a year ago, and a year ago the Secretary of the Treasury called the attention of the committee to a necessary amendment, and that clause is the amendment. The Secretary of the Treasury writes now:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 29, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of February 27, concerning Senate bill 1786 to regulate appointments in the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States, and in reply thereto I transmit herewith a copy of a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, written February 6, 1886, relative to a bill containing identical provisions.

The views of this Department have undergone no change from those therein expressed.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD,
Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

This is the letter referred to:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 6, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter from the clerk of your committee, under date of February 4, 1886, transmitting, in accordance with the directions of the committee, Senate bill No. 780, "to regulate appointments in the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States," in which I am requested to furnish the committee with suggestions as I may deem proper touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage, and in answer to respectfully inform you that the bill is in accordance with the various recommendations of this Department that have been made from time to time based upon reports of the Supervising Surgeon-General.

It appears that there is at present time no law specifically regulating the appointment of medical officers in the Marine-Hospital Service, and the appointments are made in accordance with the general authority conferred on the Secretary of the Treasury, to direct the affairs of the Marine-Hospital Service. Hence the propriety of the passage of an act regulating these appointments. An examination of the text of the bill shows it to be substantially a transcript of the regulations of the Department which have been in force since 1879, and which were lately repromulgated and approved by the President under date of April 24, 1885. It must be sufficiently obvious to any one that medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service should be thoroughly versed in the different branches of medicine as set forth in the bill and the incorporation of these requirements in the statutes would seem to be necessary. Attention is invited to page 52 of my annual report for 1885, pages 11 and 12 of the report of the Supervising Surgeon-General; also to the letter of Mr. Secretary SHERMAN, dated January 4, 1880, transmitting to the House of Representatives a draught of a bill having for its object the same purpose as that of the bill now under consideration. The present bill, if passed, will place the officers of the Marine-Hospital Service on the same footing as those of the revenue-marine, and will not materially increase the expense of the service.

* * * * * * *

It is believed that the purposes of the proposed law will be more effectually secured if the plan of examination shall be fixed as suggested.

Very respectfully,

D. MANNING, Secretary.

Hon. S. J. R. MCMILLAN,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

The omitted clause in this letter referred to amendments necessary to former bill, which are included in this.

That was the amendment respecting the examination. It has been recommended ever since 1880, has been reported by our committee as many as three times, and has passed the Senate I think twice.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not making any observations adverse or otherwise on this bill. I was only endeavoring to ascertain what the committee understood it to mean in respect of the status of the officers now in the service when this bill becomes a law.

I should have supposed from the first section and the first part of the second section that it did not affect those now in the service, and that they would continue to be medical officers until there should be a vacancy which was to be filled up hereafter by appointment made by the President and Senate, and an examination is very properly required; but at the end of the bill is an authority to the President to nominate for confirmation the officers in the service at the date of passage of this act. Applying that to the first clause, that medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service shall hereafter be appointed by the President, I should be under the impression that the effect of it was intended to be, and probably is, that these officers would all be out and that they must get in by the method prescribed in the act.

I am not saying that that is good or bad, but only that it ought to be understood which way it is. If it is not that way, then it is very clear that this last clause is entirely superfluous and means nothing at all.

Mr. FRYE. It is so long ago since this bill was reported that I have forgotten.

I made some inquiries, not of the Secretary of the Treasury, but of one of the officers who came to see me about it. The officers are all in favor of it, and this is the bill exactly as it was transmitted to us by the Secretary of the Treasury after we had amended the bill as he once asked before. I am not prepared to say what the effect of that proviso is.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I take the liberty of moving that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to say to the Senator from Vermont that the chairman of the Committee on Pensions had contemplated asking the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We can take them up to-morrow morning the first thing after the routine business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Wednesday, June 20, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 19, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

VETO MESSAGE—DOLLY BLAZER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 3959, entitled "An act granting a pension to Dolly Blazer."

The husband of the beneficiary named in this bill was apparently a good soldier and was confined for a time in a Confederate prison. He was mustered out of the service in June, 1865, and never applied for a pension.

He died in 1878, leaving as survivors his widow and several children, two of whom are alleged to be still under sixteen years of age.

The cause of the soldier's death was yellow fever. There is in my mind no doubt of this fact; and the attempt to establish any other cause of death, if successful, would go far towards fixing a precedent for the rejection of all evidence which stood in the way of a claim for pension.

The bill herewith returned is disapproved for the reason that the death of the soldier had no relation to his military service; and I do not think there should be a discrimination in favor of this applicant and against many thousands of widows fully as well entitled.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 18, 1888.

Mr. WILKINS. I move that the message be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

VETO MESSAGE—ELIJAH MARTIN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 5522, entitled "An act for the relief of Elijah Martin."

By this bill it is proposed to increase the pension now paid to the beneficiary therein named, who was a soldier in the war of 1812, from $8 to $20 per month.

Prior to May 22, 1888, an application was made for reimbursement of the expenses attending the last sickness and burial of this pensioner, and on the day mentioned such application was transmitted to the proper auditing officer for adjustment.

I have no other information of the death of this soldier; but as his age is stated in the report of the House committee to be eighty-seven years, and as there can hardly be a mistake as to the identity of the person named in the application mentioned, I am satisfied that the beneficiary has died since the introduction of the bill for his relief.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 18, 1888.

Mr. WILKINS. I move that the message be referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

DEATH OF EMPEROR FREDERICK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a letter from the Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Germany, conveying the thanks of the Emperor of Germany for the resolutions of sympathy on the occasion of the death of the late Emperor; which was ordered to be printed, and laid on the table.

REPAIR OF SEA-WALL, ETC., WILLET'S POINT, NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of the Secretary of War of appropriation for repairs to sea-wall and wharf at Willet's Point, New York; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A. B. TYAN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7255) for the relief of A. B. Tyan, with Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the only effect of the Senate amendment in this case is to correct the name of the beneficiary.

Mr. WILKINS. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

PARIS, CHOCTAW AND LITTLE ROCK RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2930) to authorize the Paris, Choctaw and Little Rock Railway Company to construct a bridge across Red River at or near Hooks' Ferry, Red River County, Texas.

Mr. CRISP. That bill, I think, is identical with the House bill 10063, reported from the Committee on Commerce of the House. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered at the present time.

Mr. WILKINS. Will it take much time?

Mr. CRISP. No.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to any bill being passed in this House that has not been read.

Mr. CRISP. I do not ask to dispense with the reading of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection, if the bill is read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Paris, Choctaw and Little Rock Railway Company, a corporation duly created and existing under the laws of the State of Texas, be, and is hereby, authorized to build a bridge across the Red River at or near Hooks' Ferry, Red River County, Texas, the said bridge to be so constructed as not to interfere with the navigation of said river: Provided, That any bridge constructed under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be known and recognized as a post-route, and the same is hereby declared to be a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States, or for through passengers or freight passing over said bridge, than the rate per mile paid for their transportation over the railroads leading to the said bridge; and the United States shall have the right of way for a postal telegraph across said bridge.

SEC. 2. That any bridge constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design of the drawings of the bridge and piers, and a map of the location, giving, for the space of at least one mile above and one mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore lines at high and low water, and the direction and strength of the currents at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built; and if any change be made in the plan of construction of said bridge during the progress of the work thereon, or before the completion of said bridge, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and the said structure shall be at all times so kept and managed as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels through or under said structure; and the said structure shall be change, at the cost and expense of the owners thereof, from time to time, as the Secretary of War may direct, so as to preserve the free and convenient navigation of said river; and the authority to erect and continue said bridge shall be subject to the revocation or modification by law whenever the public good shall, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, so require, without any expense or charge to the United States; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river caused or alleged to be caused by said bridge, suit may be brought in the circuit courts of the United States of Texas or Arkansas, in whose jurisdiction any portion of said bridge may be located.

SEC. 3. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time; and that if at any time navigation of the said river shall in any manner be obstructed or impaired by the bridge authorized by this act to be constructed, the Secretary of War shall have authority, and it shall be his duty, to require the said railway company to alter and change the said bridge, at its own expense, in such manner as may be proper to secure free and complete navigation without impediment; and if, upon such reasonable notice to said railway company to make such change or improvements, the said company fails to do so, the Secretary of War shall have the authority to make the same, and all the rights conferred by this act shall be forfeited; and Congress shall have power to do any and all things necessary to secure the free navigation of the river.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker I observe from the reading that there is a clerical error in the bill. I ask that it may be corrected.

The SPEAKER. It appears to be the omission of a single letter. The word "change" should be "changed."

Mr. RANDALL. It is a Senate bill. How have we the power to change the bill except by amendment?

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by amendment. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] asks unanimous consent to amend so as to make the word "change" "changed." If there be no objection that amendment will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. House bill 10063, on the same subject, will be laid on the table, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT RESERVATION, ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (S. 2946) granting the use of certain lands to the city of St. Augustine, Fla., for a public park, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I ask unanimous consent that that bill be considered at this time. I will state to the House that the bill carries no money appropriation. There is a Government reservation in the city of St. Augustine which is an eye-sore and is now used as a common, and the city desires to get police jurisdiction over it in order to improve it and make a park. By this bill the Government reserves to itself the right to resume jurisdiction at any time and retains the fee title.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MACDONALD. I object.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his objection.

Mr. MACDONALD. I object. I have been three months here trying to get recognition to pass a little bill and I have not got it yet.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. That does not seem to me to be a good reason for opposing this bill. As objection is made, Mr. Speaker, I ask that for the present the bill lie on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

OHIO CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3182) making appropriation to enable the several Executive Departments of the Government and the Bureau of Agriculture, the Government Printing Office, and the Smithsonian Institution, including the National Museum and the Commission of Fish and Fisheries, to participate in the Ohio Centennial, to be held at Columbus, Ohio, from September 4 to October 19, 1888; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ANACOSTIA AND POTOMAC RAILROAD, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1051) to amend the act giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad in the District of Columbia; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

WILLIAM B. STOKES AND OTHERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2948) for the relief of William B. Stokes, M. M. Brien, sr., and William T. Haskins; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PUBLIC BUILDING, OAKLAND, CAL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1553) to provide for the purchase of a site for the erection of a public building at Oakland, in the State of California; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

NEWTON S. MURPHY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 157) for the relief of Newton S. Murphy; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

WILLIAM N. KEIGHTLEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 111) for the relief of William N. Keightley; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. PENINGTON, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence until Thursday next, on account of important business.

PUBLIC BUILDING, STATESVILLE, N. C.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1705) to provide for the erection of a public building at Statesville, N. C., and that the bill be now considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a site, and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the courts of the United States, post-office, and other offices for Government uses, at Statesville, N. C. The site, and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $150,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $150,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of North Carolina shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds recommended an amendment reducing the amount from $150,000 to $75,000.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have the report in that case read.

The report (by Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, having carefully considered the bill H. R. 1705, submit the following report:

By act of Congress, approved June 4, 1872, a term of the United States circuit and district courts for the western district of North Carolina is held twice a year at the town of Statesville, N. C., and since that date, during a period of about fourteen years, a vast quantity of important litigation has been determined in said courts. The whole number of cases instituted and disposed of during said period of fourteen years number nearly 2,800, or an average per year of about 200. Many of the civil cases have been of very great importance, and the business of the courts is steadily on the increase. The courts are held in the county court-house, a small building insufficient for the purpose. There is no proper place or office for the safe-keeping of the court records, which are in constant peril of destruction by fire.

Statesville is a prosperous town in Western North Carolina, situated in the center of a rapidly increasing population, embracing a large number of counties, from which the business of the courts is derived. The commercial transactions and importance of the place are considerable. It is accessible from the east and west by the Western North Carolina Railroad, and from the south by the Atlantic, Tennessee and Ohio Railroad. A new railroad is being extended to the northwest, and is now in running operation to the town of Taylorsville, a distance of 20 miles, its farther destination being the Upper Yadkin valley. The territory of which Statesville is the center pays a large amount of internal revenue, the amount annually collected through the revenue office located there being about $250,000. There is also a large and constantly increasing mail service at this point, it being the distributing office of quite a number of important mail routes.

Your committee are of the opinion that a public building is greatly needed at Statesville for the accommodation of the courts of the United States, post-office, revenue office, and other offices for the public uses, and believe it would be true wisdom and economy for the Government to erect a public building there, as provided in H. R. 1705. A similar bill received a favorable report by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress.

We therefore recommend that the bill under consideration be amended by striking out the words "one hundred and fifty," in lines 11, 12, and 21, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "seventy-five" wherever the words "one hundred and fifty" occur, and that as thus amended the bill do pass.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members addressed the Chair.

Mr. CROUSE was recognized.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KILGORE. I desire to know whether there is any way for a gentleman to get recognized without going down into that bull-pit in front of the desk. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not inform the gentleman. The Chair can recognize only one gentleman at a time.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that, sir, but I want to be the gentleman recognized. [Laughter.]

PUBLIC BUILDING, AKRON, OHIO.

Mr. CROUSE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 349) for the erection of a public building at Akron, Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read.

The House report was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not notice the amount that the bill appropriates.

The SPEAKER. It appropriates $75,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no statement in the report as to the necessity for this building, and I hope we shall have some statement on that point before the bill is considered.

Mr. CROUSE. I desire to state to the House and to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that perhaps there has not been a bill presented for the erection of a public building during the present Congress at a point where the amount of mail matter in proportion to the population of the city exceeds the amount at Akron, Ohio.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If the House is asked to pass this bill, we ought to have some information about it. We can not hear a word that the gentleman from Ohio is saying.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This is a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The request has been made and has not yet been granted.

Mr. MACDONALD. Is this a Senate bill?

Mr. CROUSE. It is.

Mr. MACDONALD. Then I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to withhold that call for a moment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I think we ought to have some opportunity on this side of the House to submit requests for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House, this day, immediately after the reading of the Journal, has been set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DIBBLE. After conference with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I wish to say that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will not press the execution of their order to-day, provided that by unanimous consent there may be substituted any day, except Friday, succeeding the day on which the sundry civil appropriation bill shall be concluded in the House. I therefore ask unanimous consent for the substitution of such a day.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that, so far as I am concerned.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the order setting apart this day for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be postponed until the first day, other than Friday, after the conclusion of the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to name a later day than the one he has suggested. The naval appropriation bill is now ready for consideration in Committee of the Whole, and we would like to take it up as soon as the sundry civil bill is concluded.

Mr. DIBBLE. I can not extend my request so as to give priority to another bill. The sundry civil bill happens to be now pending, and it is only with the view of not interrupting its consideration that I make this request for unanimous consent.

Mr. HERBERT. Then I object.

Mr. DIBBLE. Then I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills under the special order.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry, whether this order in regard to business of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is a continuing order, and whether in the resolution granting this day for the consideration of such business revenue and appropriation bills are excepted?

The SPEAKER. The order is not a continuing one, and it provides that it shall not interfere with the consideration of revenue or appropriation bills. So that if a motion should be made to-day to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of revenue or appropriation bills that question would be first put to the House. That is the only effect of the qualification in the resolution.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask my friend from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] to withdraw his objection. We only ask one day; and our committee has already lost one of the days assigned to it.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us fix next Thursday.

Mr. WILKINS. Let me suggest next Tuesday, as it will be necessary, I presume, on these public building bills to have full House.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely necessary that we pass these appropriation bills before the 30th of June; and I hope no business of the House will be interposed to prevent their prompt consideration, so that they may go over to the Senate. I have given way in regard to one of the most important bills before us for the very purpose of enabling the appropriation bills to be sent to the Senate. I hope my friend from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] will not insist on occupying to-day, but will let the Committee on Appropriations go on with the sundry civil bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina to name next Thursday for the consideration of the bills of his committee.

Mr. DIBBLE. I modify my request for unanimous consent so as to ask that next Thursday be substituted for to-day in the order with regard to public building bills.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Not to interfere with appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. That is already a part of the terms of the order. All that the gentleman from South Carolina asks is that the order shall be postponed from to-day till Thursday.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds would have Thursday upon the same conditions that they now have to-day.

The SPEAKER. If the change asked by the gentleman from South Carolina should be made, and the House on Thursday should prefer to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of an appropriation bill rather than for the consideration of the special order, it could be done.

Mr. RANDALL. And the substitution of Thursday for to-day will not interfere with the business which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] has in charge. Whether the House should go on with his bill would be a question under the control of the majority.

Mr. DIBBLE. As I understand, if Thursday next should be assigned to the business of our committee and the gentleman from Alabama on that day should desire to have the naval appropriation bill considered, that motion would have precedence.

The SPEAKER. That question would have precedence.

Mr. DIBBLE. Then I ask unanimous consent that the order fixing to-day for business of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be postponed until Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me a moment in order that I may bring up a matter which was pending at the adjournment yesterday.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIBBLE. In case the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the appropriation bill is voted down, will it then be in order to renew my motion?

The SPEAKER. It will be.

Mr. RANDALL. I am anxious to give the gentleman a day for his committee.

Mr. DIBBLE. And I am very anxious to have a day; but it seems that members here will not permit the arrangement to be made.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield to me for just a moment to submit a resolution for present consideration.

Mr. RANDALL. How long will it take?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Not exceeding five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well.

LOAN OF TENTS, ETC., GETTYSBURGH REUNION.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution authorizing the loan of tents and tent equipage to the veteran organizations of the Society of the Army of the Potomac.

Whereas at the annual reunion of the Society of the Army of the Potomac, held at Saratoga, N. Y., in 1887, a resolution was passed extending to all the survivors of the battle of Gettysburgh an invitation to meet in fraternal reunion on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the battle of Gettysburgh, July 1, 2, and 3, 1888, on the field of Gettysburgh, and as the invitation has been generally extended and accepted: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to loan to the committee in charge of quarters of the Society of the Army of the Potomac such tents and tent equipage as may be needed for the sheltering of the veteran organizations participating in said anniversary, and that to prevent loss or damage resulting from the use of such tents and tent equipage, the Secretary of War is authorized to detail troops to take charge of the same and to provide for their safe-keeping and transportation under the direction of the Quartermaster-General.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 183) was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

Mr. BURROWS. I sincerely hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. The form in which this resolution is now presented makes it entirely unobjectionable, and I hope it will be passed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the gentleman from Texas to withdraw the objection, as it will be too late to be of any service if it is not passed at once.

Mr. KILGORE. Is this simply for the loan of the tents?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes, sir; that is all.

Mr. KILGORE. Very well; then I will withdraw the objection.

There being no further objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of general appropriation bills.

Mr. MORRILL. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent that committees having reports to make may be permitted to file them at the Clerk's desk for reference.

There was no objection.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

SARAH A. BISHARD.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 10570) for the relief of Sarah A. Bishard, administratrix of Daniel Bishard, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELISHA M. SHADDEN.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 10571) for the relief of Elisha M. Shadden; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM A. WALTHALL.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6227) for the relief of William A. Walthall; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INCOME TAX ILLEGALLY COLLECTED.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10416) to restore to Simpson County court, of Kentucky, a certain amount of money illegally collected as an income tax; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NORTHWEST SOLDIERS' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. FORD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably with amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 172) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish tents to the Northwest Soldiers' Association, of Iowa, for use at a reunion to be held at Sioux City, Iowa, on October 2 to 6, 1888, inclusive; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

OVERDUE TAXES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10060) prescribing the times for sales and for notice of sales of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HEMPHILL also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with the amendments of the Senate the bill (H. R. 3290) to amend section 685 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANNA BOPPELL.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9784) granting a pension to Anna Boppell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY A. COVEY.

Mr. SAWYER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6309) for the relief of Mary A. Covey; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH DOMM.

Mr. SAWYER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2451) placing the name of Elizabeth Domm on the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HARRIET WELCH.

Mr. SAWYER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2899) granting a pension to Harriet Welch; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY M. SHATTUCK.

Mr. SAWYER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 3076) granting a pension to Mary M. Shattuck; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CAROLINE R. HAZELTINE.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2385) granting a pension to Caroline R. Hazeltine; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY O. HALL.

Mr. GALLINGER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 889) granting a pension to Mary O. Hall; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CATHERINE TATE.

Mr. GALLINGER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2483) granting a pension to Catherine Tate; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SARAH E. BOULTER.

Mr. GALLINGER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2895) granting a pension to Sarah E. Boulter; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES J. ESTY.

Mr. GALLINGER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2665) granting a pension to Charles J. Esty; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DANIEL K. SMITH.

Mr. GALLINGER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2101) granting a pension to Daniel K. Smith; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADRIAN C. DODGE.

Mr. GALLINGER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably with amendment the bill (S. 885) to increase the pension of Adrian C. Dodge; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. WILBURN.

Mr. GALLINGER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1750) granting a pension to George W. Wilburn; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CALVIN J. COWLES.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 10572) for the relief of Calvin J. Cowles; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. SIMMONS also, from the Committee on Claims, reported back bills of the following titles, for which the foregoing was in the nature of a substitute; and the same were laid on the table:

A bill (H. R. 4698) for the relief of Calvin J. Cowles; and

A bill (H. R. 9762) for the relief of George B. Hanna.

RICHARD W. MEADE, DECEASED.

Mr. HOOKER, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back favorably with amendment the bill (H. R. 6336) for the relief of the estate of Richard W. Meade, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. RANDALL, the House divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 52.

Mr. KILGORE. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. DIBBLE. I understand the gentleman from Texas is willing to withdraw his objection to the request for unanimous consent to fix Thursday for the consideration of the special order which was fixed for to-day.

Mr. KILGORE. I will withdraw that objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection that the special order of to-day be postponed to Thursday next, upon precisely the same conditions as now exist?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is agreed to; and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] will please take the chair.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I did not withdraw my objection to the point that no quorum had voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman as withdrawing that objection also, and that it was intended to solve the difficulty.

Mr. KILGORE. No, sir; I withdrew the objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina only.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. KILGORE and Mr. MCSHANE were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 106, noes 2.

Mr. KILGORE. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So (no further count being demanded) the motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time remains for debate on the Library clause of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House debate was limited to one hour and a half. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] occupied fifteen minutes. There remains an hour and fifteen minutes.

Mr. RYAN. My friend from New York [Mr. NUTTING] desires to make some observations on this bill, and as he was a member of the committee in the Forty-eighth Congress that reported the bill which became a law, providing for the construction of this building, I desire to yield to him twenty minutes of the time to which I may be entitled.

Mr. NUTTING. Mr. Chairman, I had the honor to be one of the members of the Committee on the Library in the Forty-eighth Congress. The whole subject of the erection of a suitable Library building for the United States of America was investigated by me. With the greatest possible care and pains I did investigate the necessity of the proposed Library building. I tried to find out, and in a measure succeeded, what the Old World had done in regard to such structures. I also examined the needs of the Government of the United States in regard to a suitable Library here at the seat of the Government, which should emphasize our love of literature and our desire to extend every facility for the education of the people. I hope that the question which has been raised here now will be examined with a proper regard for the importance of the subject involved. We are not to build a Library for ten or fifteen years or fifty years, and probably not for a hundred years or a thousand years; but we are to build a Library building which is to emphasize our idea of literature, education, learning, and the arts for all time to come; and the Congress—the Forty-ninth Congress—passed a bill which I believe, if carried out, will do this in a proper and fitting manner for the people of this country.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] yesterday in his argument intimated that the House was to recede from the steps which had been taken under the bill passed by the Forty-ninth Congress, and go back to the old idea of making accommodations for the Library of the United States—for I refuse to call it the Congressional Library—accommodations for this Library, great now, greater to be in the future, in the Capitol building of the United States or in additions to that building. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say now that I will resist any and all attempts on the part of this or any other Congress of which I may be a member to lay hands upon the Capitol of the United States in any manner for the purpose of furnishing accommodations for the Library.

The Capitol of the United States as it stands now is complete, a building which is recognized the world over as one of great beauty and of elegant accommodations. I will not consent, Mr. Chairman, that on the eastern side of the Capitol as it now stands there shall be built an excrescence—for it will be nothing more nor less—for the purpose of accommodating the Library. I will not consent by my vote, and I will resist to the utmost any attempt to build upon the western side attached to the Capitol an addition for this purpose.

I do not believe this Congress, nor any other, if the matter is properly investigated, will ever make any move toward changing the lines of beauty of the Capitol as it stands now, the pride of its people, the envy of the world.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] said yesterday he had been deceived in regard to the amount of money which was needed to finish the new Library building.

That may be true so far as the gentleman is concerned. I was not deceived, at any rate, and if the gentleman was, it was perhaps his fault. I examined this subject with the assistance of Mr. Smithmeyer, with the assistance of the Librarian of Congress, and with the assistance of all the reports which had been made by committees of the Senate and House prior to that time in regard to the cost of the Library building as it was to be, and I had the plans before me; and I say here, Mr. Chairman, that the debates in the Forty-ninth Congress will show, I believe, that when the act providing for this building was passed the estimates were not $2,300,000 for the building complete, but $2,300,000 for the building as shown by the plan I hold in my hand; the front part and the central part of the building, called the reading-room. I say that at no time and in no place will it be found that any person authorized by any committee or upon any committee or any architect employed for the purpose ever stated that this building would cost $2,300,000 and no more, complete.

Mr. RYAN. Three millions.

Mr. NUTTING. I think it will be found no person has stated in so many words it would only cost $3,000,000. The gentleman from Indiana said he was amazed when it was found the building for the Library was to cost $7,000,000. Why, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, no one should be amazed at the payment of $7,000,000 for a library building to be erected here at Washington to accommodate the accumulated literature and works of art already the property of the Government and all that which for all time is to be possessed by this great nation.

Go with me to the city of New York and I will show you a post-office building that cost $9,000,000, erected by the United States. Go with me to Philadelphia, only two hours' ride from here, and I will show you another building that cost $7,000,000 erected there by the Government of the United States for the use of the people. Go to Chicago and you will find a post-office building that cost six or seven million dollars, used for the purpose of holding United States courts and for the collection of customs. There are many other instances I might cite of buildings erected by us in cities for public purposes which cost more than $5,000,000. And yet the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] says he was amazed when he found that the building to accommodate the Library of the United States as it is to be for a hundred years, and perhaps more, was to cost seven or eight millions. There has never been any estimate for this building, as I understand it, from any official source, upon the plan on which the bill was passed, for less than four million nine hundred and some odd thousand dollars.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you very well know that whenever an act has been passed for the erection of a public building, post-office, court-house, or custom-house, or for any other public purposes, even though the act itself provides that the building should not cost more than $100,000, or perchance $150,000 or $200,000, almost universally that building has cost from 33 to 50 and some times even 100 per cent. more than the estimate and more than the bill provided for. You know, Mr. Chairman, that over and over again this Congress and other Congresses have passed acts increasing the amounts from that which was first mentioned in the bill for the erection of the building; sometimes doubling the amount. If this estimate is now placed at $4,900,000, and the building should cost $7,000,000, there would be nothing unusual in the fact.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do desire here to emphasize in one other little statement my idea of resistance to an attempt to lay hands on this Capitol to make additional accommodations for the Library.

What these gentlemen who are attacking this plan want is to break it up, and then come to this Capitol and erect a building upon the western or the eastern side of it for the accommodation of the Library. As soon as you give them a foothold that will be and is the plan. Why, Mr. Chairman, in one sense the Capitol building itself illustrates and emphasizes the strength of this Government. This may be a sentimental view, sir, but sentiment sometimes comes very near to principle. In connection with this view I wish to recall a little circumstance by which it is illustrated.

In 1864, in the summer time, on one occasion, Early passed across the Potomac from the Virginia to the Maryland shore, only 4 miles above here, menaced the city of Washington, and encamped so near that the people of Washington could see the glistening of the enemy's arms in the sunlight and at once couriers and messengers were in haste passing backwards and forwards on foot and on horseback through the city with military orders, people were leaving Washington for safety, fearing every moment that the enemy would appear in the streets, and hurry and confusion prevailed among the citizens. But at that very time the great cranes and the great chains and lifts were at work upon the northern end of this Capitol building, the great blocks of granite were being lifted up into their places, and during all this excitement, when all other business was suspended and when people of the city were beside themselves with fear, the machinery and men never ceased to continue the work, thus, even in sight of the enemy, illustrating the confidence, the strength, and the majesty of the Government.

I mention this circumstance, sir, merely to show that, aside from the exciting scenes in legislative life here enacted in the past and the great intellectual achievements of which it has been the arena, there are associations clustering around this Capitol building which cause me for one to feel that I will never consent that an angle or a line of its beautiful proportions shall be marred for any purpose.

Mr. Chairman, there is another thing that I desire to speak of in this regard. Literature, education, the training and the refinement of the minds of the American people constitute the only safe basis upon which we can plant our feet for the perpetuation of our Government in the years that are to come.

You have erected in this city of Washington a great building to express your idea of war by land and sea. You paid $11,000,000 for that building. That is all right. I am glad you did it. That building was erected for the purpose of illustrating and emphasizing your idea of the physical protection of the principles upon which your Government is founded. You have built a Treasury building here which to-day is overflowing with money, and you have expended seven or eight millions for that. That is all right. It is a thing of use and a thing of beauty. Its stones and columns form a pile beautiful in form and strong for protection. It was needed, and I am glad we have it. Its cost is nothing. It in one sense represents our great country.

So you have gone on and erected in this capital city of the nation public buildings which have cost more than $100,000,000, buildings which serve the public uses of our Government, and emphasize its majesty and grandeur. With every citizen of the whole land I am proud of it all. But, Mr. Chairman, neither in your capital city of Washington nor anywhere else in this broad and beautiful land has the Federal Government erected a building for the accommodation of a public library. Neither in the District of Columbia nor anywhere else in the United States has the United States Government erected a building to emphasize its regard for the education of the people.

Therefore I say the time has come to erect a building here that will be a proper and sufficient monument to education, an object of use and a source of pride to the whole nation, not merely now, but for ages to come. In one of these reports it is stated that this Library building is to be the largest in the city of Washington. I am glad of that. The structure which emphasizes the value that we set upon the education of our people, upon the means which can put our people in a position to understand the principles upon which our Government is founded, ought to be our largest and best building. The monument that is erected to the enlightenment of the people, the monument that is erected to the symmetrical formation and development of the minds of the people, should be the largest and most beautiful monument of all.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman from New York allow a question?

Mr. NUTTING. Certainly.

Mr. HOOKER. I wish that the gentleman before he sits down would tell us what was the character and the cost of the edifice provided for in the act passed by the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. NUTTING. I will answer the gentleman's question and then proceed with my argument. I have here a design of the building which I send to the gentleman that he may examine it. The building which the act of the Forty-ninth Congress was passed to erect was intended to cover 2.9 acres, and it was designed to accommodate when completed ten million volumes and more. We have now not quite one million volumes, and our library stands fifth in the whole world so far as its extent is concerned. The $2,300,000 which has been mentioned as the estimated cost of the building was simply the amount required to finish the front part of the building—the reading-room and the front part of the building. It did not cover and was never asserted to cover cost of the building when entirely complete and finished. In answer to the gentleman from Mississippi I will say that the part of the building which the $2,300,000 was intended to pay for was this portion here [illustrating by diagram], and not even to finish all the rooms in that. This other portion [illustrating] was left entirely out. In the reports of committees of the Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Congresses it was asserted that the whole building would cost $5,000,000, The reports—three or four of them—show that the estimates were about that sum. The estimate of $2,300,000, to which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has referred, was simply for about half the building, and even then it was not intended to finish on the inside.

To show what other nations have done in regard to buildings for national libraries, I wish to make a statement in regard to the cost of the building for the British Museum in London. The English nation, with one-third less population than ours, and one-third less wealth than we have, and with nothing like our prospects for the future, expended upon its national library building, the British Museum, $6,873,870; and you will find that other nations of the world have expended money for like purposes in similar ratio.

Mr. RYAN. I desire to offer a substitute for the pending paragraph. After it has been read I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and House of Representatives, acting conjointly, shall, within thirty days after the passage of this act, invite from eminent architects, not exceeding five in number, designs and general specifications for a building for the Library of Congress, to be erected on the site purchased for that purpose in the city of Washington, the cost of the building not to exceed $3,000,000; and the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the above-named committees, to pay for the said designs and general specifications. The said committee shall jointly report to Congress its action in the premises on or before the 20th day of December, 1888. That the work now in progress on the building for the Library of Congress shall be suspended and the commission authorized by act of Congress approved April 15, 1886, be, and the same is hereby, dissolved. That the property purchased for a site for the Library of Congress, including buildings thereon, together with all plans, records, and other property of the United States connected with the building for said Library of Congress, be, and the same is hereby, transferred to the care and custody of the Interior Department; the expenses of such care and custody shall be paid out of any money already appropriated for the construction of the building for the Library of Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am anxious that at this time at least there shall be no misapprehension of what is being done or what has been done. In order to avoid any possible mistake as to the statements which induced the House to pass the Library bill, I desire that enough of the act authorizing the construction of the Congressional Library building be read to show exactly the plan intended to be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows from page 12 of the acts of the first session Forty-ninth Congress:

The construction of said building substantially according to the plan submitted to the Joint Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress by John L. Smithmeyer, in the Italian style of architecture, with such modifications as may be found necessary or advantageous without materially increasing the cost of the building.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the Clerk to read also a statement I have marked in the report of the Committee on the Library at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress in support of the Library bill. The first and last of the three paragraphs which I send up cover the entire ground, first, as to the plan, and secondly, as to the expense of the whole structure when absolutely completed. I ask the Clerk to read those three paragraphs.

The Clerk read as follows:

It remains to consider briefly the plan for a Library building and the site proposed by the bill which has been adopted by your committee. It proposes a building of ample dimensions, to hold ultimately three million books, measuring 450 feet by 300, and covering about 2.9 acres of ground. The style of architecture is of the Italian renaissance order, carefully and economically adapted in all its parts to the purposes of a Government Library, and with interior arrangements approved by the Librarian. The building is designed to be of stone in the exterior and of iron and concrete in the interior, entirely fire-proof in all its parts. It is a pleasing and sufficiently ornate edifice, without extravagance, and will be entirely in harmony with the Capitol. That this proposed building is none too large for the destined wants of the collection is proven by a few figures which follow.

The area covered by the building of the British Museum is 5 acres; area of the National Library of France, at Paris, 4¼ acres; area of the Capitol building, 3½ acres; area of the proposed National Library, 2.9 acres.

The proposed building, as stated, will contain 3,000,000 volumes, with suitable economy of storage. It is not designed to fit up the whole interior at once with iron shelving, but to introduce it gradually, finishing off the central portions, rotunda, and connecting rooms, and the entire exterior structure. The chief element of cost is in the iron alcoves of the interior, and in a building so extensive these may be finished in successive years, as wanted for the increase of books.

The most carefully guarded estimates of cost contemplate an expenditure of only $500,000 the first year, about $1,000,000 the second, and $800,000 the third, which will complete the building for occupancy in all its parts, sufficient for shelving one million books, and leaving space for the gradual introduction of additional iron alcoves in the coming fifty years, the ultimate gross cost of which will not exceed $700,000, or an average of less than $14,000 a year. When it is considered that the copyright fees paid into the Treasury amount to over $20,000 a year, while the pecuniary value of copyright publications received annually is very much greater than this, the expenditure will appear moderate in comparison with the great resulting benefits and the national importance of the work.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask to occupy a few minutes more. I wish to call the attention of my friend from New York [Mr. NUTTING] to this report as read. It states the cost of the exterior of the building entire at $2,300,000. It states the entire cost of the alcoves for books, as required for the next fifty years, at $700,000, making $3,000,000 for the completed building as it would stand fifty years hence.

One other word. The gentleman from New York misapprehends entirely, as I think, the idea of a public library at this capital when he compares it to a library of one of the European capitals. In Europe the great libraries are centered at the capitals of the respective nations. There is but one capital in a European Government. Here the capital of every State in the Union aspires to the credit and honor of possessing a great library. The libraries of many States will rival the library of the District of Columbia. Our library was only intended to be the Library of Congress. The movement now on foot is the first attempt to create a national library in imitation of the European monarchies. I am willing to provide a library for this District, but I wish to maintain a Congressional Library as designed by the founders of the Government.

Ours is not a library standing on the same footing as those of Europe alluded to, but should be in harmony with our institutions, every State acting for itself, establishing its own system of education and with its own library, Congress a library for the use of Congress, and it would be justified in establishing a library for the District of Columbia but nothing more. The system of States did not contemplate these national institutions we are establishing.

Mr. NUTTING rose.

Mr. RYAN. How much time do you want?

Mr. NUTTING. Not more than a minute or two to complete my statement.

Mr. RYAN. Very well; I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. NUTTING. In the report for the Forty-sixth Congress you will find this wording:

It is estimated that the entire building will hold something over 10,185,000 volumes, exclusive of the wall-room in the corridors, which may, in case of necessity, be lined with book-cases.

The central building will contain about 1,280,000 volumes.

The estimated cost of the entire structure is within five million dollars ($4,924,313).

The cost of the central portion, with the two connecting wings for offices of administration, is estimated to be within one and a half million ($1,443,960).

In 1882 the same statement was made precisely.

Mr. RYAN. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SAWYER].

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Chairman, I have never voted for anything with more pleasure since I have been a member of Congress than for the act providing for this Library building. But at the time of doing it it was on the consideration that the cost of the building would be in the neighborhood of the sum mentioned. In my own State we have had a little experience in regard to putting up public buildings. We commenced with putting up a State capitol which was to cost $4,000,000, and we have already spent over $16,000,000 on it and the building remains uncompleted.

My idea, Mr. Chairman, is this: It is not to the building I object, and I shall not object if it costs $7,000,000, but I do object to any architect or any committee which will present a report to this House and ask us to put up a building saying it will not cost but three or four millions of dollars, and then at the very next Congress give us notice it will cost from ten to twelve millions of dollars. It is not doing the fair thing.

It is claimed we need a judiciary building. The extra room of the proposed building can be used for the present for the accommodation of the Supreme Court, and thus save the expense of putting up another building.

One other word and I will conclude. I have no sympathy with this idea that it is proposed to make the city of Washington the fashionable center of this country. I think the present curse of this city is that it is proposed to make it the center of wealth and fashion. We have already reached the point that no member of the Cabinet, no employé of the Government, no member of Congress can come here and enter into the social festivities of this capital without spending more than his salary. The tendency is in that direction.

I do not object to proper buildings being erected for the use of the Government at this capital city, but I do object to making this city a servile imitation of capitals abroad. I would rather see the city of Washington made the home of poor men by furnishing employment to them. Let them enter to a certain extent by giving them in this city some mechanical employment. I do object to any policy which drives away the poor laboring men, which banishes all mechanical business, which makes this city the fashionable center for the wealthy men who come here to spend their winters.

Some of us talk about the poor men and the laboring men coming here and observing these beautiful buildings erected for the purposes of the Government. They can not come here. There is no business they can do. They can not find any mechanical employment. The whole tendency in the city of Washington is towards banishing the poor man and by large expenditures of money making the city the home for the wealthy capitalists who come here to live. For that condition of things I have no sympathy.

Mr. RYAN. I now yield for ten minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY].

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of a building for the Library of Congress that will meet all reasonable demands and be commensurate with the dignity, the wealth, and the greatness of this Republic; but when we start out to construct that building we should proceed in a business-like manner. We should know in the construction of a public building for the United States what each one of us would wish to know when we start to build an edifice for ourselves—we should know what the cost will be.

I remember well that in the Forty-ninth Congress, when the bill was introduced providing for the construction of a Congressional Library building, the chairman of the committee was asked what the cost would be. The chairman said on that occasion that the appropriation asked for would be $500,000 to begin the work, $1,000,000 at the next session, and $823,600 at the succeeding session to complete it; which made the sum of $2,323,600. This is what the chairman of the committee stated when he reported the bill to the House. There was a report filed at the same time by the Library Committee, in which it was stated that the most carefully guarded estimates, contemplated an expenditure of only $500,000 the first year, $1,000,000 the second, and $800,000 the third, which would complete the building for occupancy in all its parts sufficient for shelving one million of books, leaving a space for additional iron alcoves, the whole cost of which it was estimated would not be over $700,000. It appears, therefore, that by the statement of the chairman of the committee and by the report of the committee this building was to cost only $2,323,600.

Now, what is the situation to-day. We have bought the site for the building at a cost of $585,000, and we have expended about $200,000 up to this time, and are told that this edifice is to cost between $7,000,000 and $12,000,000. That is quite a wide margin of difference, and I ask if that is a business-like way of proceeding?

Is that the way we should proceed as members of Congress of the United States in dealing with a public trust? I am told that the grand building in this city, known as the State, War, and Navy Department building, cost only $11,000,000, and it is one of the grandest and handsomest buildings of its kind in the world.

What do you want with a building the size of the State, War, and Navy Department building to accommodate the present Congressional Library? How many volumes are there in the Library of Congress? According to the report of the committee in 1884 there were only 513,441 volumes, besides 170,000 pamphlets. It is now proposed to furnish an edifice which will cost between $7,000,000 and $12,000,000 to put these books and pamphlets in.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of liberal appropriations, but that strikes me as a very expensive luxury. It amounts to about $15 to each book now in the Library. I am in favor of granting a liberal amount for a Library building, but I want to proceed in the proper way; have the estimates and the plans and specifications submitted, and proceed in such manner as that we will know exactly how much we are to expend.

If, therefore, the building has been commenced without the requisite plans and without proper consideration, now is the time to call a halt and stop until the plans and estimates are all made in a proper manner. The work should stop until we get estimates and specifications made up by a competent architect that will show exactly the amount of money to be expended. I am in favor of the erection of a building not to exceed, say, about $3,000,000.

The work now in progress on the Library building should be suspended and the whole matter referred to the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and House of Representatives, with instructions to act conjointly and invite competent architects to present designs and general specifications for a Library building, and, after proper examination and consideration, report a plan for a building not to exceed in cost $3,000,000.

This amount is sufficient to not only provide for the books and pamphlets now in the Library of Congress, but it is also sufficient to provide a building that will be large enough for many years to come for the increasing Library of Congress.

If we are to have a building suitable for the Congressional Library located outside of this Capitol building, it should be arranged with a view to the probable growth of the future; but I am satisfied that it should not cost more than $3,000,000. I believe that sum is ample, and that we ought to know exactly, before going on with the expenditure or taking another step, precisely what the cost is to be.

In the Forty-ninth Congress I occupied the same position that I take to-day, and as I believed the bill then presented did not contain proper limitations and restrictions, I felt impelled by a sense of duty to vote against it. I was in favor then of the construction of a Library building, but neither the bill presented nor the report of the committee was satisfactory to me, and the situation to-day shows that the bill then passed was not properly drawn. The suggestion made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that rooms adapted to the sittings of the Supreme Court of the United States be provided in the Library building is a good one, and if it is feasible I would favor it. Yet if the judges of the Supreme Court should ever vacate the chamber they now occupy, I trust that grand chamber, with all of its sacred and glorious memories and associations, will be set apart and dedicated to fitting and proper uses.

Mr. RYAN. How much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COLLINS in the chair). Fifteen minutes.

Mr. RYAN. Then the gentleman from Kentucky occupied all of his time?

The CHAIRMAN. He did.

Mr. RYAN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

Mr. RANDALL. I should like to have some time on this side.

Mr. RYAN. You will have fifteen minutes left, and I think the time ought to be extended.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I should be glad to agree with my friend from Kentucky, for I almost always find him right in the positions he assumes; but I must confess my surprise to find him to-day in favor of what I must regard as a penny-wise policy. He has stated very correctly that the Public Library is growing, and I supposed that the gentleman would realize the fact that we are constructing the Library building not for the library of to-day but for a library a hundred years hence; and I believe, therefore, that to dwarf that building, to make the difference that he suggests from the plan of to-day, and give it less dimensions, less capacity for the accommodation of the books of the Library, in order to save a few millions of dollars, would be an unwise policy and very bad economy.

So far as the Architect himself is concerned——

Mr. MCCREARY. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I have but two minutes. If the gentleman from Kansas will extend my time——

Mr. RYAN. I can not do that.

Mr. MCCREARY. I only want to ask you, as you are discussing the present style of building, how much it will cost to finish that building according to the present plans?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I understand the building is to be 20 per cent. larger than the State, War, and Navy Department building. That building cost some ten or eleven million dollars. Certainly if a building 20 per cent. larger, erected in good style, can be built for $7,000,000, as gentlemen have stated here to-day, that is not extravagant. So far as the Architect is concerned, as a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I have had an opportunity to meet him and almost all the architects in Washington, and I know it to be the testimony of other gentlemen who have been longer on that committee than I have that the man who has control to-day as the architect of the Library building gives evidence of being one of the best, one of the most careful, and one of the most reliable architects we have in Washington.

But, Mr. Chairman, if gentlemen want to dwarf this appropriation, if they want to erect a building like the Pension Office, which, I understand, was built for very much less money than is estimated for this building, they can do so; but when the people of this country come to the capital they are proud to see good public buildings here——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. RYAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I did not have the good fortune to be here when the act was passed by the Forty-ninth Congress, and therefore the question which I asked the gentleman from New York [Mr. NUTTING], and which I asked yesterday of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], was designed to elicit information. I entirely concur with the view expressed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. NUTTING] that any attempt to add to and enlarge the Capitol for this purpose would be to destroy the architectural beauty of this building and would be folly. We are therefore constrained to look to the erection of an edifice outside of the Capitol for the accommodation of the overcrowded shelves and the very small library space which we now have.

As I understand it, the Committee on the Library, to whom this matter was intrusted, a committee composed of members of the House and members of the Senate, considered the matter and made a report to their respective Houses, which report the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] on yesterday and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] to-day referred to, and which report seems to say that the completion of the building would cost something over $4,000,000; $4,700,000 I think the gentleman from New York said.

I do not know how far members of this House may have been imposed upon, to use the language of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] on yesterday. I will state my understanding, and if I am wrong I would like to be corrected. I care nothing about who is the architect of this building. I would like to have a suitable building constructed; suitable not only in its interior arrangement, but a building whose exterior finish shall be such as to challenge the admiration of every citizen whose eye rests upon it.

I would be gratified to see a building constructed on some known order of architecture that shall be as much in vogue one hundred years from to-day as it is to-day. I would be glad to see a building constructed on the Grecian style of architecture, like your Treasury Department, a form which stands upon immutable principles of beauty, which the world has sanctioned and which is illustrated in all of the architecture of Greece. We ought to have such a building without a great deal of reference to the number of dollars and cents it may cost.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I agree with the gentleman. The present plan contemplates that.

Mr. HOOKER. If I am wrong I would like to be informed by some gentleman who was here in the Forty-ninth Congress. I understand that the little plan which I hold in my hand, and which I saw for the first time this morning, is the plan which was presented for the consideration of this House and put on exhibition at the Clerk's desk for the inspection of members at the time the House passed the bill in the Forty-ninth Congress.

I understand this (exhibiting another plan) is the extended plan, comprising the whole. I understand the plan which was referred to by my friend from Kentucky, Governor MCCREARY, which was to cost only $2,300,000 for the erection of the building and $700,000 for the completion of the alcoves in the interior, making the actual cost $3,000,000, was that first plan; and nobody estimates now it will cost any more than that to erect this portion of the building. But if you extend it as it is represented in the second plan, so as to occupy the whole ground instead of simply a part, then the cost will be increased. You may go on and add to it as the occasion requires. The purchase of the ground at a cost of nearly $600,000 was probably made looking to the idea that the Government should purchase a site sufficiently large for the erection of a building to be extended as the necessities of the Government might require in future days and in future years. Therefore they made the purchase of the large site, and have laid the foundation; but, as I understand, they only propose to construct at present a building the aggregate cost of which will be about $3,000,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to reserve a little time.

Mr. RYAN. I have seven minutes remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. Eight minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. Eight minutes of the full time.

Mr. RYAN. I took the hour and divided it between the two sides.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman had fifteen minutes on yesterday.

Mr. NUTTING. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have twenty minutes.

Mr. RYAN. I do not know that I shall want that.

So far as I am concerned personally I am in favor of the construction of a Library building that shall be suitable for all the purposes of our Government. I have always favored propositions for the construction of a Library building. But my recollection is not at fault when I say we were invited in the Forty-eighth Congress to vote for a building complete in all respects, except some of the iron alcoves, for the sum of $2,300,000.

It was no such proposition as is indicated by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER]; no such proposition as is indicated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. NUTTING]. It was a proposition to complete the building, the plans of which were before us at the time, for the sum of $2,300,000. In support of what I say, I call special attention to the language of the report of the committee that reported the bill. Mark the language:

> It is not designed to fit up the whole interior at once with iron shelving, but to introduce it gradually, finishing off the central portions of the rotunda, the connecting rooms, and the entire exterior structure.

The "entire exterior structure"—mark the language.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. RYAN. I can not. I have yielded you as much time as I can spare. This report goes on to say:

> The chief element of cost is in the iron alcoves of the interior, and in a building so extensive this may be finished in successive years as wanted for the increase of books. The most carefully guarded estimates of cost contemplate an expenditure of only $500,000 the first year, about $1,000,000 the second year, and $800,000 the third, which will complete the building for occupancy in all its parts, sufficient for shelving 1,000,000 books, and leaving space for the gradual introduction of additional iron alcoves in the coming fifty years, the ultimate gross cost of which will not exceed $700,000, or an average of less than $14,000 a year.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I want to ask the gentleman this question: Do you expect to get a building 20 per cent. larger than the War, State, and Navy Department building for that amount of money? Do you deem it possible?

Mr. RYAN. When I voted for the bill I relied upon the committee, the official organ of this House. They declared what the cost would be upon "the most carefully guarded estimates." They presented to us here at that time the plan and specifications accompanied by those estimates.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And did not that plan include the whole quadrangle?

Mr. RYAN. The whole. Now, what will be the cost of this building? A few days ago the chairman of the present commission, the honorable Secretary of the Interior, an accomplished officer and a thorough business man, came before the Committee on Appropriations and said:

Gentlemen, I will not permit you to be deceived any longer in regard to the cost of this building. It can not cost less than $10,000,000, and may cost more.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Suppose it does?

Mr. RYAN. What I want to say is this. I doubt not that the committee acted in good faith. The honorable chairman of that committee, Mr. Singleton, of Mississippi, is the very soul of honor. He would no more mislead this House than he would commit the crime of arson. He is as high above such conduct as it is possible for humanity to be. But somebody misled him; somebody misled the gentleman from New York; somebody grossly misled that committee, and through them the people's representatives on the floor of this House, and in that way $8,000,000 of the people's money will be taken from the Treasury by deception, if we carry out this scheme.

Mr. OATES. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him a moment, I quite agree with his statement of what took place. I remember the facts precisely as he does, and I voted for the bill upon that hypothesis; but may not this building be utilized as a good investment by devoting a part of it to the purposes of the Supreme Court of the United States and another part to the use of the Department of Justice?

Mr. RYAN. I am told by the Architect of the Capitol that the work can be suspended without any loss whatever, whether the specifications shall embrace a combination of a Supreme Court room and the Library or whether the whole be devoted to the Library.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does not the gentleman know that there is a contention between the Architect of the Capitol and the architect of the building, and that therefore the information which he cites may not be reliable?

Mr. RYAN. I do not know about that; I do not care to inquire into those details. But I do know, and so does every sensible man, that it is highly probable that the Committee on the Library relied wholly on the architect whose plans and specifications they adopted.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RYAN. I should like a little additional time.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman can have five minutes more.

Mr. RYAN. Now one of two things is morally certain. The architect who makes an error of $8,000,000 on a two-million building is either incompetent or dishonest. He can take either horn of the dilemma he pleases.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But has he made the error?

Mr. RYAN. Certainly he has made it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. That is disputed very seriously.

Mr. RYAN. He has made the error if the building will cost ten millions, and, Mr. Chairman, if the honorable Secretary of the Interior can at this distance of time see a cost of $10,000,000 for that building, I have no doubt that it will cost at least $13,000,000, judging from past experience in public-building construction.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Then the gentleman does not believe the Secretary of the Interior either. Whom do you believe—anybody?

Mr. RYAN. I do believe the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MILLIKEN. You say he estimates that it will cost $10,000,000, but you believe it will cost $13,000,000.

Mr. RYAN. Nobody denies now that the cost will be at least seven or eight million dollars. That is the minimum estimate of even the parties interested. This architect, according to the admission on all sides, must have been mistaken to the extent of at least $5,000,000 on a building which was estimated to cost a little over $2,000,000.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But the plan has been changed; and the building is to be larger than at first contemplated.

Mr. RYAN. No authority to change the plan was given. The plan was provided for by law. The law declared that the building should be built in accordance with that plan. There was no warrant whatever for departing from the plan.

Now, the question is simply this: Whether, because the work has been begun and although it is ascertained that a suspension of the work can be had without loss, the people's representatives shall stand here coerced to ratify a deception and a fraud. So far as my vote is concerned, while I might be willing to vote $8,000,000 for such a building, while I might be willing to vote even more if I were satisfied of the propriety of the measure, I will not stand here and ratify a fraud and deception upon the people of the country to the amount of over $8,000,000.

Mr. HOOKER. Who is it that has authorized an extension of the building beyond the plan agreed upon originally?

Mr. RYAN. I do not know that it has been extended.

Mr. HOOKER. Has the architect done it?

Mr. RYAN. I do not know that anybody has done it.

Mr. HOOKER. Then why is the gentleman charging him with it?

Mr. RYAN. I am not charging him with it; but I am saying that the plan and specifications upon which Congress acted were based upon an estimated cost of $2,300,000 for a building which it is now ascertained will cost over $10,000,000.

Mr. HOOKER. Who ascertains it?

Mr. RYAN. It is admitted that it will not cost less than $7,000,000.

Mr. HOOKER. Who admits it?

Mr. RYAN. The Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HOOKER. We want somebody who is an architect to speak about a matter of that kind.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Have not all those plans and specifications been changed?

Mr. RYAN. I do not know whether they have or not. The gentleman has asked me that question repeatedly. I do not know how they could be changed. The law provides that the building shall be constructed substantially in accordance with the plans which were before the House at that time.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not understand how you were deceived; because if a man had never seen an architect in his life, his common sense should have told him that a building of such dimensions could not be built for $3,000,000.

Mr. RYAN. Although these representations were made by the official organ of the House—acting honestly no doubt, having been deceived by somebody—the answer now comes, "You ought to have been too intelligent to have been deceived in a matter of that kind."

Mr. MILLIKEN. Why, of course.

Mr. RYAN. The answer made to us is that we ought not to have believed the architect; we ought not to have relied on those estimates; we ought not to have placed confidence in the official organ of the House.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will you allow me one more question? Do you believe that if this building when completed is to be what the Government desires and is to be built for a reasonable price, Congress ought to arrest the work on the building simply because you or some other persons in a past Congress were deceived?

Mr. RYAN. Everybody on the floor of this House, as well as the country at large—the people through their representatives—were outrageously deceived in this matter, and I am in favor of suspending this work and adopting such a proposition as I have sent to the desk authorizing the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the two Houses, acting as a joint committee, to invite from the most eminent architects of the country, who shall be paid for their services, plans and specifications for the construction of a suitable Library building on that site.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not believe we ought now to do harm to the interests of the Government in order to vindicate you for having been deceived some years ago. The question is not whether you were deceived, but whether the building as now proposed to be constructed is what the country wants, and whether we are going to pay too much for it. The Fiftieth Congress is not bound to champion your case in regard to what you may have done in a previous Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. There are now ten minutes remaining for debate on this question.

Mr. RANDALL. More time has been occupied than I expected. I hoped to control some of the time myself, but have not had the opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. What extension of time does the gentleman propose?

Mr. RANDALL. Fifteen or seventeen minutes.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I hope my colleague [Mr. RANDALL] will add five minutes more to that extension. I desire to make an explanation, in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN], as I was a member of the Library Committee when this plan was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I think it proper that my colleague, who was a member of the Library Committee, should have an opportunity to be heard. I am willing he shall go ahead now if he chooses.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the time allowed for the discussion of this question will be extended twenty-two minutes. The Chair hears none. Thirty-two minutes in all now remain.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. As my colleague [Mr. RANDALL] has proposed that I "go ahead now"——

Mr. MACDONALD. I would like the gentleman from Pennsylvania or the gentleman from Indiana, or some other member, to inform us what is the basis for the statement in regard to the increased cost of this Library building.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. What I intended was to say what I knew of the recommendation of the committee when the House adopted the plan of Smithmeyer for the building of this Congressional Library. We labored for years in this House to get an appropriation to erect a Library building, every one of us knowing there was not accommodation for the books in the Library or for the increase of books which every day was growing larger. There was no deception about it. When the plan was adopted it was believed the estimate covered sufficient money to go on and build a Library to accommodate the present number of volumes and to provide for the increase which would occur in the next five or six years. It was believed then that $2,300,000 would cover that expense.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. Did my friend understand the building was to cost from seven to ten millions of dollars?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I had no other idea.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let me ask the gentleman another question. Did he or any member of the committee communicate that fact to the other House of Congress?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I will refer the gentleman to one or two facts; he will recollect them. The idea of the House making the appropriation was adopted at last when it was hurried in its business. The chairman of that committee, a highly honorable man, who has already been mentioned in this debate by his colleagues in a former Congress, the chairman of the committee reporting the plan which was finally adopted, had no time to make explanation.

Mr. BLOUNT. Did he not make a formal report?

Mr. BUCHANAN. He took his hour.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I do not think he did. My recollection is that he did not take an hour. The hurry was so great on the part of the House to get through with its business that he had to proceed. I should like to have had some time to explain it myself.

The committee was bound to provide for what was necessary to accommodate the Library, for the number of volumes on hand and what might become necessary for the increased number of volumes in the next five or six years. The library in the British Museum cost five or six millions of dollars when first erected, and they have been adding to it ever since. You can not put up a public building providing for the increase in the number of volumes year after year—you can not put up such a building as was intended, and confine the appropriation to two or three millions of dollars. It may cost $10,000,000 before it is completed.

In such a library it is necessary to provide for more space than that provided in the new State, War, and Navy Department building.

I got myself slowly up to the idea of voting for this appropriation and this plan. At the beginning I did not think Smithmeyer's plan, which was for a building outside of the Capitol building, was the best one for the public use and convenience. I was in favor of accommodating the Library by an extension of the Capitol building—the center west front. It was my belief that by such an extension the Library would have sufficient accommodations and be everything necessary for people who would use it—citizens of Washington, visitors who might come here, and for the use of members of Congress and for all the officers of the Government. But you can not put up such a building as the one now provided for for two or three millions of dollars.

I came slowly, as I have already said, to vote for this present plan. I knew what the wants of the Library were, and I wished, as far as possible, to meet those wants. The Capitol building is of mixed architecture, and, as I thought, we might extend it west to provide sufficient accommodation for the Library for years to come. That was my idea, but I found that could not be done, and I was led at last to vote in favor of carrying out the admirable plan of Mr. Smithmeyer for the construction of a Congressional Library which would satisfy the entire country, and not only accommodate the present number of volumes in the Library, but all the increase for time to come.

There was no deception in any respect, so far as I am aware, in the recommendation of the committee for the adoption of that plan or what it was to cost.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I will yield for ten minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS] and afterwards for five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. CLEMENTS. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. Chairman, I suppose there is no member of this House who is opposed to a Library building suitable and adequate for public purposes. It has not been indicated as the desire of any one to go back to the plan of connecting the Library with the Capitol building, as stated by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. NUTTING. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] referred to it yesterday.

Mr. CLEMENTS. There is no indication of going back to that plan.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have always been in favor of that plan.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Then I stand corrected. Certainly there has been nothing more than a mere reference to that plan. Certainly no indication that any considerable number of members prefer it.

The proposition made to-day by the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] is to retain this site and ask estimates from eminent architects and appropriate the sum of $10,000 to pay for the estimates and plans, so that at the next session of Congress we may intelligently consider the various plans that will be submitted in accordance with that proposition.

It seems to me that that is a business-like and common-sense method of disposing of this whole question. There is no excuse for those who have led the House and the country into this dilemma. It can not be excused, in my judgment, upon the supposition of an error.

In private business when we go to have buildings erected and work of that character we secure a careful and reliable estimate, and it seldom happens in private business plans that individuals are called upon to add three or four hundred per cent. to the amount of the original estimate.

This is only one case in a long line of failures to come within the estimates submitted when Congress was asked to inaugurate a work. We have been confronted with several during this very session of Congress of a similar nature. I will call attention to one or two of the leading ones. For the extension of the water-works in this city the original estimate was $1,485,000. Congress has now appropriated for that purpose $2,575,000, or $1,090,000 beyond the original estimate. Take the appropriation for the light-house at Seal Rock, in California, where the original estimate was made for $333,000. That was adopted, and appropriations of $290,000 were made for this work. This is exhausted; and it is estimated now that a sum in addition will have to be appropriated, amounting to a total of $721,000, or more than twice the amount of the original estimate, before the work can be completed. I speak of these conspicuous instances which have been brought before Congress at the present session for which deficiencies have been appropriated. Cases of this sort are occurring too frequently. In many instances we would not have entered upon the work originally had we known its cost or that it would be within the neighborhood of what it has afterward turned out to be. But having expended so much money already, before we are advised of the full cost, we are compelled in many cases to go on and complete it or sacrifice what has been already granted.

What is the case here in this remarkable instance of deception? I do not mean by this to cast reflection upon any member of the Committee on the Library who reported or who advocated the bill in the Forty-ninth Congress, because they were doubtless deceived just as the House was; but here has been an expenditure of $585,000 for the site. That site we have already acquired, and I understand there is no question but that it has been secured at a reasonable price. Five hundred thousand dollars has also been appropriated to carry on the work, of which only about $200,000 has been expended, leaving about $300,000 still on hand. We have not gone far enough with this, therefore, so that we are compelled to go on and ratify this fraud. We may call a halt here and then begin in a business-like way to get a reasonably accurate estimate, and after making a commencement in the right direction we can proceed properly with the work.

If this amendment is adopted we will suspend the work only until the next session of Congress, and may still complete it according to the plan that shall be adopted earlier than upon the present plan.

It has been argued by gentlemen that we should make our plans of this building in accordance with what they have done in European nations. I am perfectly willing to go to the full extent to provide an ample library for our people. I think it is only proper that it should be done. But what have we now? In 1884 we had only about a half a million of volumes and a hundred and seventy thousand pamphlets, the estimated value of which was only about $750,000, I am advised. It is proposed to take care of these at a cost of nearly fifteen times the amount that the Library was estimated to be worth at that time. The cost, if this present plan should be carried out at the enormous expense which it is certain to entail, will not fall far short of $20 a volume on every book in the Library.

I admit that we are not building a Library for to-day only, but that it is for the years to come—for a century—but even taking that view of it, there is no excuse for the expenditure of this large sum, notwithstanding the apology that has been made by the gentleman from New York, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and the gentleman from Mississippi——

Mr. HOOKER. I beg to say I have made no apologies. I want to know who did wrong?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I do not know.

Mr. HOOKER. Can you answer the question?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I can not.

Mr. HOOKER. Neither has any other gentleman answered it.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Well, that is not for me to say. All I say is that when this building proposition was before the House——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I yield the gentleman additional time.

Mr. CLEMENTS. When this bill was before the Forty-ninth Congress it was substantially stated, and emphasized twice in the report of the chairman of that committee, that the whole cost would not exceed $2,323,000.

Mr. NUTTING. Now, does not the gentleman know that in the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses a proposition was made——

Mr. CLEMENTS. I can not yield to the gentleman. I know what he means. But that proposition was voted down, both of the bills carrying too large an amount.

Mr. NUTTING. But do not you know that the Committee of the House in both Congresses reported to the House that the whole cost of the building would be $4,900,000?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I have but a moment. That estimate, I repeat, was not adopted.

After several unsuccessful efforts to pass the bill, and after several plans and estimates were submitted, the Forty-ninth Congress chose the present plan upon the distinct, emphatic, and repeated statement by the Committee on the Library of that Congress, that the whole cost would be $2,323,000, except certain shelving and interior work which might be needed in the years to come after the Library had grown, and that this additional work which might be required within the next fifty years would not cost more than $700,000.

I beg the Committee of the Whole House again to hear the statements of that report upon which the Forty-ninth Congress was induced to pass the bill. I read from this report, page 3:

> Any enlargement of the Capitol which would accommodate the Library even as it stands, with room to arrange it, would cost much more than a separate building, because it must necessarily be constructed in the same costly style, with carved Corinthian architecture. Mr. Walter, the former Architect of the Capitol, estimated the cost of an extension of the west front at $1,500,000. The present Architect, Mr. Clark, estimates it to cost $1,200,000, while the plan of a building adopted by the committee is to cost only $2,323,600.

Again, hear this statement, emphasized on page 5 of the report:

> The proposed building, as stated, will contain 3,000,000 volumes, with suitable economy of storage. It is not designed to fit up the whole interior at once with iron shelving, but to introduce it gradually, finishing off the central portions, rotunda, and connecting rooms, and the entire exterior structure. The chief element of cost is in the iron alcoves of the interior, and in a building so extensive these may be finished in successive years, as wanted for the increase of books.
> The most carefully guarded estimates of cost contemplate an expenditure of only $500,000 the first year, about $1,000,000 the second, and $800,000 the third, which will complete the building for occupancy in all its parts sufficient for shelving 1,000,000 books and leaving space for the gradual introduction of additional iron alcoves in the coming fifty years, the ultimate gross cost of which will not exceed $700,000, or an average of less than $14,000 a year. When it is considered that the copyright fees paid into the Treasury amount to over $20,000 a year, while the pecuniary value of copyright publications received annually is very much greater than this, the expenditure will appear moderate in comparison with the great resulting benefits and the national importance of the work.

Where is the authority for the statements made here to-day that it was understood by the Congress that passed the bill that the cost would far exceed the amount stated? It is said that the debate at that time would show it. What gentleman advocating the measure at that time called in question the report and gave notice to the House that it was a fraud? What friend of the measure then informed the House that it would cost two, three, or possibly four times the amount stated in the report?

I will venture to say that if the estimates stated in the report were then called in question, it was only done by those off the committee and who doubted the wisdom of the bill. But the statements of the united committee prevailed and induced favorable action. Let me repeat that I in no degree question the honesty and integrity of that committee, for I believe it was misled just as the House was. Upon whose estimates it acted I am not advised, nor is that material for the purposes of this argument.

Without stopping to inquire who has been at fault we are brought face to face with the facts that Congress inaugurated this work upon the understanding that it would cost $2,323,000 in addition to the site; that we have procured the site at a cost of $585,000; that we have expended about $200,000 on the building, and that to complete it on this plan will now cost from $7,000,000 to $12,000,000. Under these circumstances, what is our duty as the representatives and trustees of the people?

We have but two alternatives; one is to go on, ratify the imposition, and expend ten or twelve millions of dollars of the people's money, whereas it was the deliberate judgment of the last Congress that less than three millions was necessary for the purpose, or call a halt where we are to-day and exercise our constitutional power and duty to control the expenditures of the public money. Which shall we elect?

I did not vote for this bill in the last Congress, yet I repeat that I am willing to vote every dollar necessary for a commodious, durable, and reasonably handsome building for the Library. But I am not willing to vote to squander three or four times the necessary amount in order to follow in the footsteps of the oppressive and extravagant monarchies of the Old World.

This building upon the present plan will be larger considerably than the great and handsome building which now accommodates three great Departments of the Government—the State, War, and Navy Departments. That building has cost us, we have been only recently advised officially, something over $10,000,000. It is fair to assume that this will not cost less.

Gentlemen speak of the propriety of a magnificent structure in keeping with the dignity and grandeur of the American Government, and one that will compare favorably with similar structures of the Old World. We hear millions spoken of here in connection with public expenditures as though a million was a mere bagatelle. The possession of the people's money by the Government casts upon Congress a sacred trust to see that this fund extorted from their hard earnings is not wasted or misapplied. Every dollar of it represents to that extent the privation of the people of the luxuries, the comforts, and in many cases the necessities of life.

They who by the heavy hand of taxation are compelled to submit to the privations thus caused do not murmur at necessary appropriations, but they would, I have no doubt, welcome a return of some little, at least, of the old-fashioned Democratic simplicity of former times, under which the real grandeur and dignity of the American Republic commanded the fullest respect and admiration of the world.

The disposition on the part of gentlemen to urge this extravagant expenditure is but another evidence of the appalling evil of a large surplus in the Treasury. The fact that it has been the custom heretofore in almost every case for Congress to finally appropriate more money for the public buildings of the country than was originally estimated, by reason of enlarged plans, has been appealed to here as a justification for this expenditure.

I look upon this bad custom as only an argument why we should halt here and break it up. But I am glad to be able to say that I believe, under the administration of the present faithful and efficient Supervising Architect, this vicious practice has been broken up so far as it prevailed by reason of deceptive plans and designs. Let us repudiate the present plan in justice to ourselves and the people we have the honor to represent. Let us begin again in the manner proposed by the amendment and proceed in a practical business manner and provide for an ample building, but with due regard for economy.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, this is not a question as to whether or not the plan of this building is what it should be; nor is it, sir, a matter for us to inquire into as to what France has done, or England has done, or some other great nation has done in the same connection. We are confronted with a monstrous imposition, and the honor of this body requires that it should pause and inquire into that imposition.

In the Forty-ninth Congress the House was asked to vote a Library building according to the plan then submitted. It was estimated that the cost of that building would be about $3,000,000.

Not one line in the report of the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. Singleton, not one line in his speech, not one line of the debate in the House or in the Senate, suggested the thought that the amount was to pass beyond $3,000,000. To-day a Cabinet officer discovering the imposition, after careful, intelligent, deliberate consideration, surrounded by experts to counsel him, has felt impelled to go before a leading committee of this House and communicate the astounding fact that notwithstanding what has been done in the past the building is likely to cost from seven to ten million dollars; more than twice the original estimate, possibly three times the original estimate. Will this House hear it? He tells you at an hour when you are not committed to the plan, when only the first wing is proposed to be commenced, that you may have fair notice that you are leaping into a terrible job. Why, sir, if we do not stop here in the midst of these facts, if we do not suspend this building here, the country will have a right to think this is a fine field for the lobbyist——

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does the gentleman say there is a job in this?

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman has had his time and ought not to take mine. I decline to yield to the gentleman. I have only five minutes. I think there are two sides to this question.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Do not get excited over it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope my friend will not interrupt me. There is no propriety in that.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I have asked a simple question, which I think the gentleman ought to answer.

Mr. BLOUNT. I say when it appears that a joint committee has made five reports in several Congresses, that there has been one persistent plan to put that building no where else except at the east front of this Capitol; one persistent plan for a building to cost $3,000,000 which turns out to be $10,000,000, it is time for this House to stop, to refuse to vote a dollar; to begin de novo and say "what sort of Library are we to have? Let us first determine upon a plan and then determine upon the appropriation." There is but one course left to this House. The last Congress was miserably deceived as to the cost of this work. If it had then been ascertained it would cost $10,000,000 every gentleman will concede the impossibility of having passed the act through both branches of Congress.

Is it not therefore right that we should here stop and pass judgment upon the proper building before we vote another dollar, or are we to be dragged along in this expenditure according to the scheme of the original conspirators against the Treasury to mislead Congress as to the cost of the building by estimating it at one-third its cost and having the appropriation begun in detail, the plan not being discovered until unwittingly, without the assent of the Representatives, these men have gathered up $10,000,000? Sir, it is not creditable to the intelligence of this House, it is not creditable to the integrity of this House, it is not creditable to its patriotism, it is not creditable to its dignity that such a measure should be passed in this way.

Mr. Chairman, I opposed this building originally. I never liked its surroundings. I never liked the persistent purpose that no piece of ground except one should be selected. I never liked the persistent claim that no plan but one was satisfactory and should be selected. I am not surprised at this hour, after a struggle for years, that we should have the disclosure of a Cabinet officer coming and calling the attention of this House to the fact that whatever is done hereafter should be deliberately done. If the House means to carry out the plan of the original schemers, let the responsibility rest where it belongs.

[Here the hammer fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2266) to accept and ratify an agreement made with the Shoshone and Bannock Indians for the surrender and relinquishment to the United States of a portion of the Fort Hall reservation in the Territory of Idaho, for the purpose of a town site, and for the grant of a right of way through said reservation to the Utah and Northern Railway Company, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 489) for the relief of John Finn;

A bill (S. 1404) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, and to establish it as a post-road;

A bill (S. 2816) to authorize the construction of a bridge for railway purposes across the Mississippi River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, to be located north of and in the vicinity of the city of Alma, Wis.; and

A bill (S. 2875) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase-money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands," approved June 16, 1880.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 878) for the relief of John D. Maxsted and Robert J. B. Newcombe; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 183) authorizing the loan of tents and tent equipage to the veteran organizations of the Society of the Army of the Potomac.

It further announced the passage of House bills of the following titles with amendments; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (H. R. 8343) to authorize the construction of a wagon and foot-passenger bridge across the Noxubee River at or near Gainesville, in the State of Alabama; and

A bill (H. R. 474) for the relief of General G. Cluseret.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee then resumed its session, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and House of Representatives, acting conjointly, shall, within thirty days after the passage of this act, invite from eminent architects, not exceeding five in number, designs and general specifications for a building for the Library of Congress, to be erected on the site purchased for that purpose in the city of Washington, the cost of building not to exceed $3,000,000; and the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the above-named committees, to pay for the said designs and general specifications. The said committees shall jointly report to Congress their action in the premises on or before the 20th day of December, 1888.

That the work now in progress on the building for the Library of Congress shall be suspended, and the commission authorized by act of Congress approved April 15, 1886, be, and the same is hereby, dissolved.

That the property purchased for a site for the Library of Congress, including the buildings thereon, together with all plans, records, and other property of the United States connected with the building for said Library of Congress be, and the same is hereby, transferred to the care and custody of the Interior Department, and the expenses of such care and custody shall be paid out of any money appropriated for the construction of the building for the Library of Congress.

Mr. GAY. I move to strike out the last word. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that that amendment will not pass, for the reason that it proposes a new scheme, whereas I believe we have a foundation already laid which will serve every purpose, and I think I can offer an amendment which will meet the occasion and will be satisfactory to the House. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That hereafter, until further authorized by Congress, all further expenditures in construction on the Congressional Library building shall be restricted to the erection and completion of that portion of said building to be erected on the plan represented by plan No. 1 herewith submitted.

Mr. GAY. Mr. Chairman, I think, as I said before, that this plan is satisfactory to Congress and the country, and if we restrict further appropriations for construction to the foundation already laid, that will keep the outlay for the building within the limit which the gentleman from Kansas proposes, and at the same time will leave an opportunity for Congress, if it chooses, to add other structures at either end, or to carry out any other plan at its leisure.

Mr. MCCREARY. Will the gentleman state what the cost of the building would be on this plan?

Mr. GAY. Not to exceed the sum mentioned in the original estimate, which is $2,300,000.

Mr. Chairman, I felt disgusted and outraged at the idea which was prevalent in the minds of some gentlemen that the adoption of the plan for this Library building had fixed upon the work and upon Congress an architect who might consider it a life-long job, but when I examined the matter I found that that was not the case, and that it was merely his plan that was adopted. I will state further that the Committee on Appropriations provide for putting the work exclusively under the charge of the Secretary of the Interior, who, as other gentlemen have stated, is a prudent and efficient business man, and who is authorized by the proviso in this bill to employ any architect or to carry out the work in any manner dictated by his own judgment.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that for nearly eight years, when in Washington, I have been in daily intercourse with the architect whose design for a Library building we have before us. A more honorable gentleman I have never known, a more scrupulous, conscientious, honorable gentleman I have never known. Here is the plan [exhibiting it] upon which I voted for one wing of the building, and the main reading-room with its alcoves, etc. The plan of the whole building, when completed, is for a building that will accommodate eleven million volumes, and the idea is not thought of by Mr. Smithmeyer nor even broached to Congress, that it should be gone on with at once. To build thus much, which can be done for $2,400,000, will accommodate the existing Library and its probable increase, allowing for the natural growth of authorship and publication, two sets of all American books being contributed to the Library.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KELLEY. For a question.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is all. I just want to ask the gentleman whether he claims that the plan he holds in his hand and upon which he says he voted, is the plan that is to be found in the report of the Committee on the Library, of which Mr. Singleton was chairman.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If it is not, that is not the fault of the architect.

Mr. KELLEY. I have not read the report through. This is the essential plan of the building, which can be elaborated as time may disclose the need for further space. And, sir, instead of no competition having been invited, this gentleman encountered the competing plans of forty-one American and foreign architects. Through seven Congresses, fourteen long years, he was before the Library Committees and the Committees on Public Buildings, and his plans were scanned and were finally adopted, and the leading authorities on the other side of the Atlantic, as they express themselves in the journals of architecture and engineering, all say that the world has the plan of a perfect library building in the plan of John L. Smithmeyer for the National Library at Washington. There is not a want unprovided for. Maps, charts, music—everything of that character may be provided for in the flat compartments which are embodied in this plan, while the books are to fill the alcoves. I trust no measure will be adopted to modify the plan, and say that the American Congress shrinks from giving to posterity a building superior to structures in other lands designed for similar purposes, and equal to the probable exigencies of the country for a century to come. Two million four hundred thousand dollars will build this structure in such a manner as to meet the public wants for many years.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, it has been claimed that there was no misinformation given to the House in the Forty-ninth Congress touching the amount of money this building was to cost; and a statement has been made that "plan No. 1," as indicated a moment ago, was the plan which was in contemplation when $2,300,000 or thereabouts was fixed as the probable cost. I do not see how gentlemen can reconcile such a statement with the fact that immediately upon the work being undertaken under that law, and in pursuance of that statement, there was dug a foundation for a building that was to cover the entire space purchased.

Mr. KELLEY. Oh, I think that is not the case.

Mr. RANDALL. I know it is the case.

I am not a judge whether a man is competent to be an architect, except as I learn his capacity from others, or as I see with my own eyes the results of his work.

Gentlemen talk about an expenditure of $2,300,000 for this building. How have the officers in charge of the work conducted themselves? They obtained $500,000 more than a year ago. At the last session of Congress the Committee on Appropriations, apprehensive that something was not as it should be—to use mild language—refused to make any appropriation. The report upon which Congress acted in authorizing this building, and which has been read, states that the first appropriation will be $500,000, the next $1,000,000, and the third, to complete the building, $800,000. That was on the first plan, if you please. Yet in the face of that, the estimate from this commission this year asks for $2,000,000, after $500,000 has been already appropriated, making nearly $200,000 in excess of their own estimate for this purpose. It does seem to me that some action should be taken to bring these people who have charge of this building to a realizing sense of their responsibility in connection with the expenditure of the public money.

I want to deal with this subject impartially; the Committee on Appropriations want to do so. In the measure reported as a part of this bill they have taken care to get rid, so far as possible, of this commission, and to throw the responsibility entirely upon the single Cabinet officer who has communicated to the Committee on Appropriations the facts stated by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT]. We have therefore decided that the commission should be put out of existence, and that the $500,000 appropriated should be under the care and custody of the Secretary of the Interior. The proposition as embraced in the bill was a wise one. The one proposed by the gentleman from Kansas may be wiser; the House can judge of that.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana, addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this proposition is exhausted.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] left the House somewhat in doubt in regard to this matter. Here is the plan as is proposed in the Singleton bill——

Mr. BLOUNT. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I hope the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] will allow a question as to the foundation——

Mr. BLOUNT. I object. We have had this matter discussed on both sides——

Mr. WILLIAMS. We have not had this matter stated.

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted. Does the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] offer his proposition as a substitute or as an amendment?

Mr. GAY. I offer it as a substitute; and I would like to say——

The CHAIRMAN. One substitute for the paragraph in the bill is pending. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] will have to withhold his substitute until that is disposed of. The Chair will recognize the gentleman again.

Mr. GAY. I only wanted to say——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted, and the regular order has been called for.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask that the pending substitute be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph in the bill, and insert the following:

"That the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and House of Representatives, acting jointly, shall, within ten days after the passage of this act, invite from eminent architects, not exceeding five in number, designs and general specifications for a building for the Library of Congress, to be erected on the site purchased for that purpose in the city of Washington, the cost of the building not to exceed $3,000,000; and the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated to be expended under the direction of the above-named committees, to pay for the said designs and general specifications. The said committees shall jointly report to Congress their action in the premises on or before the 20th day of December, 1888.

"That the work now in progress on the building for the Library of Congress shall be suspended, and the commission authorized by act of Congress approved April 15, 1886, be, and the same is hereby, dissolved.

"That the property purchased for a site for the Library of Congress, including the buildings thereon, together with all plans, records, and other property of the United States connected with the building for said Library of Congress, be, and the same is hereby, transferred to the care and custody of the Interior Department; the expenses of such care and custody shall be paid out of any money already appropriated for the construction of the building for the Library of Congress."

Mr. McCREARY. Is this offered as a substitute for the whole paragraph from line 4, on page 44, to line 3, on page 45?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a substitute for the whole paragraph.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the substitute by adding what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the said committee shall also inquire into the practicability of securing proper Library accommodations for Congress and the District of Columbia by constructing a Library building and for a public library on one of the public parks of the city of Washington, at a cost not exceeding $2,000,000, in which shall be deposited from time to time the surplus books accumulated in the Congressional Library, or that shall hereafter so accumulate, not required for the use of Congress, and said public library shall be open to all the citizens of the United States, and report thereon.

Mr. HOLMAN. Although that expresses my views, I will withdraw it.

The question recurred on Mr. RYAN'S substitute for the paragraph of the bill.

Mr. NUTTING demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 34.

Mr. NUTTING. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. RYAN and Mr. NUTTING.

The committee again divided.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to offer a substitute for the pending proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. After we get out of this I will not object.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. OATES. I am aware of that.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the proposition will be read.

Mr. RANDALL. I object, when the House is dividing on one amendment, to have another amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will resume their places and the division will proceed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 114, noes 50.

So the substitute was agreed to.

APPROVAL OF BILLS.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message, in writing, was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

The message further announced approval of bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 7265) for the erection of a public building at Hoboken, N. J.;

An act (H. R. 7913) granting a pension to Nellie Palfrey Goodwin;

An act (H. R. 417) granting a pension to David Strunk; and

An act (H. R. 955) granting a pension to Mary M. Sweet.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 901) for the relief of Sophia W. Wright;

A bill (S. 1241) to prevent obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City by dumping or otherwise, and to punish and prevent such offenses;

A bill (S. 2882) to pay Aaron Friedheim the rebate due him under the act of March 3, A. D. 1883; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 183) authorizing the loan of tents and tent equipage to the veteran organizations of the Society of the Army of the Potomac.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the Clerk read on.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXPENSES OF THE COLLECTION OF REVENUE FROM SALES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Salaries and commissions of registers and receivers: For salaries and commissions of registers of land offices and receivers of public moneys at district land offices, at not exceeding $3,000 each, $500,000.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I move the following amendment.

And the provisions of an act approved March 3, 1883, entitled "An act in relation to certain fees of registers and receivers," is hereby re-enacted.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order against that amendment. It creates a new law.

Mr. CATCHINGS. What new law does it create?

Mr. RANDALL. It proposes to re-enact the law which was repealed.

Mr. CATCHINGS. What is that act?

Mr. RANDALL. If there was no law repealed there would be no necessity for this action. I will send up to the Chairman the law to which reference was made, and I will leave the matter to the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the statute which has been sent up by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I would like to be heard briefly upon the point of order before the Chair rules upon this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman as soon as the Clerk concludes the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOR SALARIES AND COMMISSIONS OF REGISTERS AND RECEIVERS.

For salaries and commissions of registers at the land offices and receivers of public moneys at district land offices, at not exceeding $3,000 each, $500,000. And hereafter all fees collected by registers or receivers from any source whatever which would increase their salaries beyond $3,000 each a year shall be covered into the Treasury, except only so much as may be necessary to pay the actual cost of clerical service employed exclusively in contested cases; and they shall make report quarterly, under oath, for all expenditures for such clerical service, with vouchers therefor.

Mr. RANDALL. The provision placed on appropriation act of the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress was offered in the House by Mr. SPRINGER, of Illinois, and adopted. At the second session of that Congress it was recommended to be made permanent law, and Congress so determined.

Mr. CATCHINGS. All these fees mentioned in the proviso to the sundry civil bill passed at the last session of Congress by virtue of the act of March 3, 1883, were retained by the registers and receivers. I will ask the Clerk to read the act of 1883, which my friend, Mr. MCSHANE, has on his desk before him.

The Clerk read as follows:

2. That registers and receivers shall, upon application, furnish plats or diagrams of townships in their respective districts showing what lands are vacant and what lands are taken; and shall be allowed to receive compensation therefor from the party obtaining said plat or diagram at such rates as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and said officers shall, upon application by the proper State or Territorial authority, furnish for the purpose of taxation a list of all lands sold in their respective districts, together with the names of the purchasers; and shall be allowed to receive compensation for the same not to exceed 10 cents per entry; and the sums thus received for plats and lines shall not be considered or taken into account in determining the maximum compensation of said officers.

Mr. CATCHINGS. The Commissioner of the General Land Office in 1887 recommended that that law be so amended as to provide that these fees, which theretofore had been received by the receivers and registers of the public-land offices, should be paid into the Treasury, and should constitute there a special fund to be used by the office for the purpose of paying necessary clerk-hire, rent of offices, and other incidental expenses of that character in connection with the public-land service. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] offered an amendment to the sundry civil bill of 1886 which only partly carried into effect the recommendations of the Commissioner. That is to say, his amendment required that the fees should be paid into the Treasury, but it did not go further, as recommended, and provide that after reaching the Treasury they should constitute a special fund to be used for clerk-hire and other purposes in the interest of the general public.

The effect of that provision has been to create a great deal of trouble in the administration of the Land Office. Before that the fees were used in employing such additional clerical force as was absolutely necessary to render proper service to the people. These fees, however, have been taken from them now, and the consequence is that the business of the Land Office is in a great state of disaster, I may almost say, as appears from the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which I ask to have read from the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF LOCAL LAND OFFICES.

From this fund is to be paid the hire of clerks, rent of office room, purchase of office furniture and fuel, and all incidental expenses of one hundred and twelve land offices. The appropriations for this service for the past two years have been little more than one-half the amount actually required. My estimates for these two years were, I regret to say, below the actual necessities of the service, and these meager estimates were, against my earnest protest, so much further reduced in the appropriation acts of Congress that the local land offices of the United States are almost in a condition of dilapidation, the plats and records unbound, the most necessary office conveniences wanting, and volumes of current work in almost hopeless arrears.

Expenditures of the first necessity to the proper conduct of these offices are constantly refused because of want of sufficient appropriations. The means for payment of clerk-hire are so deficient that duties in the examination of proofs, the allowance of entries, and other functions of local land officers which require the exercise of care and judgment and involve large public and private interests, can only be nominally performed. The maximum offices are overwhelmed with work that can not be accomplished. Registers and receivers are driven with their labors almost beyond endurance. The few clerks allowed are overworked and underpaid. The record information to which the public is entitled can only be partially furnished. Offices are daily crowded with throngs of entrymen and applicants, but few of whom can be accommodated. Settlers and others are subject to exasperating delays and to expenses that can be ill afforded in waiting for the transaction of their business. Valuable records are insecurely protected because the appropriations have not been sufficient to pay for office-rent, and registers and receivers have been generally compelled to hire such room as they could afford to pay for out of their personal means.

Previous to the last fiscal year registers and receivers were allowed to retain the fees received for reducing testimony to writing and furnishing copies of plats and records. We ought to get this, besides rent, etc. The moneys so received and retained enabled the local officers to employ additional clerks needed to do the work. As a matter of good administration and a proper supervision over such receipts and expenditures I recommended in 1885 that the moneys received be deposited in the Treasury and made an appropriation to pay for additional clerk-hire.

During the last Congress provision was made for depositing the money in the Treasury, but no appropriation was made of it to enable the local officers to do the work, except only in contest cases. In the larger volume of business, not involving individual contests, the work remained to be done, but there was no money to pay for it.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Now, Mr. Chairman, the fees which were earned by the registers and receivers of the land offices during this fiscal year, and turned into the Treasury by virtue of the amendment to the sundry civil bill of 1886, amounted to $88,945.56, or considerably more than one-half of the entire cost of the administration of this land office. This money was taken from the people themselves, and unquestionably in some shape or other it ought to be returned to them in an increase of efficient service to be rendered them in the transaction of this branch of the public business.

If the gentleman in charge of this bill would consent that this money so paid into the Treasury should constitute, what is required and recommended by the Commissioner, a special fund, to be used by him in the employment of additional clerical force in order that the people might have a better service at the land offices, I should be perfectly willing and glad to agree to that. But I can not offer an amendment of that sort, for it would be manifestly a change of existing law, and would be subject to the point of order. The proposition I have advanced, therefore, is intended to be declaratory in its character, though in terms it proposes to re enact the special act of 1883, under which the fees were so applied. It was offered by me merely to have a construction placed upon the act.

I think the effect of the act of 1886 was not to repeal permanently the special law of 1883, under which the officers were allowed to retain the fees. In 1887 we find the word "hereafter" used in connection with these fees, as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania; but that might be properly limited, as in this case, to the fiscal year for which the bill was passed, and which that appropriation was intended to cover; and I apprehend that inasmuch as under our rule it is not competent by way of amendment to change existing law, the true construction of that provision must be that it was of temporary application, unless by its terms it was clearly designed to operate perpetually in the future.

That is the point I make, and I submit it to the Chair. I want to say this in addition: That if you can possibly construe it as I think it ought to be construed, the public service will be benefited.

Mr. RANDALL. The act of Congress limited the salaries to be received by these registers and receivers to $3,000; that no one should receive a salary in excess of that amount. The Committee on Appropriations discovered these officers were receiving from fees additional amounts, and therefore at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress inserted a repealing clause, so far as related to that particular increase of pay. They then, at the second session, made it a permanent law. That point has been decided frequently. The word "hereafter" is used so as to prevent any additional sums going to these receivers or registers beyond the maximum salary of $3,000. I maintain, so far as the point of order is concerned, that the provision in the sundry civil bill last session was intended to prevent what was being done under the statute the gentleman wants to re-enact; and it does change existing law.

Mr. McSHANE. In 1886 the Forty-ninth Congress did pass a law carrying out in a measure the recommendations of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; but the Springer amendment only went so far in carrying out that recommendation as to cover the fees into the Treasury. The recommendation of the Commissioner, which I hold in my hand and will read, is as follows:

I recommend a modification of the act of March 3, 1883, so as to provide that the cost of reducing testimony to writing and fees for abstracts of records and copies of plats be covered into the Treasury and placed to the credit of the proper appropriation for the payment of additional clerk-hire in the local land offices.

The Committee on Appropriations amended the sundry civil bill so as to cover the fees into the Treasury, but in doing so did not provide for the payment of the clerical help to perform the service in earning the money to be covered into the Treasury except in one instance, that of reducing testimony to writing. A very large sum of this money is earned by furnishing abstracts and plats, the money collected for which is also by the act covered into the Treasury.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office in his last report calls the attention of the House to the report of 1885, and calls the attention of the House to the fact that insufficient appropriations are being made to perform the necessary service in the local land offices; and in view of the fact that a former bill had taken away from registers and receivers the emoluments arising from fees, he recommended an appropriation for contingent expenses of the local land offices of $217,826.45. In this bill $500,000 is appropriated for commissions and salaries of registers and receivers. The same amount was appropriated for the last fiscal year. I am informed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office to-day that there is a deficiency of $60,000 in the appropriation for last year, and that Congress will be asked to appropriate in the deficiency bill at the present session $60,000 for the payment of salaries for the last fiscal year.

Mr. RANDALL. Just there let me say that we do not proceed on the assumption the gentleman states. The President of the United States has the power to reduce the number of registers and receivers, and our information in the committee led us to believe the President of the United States should reduce the number to the extent of twenty. Therefore the amount recommended for the current year is based on the idea that there ought to be a reduction or consolidation.

Mr. McSHANE. Does the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations mean to say that the total number of local land offices in the United States should be reduced to twenty?

Mr. RANDALL. No; it should be reduced twenty in number. There are two hundred and twenty-two.

Mr. McSHANE. Oh, no; there are only one hundred and eleven.

Mr. RANDALL. There are two hundred and twenty-two; one hundred and eleven registers and one hundred and eleven receivers.

Mr. McSHANE. One hundred and eleven land offices.

Mr. RANDALL. I speak of the officials. We think in the committee the President of the United States should exercise his power and reduce those officials about twenty.

Mr. McSHANE. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the homestead law it is meant, as far as possible, to be self-supporting, not for the purpose of collecting revenue, but to bear the expense of performing the service. Now, what do we find?

Mr. RANDALL. The public lands are a source of revenue to the Government.

Mr. McSHANE. I am speaking of the fees collected from homesteads. The last report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office shows that the revenue from homesteads alone for 1887 was nearly $1,700,000; $1,700,000 collected from the settlers on the public domain, who are supposed to have little, in many cases nothing at all, not even enough to pay necessary legal fees in proving up their claims.

Is it pretended that this Government is to collect from this class of people a revenue of $1,700,000 in every year when we must admit that the intention of the law was that the minimum amount should be collected from settlers on the public domain—only enough to meet the expense of maintaining the clerical force? In 1884 there was $145,000 appropriated for clerk-hire and contingent expenses in one hundred and six offices. In addition to this the registers and receivers received all of the fees collected for reducing testimony to writing, and also for the furnishing of abstracts and plats, but in the present bill, with one hundred and eleven land offices, the committee appropriate only $150,000 and cover into the Treasury the fees collected. Of the $120,000 that was appropriated for contingent expenses last year $86,000 was covered into the Treasury, leaving a balance of only $34,000 in that fund. Now, I desire to say that the money appropriated by this bill is not money taken out of the Treasury at all. The salaries of the registers and receivers, and also of the clerical force in the local land offices are based upon the amount of fees collected in those offices, and if there is not $3,000 collected in fees the officer does not get that amount.

This money is appropriated merely as a guaranty fund; it is collected back from settlers proving up on their claims; so that in the appropriation of this money there is not a dollar of real expenditure on the part of the Government. The settlers pay the money into the local land offices, and from there it is covered into the Treasury and appropriated back by Congress for the payment of the expenses of the service.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, this is a plain matter. The law provides that the salaries of registers and receivers shall not exceed $3,000 per annum. Congress discovered that about $85,000 or $86,000 was going into the pockets of these officials in excess of the legal amount, and they enacted a law to prevent that. It never has been contended at all that this $85,000 was needed in connection with the hiring of clerks. In the very next appropriation bill there is an appropriation of $155,000 for clerks in these local land offices to perform services of every character that are there required, as authorized by law.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Is it not a fact that in the maximum offices the registers and receivers have to hire their own offices and pay their own clerks?

Mr. RANDALL. I have no knowledge on that subject.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I state it to be a fact that they are required to do so.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no knowledge of that.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I state it as a fact that they have to hire their own offices and pay their own clerk-hire, and the compensation they receive is entirely inadequate.

Mr. HERMANN. Not even clerk-hire is allowed to most of them.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, there is a rule of this House which prescribes that no provision changing existing law shall be incorporated in any appropriation bill. That is a good rule, and it is a pity it is not adhered to more strictly. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is quick to invoke that rule——

Mr. RANDALL. The committee did not originate this. The House took the first step.

Mr. BLANCHARD. One moment. My friend from Pennsylvania, I say, is quick to invoke that rule whenever an amendment is offered in Committee of the Whole which tends to change existing law, but he and the able committee of which he is the head are not consistent, in that they do not always themselves regard that rule of the House. In June, 1886, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], who now stands before me, offered an amendment to the sundry civil bill which was then under consideration, as follows:

All fees collected by receivers or registers from any source whatever which would increase their salaries beyond $3,000 each a year shall be covered into the Treasury.

That amendment was in violation of existing law, to wit, the act of March 3, 1883, the same referred to awhile ago by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS], and which he caused to be read at the Clerk's desk.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] and myself both made the point of order that the amendment was violative of the rule of the House, because it proposed to change existing law, but the then chairman of the Committee of the Whole ruled that the point of order was not well taken, and the amendment was adopted and became a part of the law of 1886.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it will be observed that the said amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] did not contain the word "hereafter," so that its effect was confined to the appropriations made in the sundry civil bill of 1886. But the Committee on Appropriations of that Congress, in the very next session, to wit, the short session of the Forty-ninth Congress, in the sundry civil bill of that year (1887), inserted again the language of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, adding to it the word "hereafter."

Mr. RANDALL. I think the word "hereafter" was in the bill as it was reported from the committee.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The point I make is this, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, against which the point of order was made at the time by the gentleman from Kansas and myself, which point of order was ruled not well taken, applied by its language only to the sundry civil bill of 1886. It was not a general provision of law, and ceased to operate with the year to which that bill applied. But the Committee on Appropriations, in the sundry civil bill of the following year, as reported by my friend from Pennsylvania, reincorporated that language, adopted it as their own, with the additional word "hereafter," so that it would become a general provision of law, having effect in and for the years to come and not be confined to the year of that appropriation bill.

In that, I say, they themselves violated the very rule of this House which the gentleman from Pennsylvania is to-day seeking to invoke against the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi. I rose to point out that if the provision to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has referred is a provision of general law, it has become such by reason of the violation of a rule of this House by the Appropriations Committee itself.

But, Mr. Chairman, what is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi? I take it that it is not subject to the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It must be construed with reference to the previous laws upon the same subject-matter, namely, the sundry civil appropriation act of 1887 and the act approved March 3, 1883. Those are laws upon the same subject-matter, and it is a well-known rule of legal interpretation that all laws upon the same subject-matter must be construed together, so as to give effect to each.

This amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi is in the nature of a reaffirmance or re-enactment of the law of March 3, 1883. That is a statute of Congress to-day. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois in 1886, and reaffirmed in the sundry civil appropriation act of 1887, does not repeal, and was not intended to repeal, the statute of 1883. Repeal of laws by implication is not favored. I think therefore that, considering those two laws together and considering in that connection the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi, it will be found that this amendment is not violative of the rule which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has invoked.

And now, Mr. Chairman, before closing permit me to point out to the House the disastrous effects which have followed the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois in 1886 and reincorporated in the sundry civil appropriation act of the following year. I hold in my hand and will read a statement of the effect of that amendment, prepared by a party competent to speak on that subject:

Upon the passage of this act requiring these fees to be turned over to the Government the local land offices were deprived of this entire clerical force, which had been employed by the registers and receivers and paid out of this special fund, and no provision whatever was made to supply this deficiency in the clerical force of the offices, and to furnish the accommodation which had in this manner been extended to the public. The natural consequence has been that the land offices with the force employed by the Government, deprived of this special force, paid for out of these fees, could not possibly do the work, and the public has been deprived of that accommodation to which it certainly is entitled, and for which it has been and is ready and anxious to pay, but which it was not allowed to do under the instructions incident to the enactment above referred to.

The work therefore has not been done, the Government has gained nothing, the public is bitterly complaining and attacking the system of reform, which will not allow it to procure service and information for which it is willing to pay and which it is impossible to procure, for the reason that the Government will not employ the necessary force to do this work, nor will it allow the registers and receivers to use the fees intended for this class of work to defray the necessary clerical expenses of doing the same.

Those are some of the baleful effects which followed the enactment into law of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois in 1886, which was subsequently incorporated as a general provision of law in the sundry civil act of 1887.

In view of these disastrous consequences I express the hope that if it be possible to hold the point of order made against the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi not well taken, the Chair will so rule.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations did not originate this provision of law, although, upon examination, they found it to be a beneficial enactment. And they did not take the House at all by surprise in this matter. I hold in my hand the report of the Committee on Appropriations which accompanied the sundry civil appropriation bill of the second session of the last Congress. I ask the Clerk to read the passage I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Attached to the appropriation for salaries and commissions of registers and receivers of land offices the following is inserted, being the same provision as is contained in the sundry civil act for 1887, except that the word "hereafter" is inserted:

"And hereafter all fees collected by the registers or receivers, from any source whatever, which would increase their salaries beyond $3,000 each a year, shall be covered into the Treasury, except only so much as may be necessary to pay the actual cost of clerical services employed exclusively in contested cases; and they shall make report quarterly, under oath, of all expenditures for such clerical services, with vouchers therefor."

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations, following the suggestion of the House, following the wish of Congress, incorporated in the sundry civil appropriation bill this paragraph, which had been found to work beneficially, and made it a permanent law.

But, Mr. Chairman, a single statement as to the point involved here and the effect of the law in connection with it will make plain to the Chair that the point of order is valid. Under the old law these officials were receiving in the aggregate about $86,000 in excess of the compensation of $3,000 each provided for by statute. Under the operation of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois that excess was cut off, and it remains cut off, as it will until that word "hereafter" is made nugatory. That is the whole question.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I would like to ask the gentleman one question before he takes his seat. Was not the incorporation of the word "hereafter" by the Committee on Appropriations in their bill a change of existing law?

Mr. RANDALL. It was.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Was it not violative of the rule of the House?

Mr. RANDALL. But we called attention to the matter; and such was the unanimity of sentiment in the House that not a member, so far as I recollect, rose to object or make a point of order.

Mr. BLANCHARD. But did not the Committee on Appropriations in that year pass the bill under a suspension of the rules?

Mr. RANDALL. I will not undertake to answer that question. The gentleman may be right in suggesting that they did, though I think they did not.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I do not assert that such was the fact; I merely asked that question. It has frequently happened that these bills at a short session have been passed under a suspension of the rules—a proceeding which, of course, cuts off all points of order and all amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on it.

Mr. RANDALL. That does not change the law. There it is.

Mr. PETERS. I desire to say a word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. PETERS. Repeals of statutes by implication are not favored. The gentleman says it is a change of law by putting in the word "hereafter." If the word "hereafter" had not been put in then the change would apply only to one fiscal year. Suppose you leave out the word "hereafter," the statute means the same thing. The law of 1886, when the change was made, said these fees should be covered into the Treasury. That is for that fiscal year. They came in the next year and put in the word "hereafter." "Hereafter" has no significance, because if not there the law of 1886 would be in effect.

Now the only word they can get in force and stress equal to that word "hereafter" is to say by implication that word "hereafter" repeals the prior law; and if repeals by implication are not favored then that idea must not be favored; that is the mere insertion of a word which amounts to nothing, the statute being as forcible without it as with it. The insertion of the word can only be regarded as a repeal by implication, and such repeals are not favored.

Mr. RANDALL. Admitting for the sake of argument everything alleged, I ask to bring gentlemen back to what the law is. There is the law and this is a proposition to change it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Some stress is put on the word "hereafter" by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. The first provision passed by Congress, which I had the honor to move, was itself a general law, and did not need the word "hereafter" to apply to all time to come until changed by Congress. I will read it:

And all fees collected by registers or receivers from any source whatever, which would increase their salaries beyond $3,000 each a year, shall be covered into the Treasury, except only so much as may be necessary to pay the actual cost of the clerical service employed exclusively in contested cases; but they shall make report quarterly under oath of all expenditures for such clerical service, with vouchers therefor.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Does the gentleman from Illinois say the insertion of the word "hereafter" does not add any additional force to the law?

Mr. SPRINGER. It was already a general law.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I understand; but answer that question.

Mr. SPRINGER. It was not pending.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Did it add additional efficacy to the section.

Mr. SPRINGER. It declared the intention of the committee, that it was to apply hereafter, and it did apply hereafter. It was only cumulative evidence to that effect, that such was the intention of the committee. It was the law. If those gentlemen are not satisfied with the law they can resign and there are others who will be glad to take their places.

Mr. PETERS. We want the people who go to the land office to have all the clerical service they may need.

Mr. RANDALL. The next paragraph provides for that.

Mr. PETERS. That next paragraph does not provide for that.

Mr. RANDALL. That next paragraph refers to clerical force of every sort and description.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman's amendment as incorporated in the bill of 1886 had not the effect of the enactment of a general law. The language used in his amendment does not bear him out. It has been ruled in the Court of Claims and in the Supreme Court that an appropriation bill, or any terms used in it, have effect only for the time the bill has to run, that is for the fiscal year, unless by the terms used the plain enactment of a general law was intended. So the language used by the gentleman from Illinois can not be considered as the expression of the intention on the part of Congress or of the House to enact a general law.

And the interpretation I put on it was placed on it by the Committee on Appropriations, for the following year, when they brought in a similar one and inserted the word "hereafter," intending it to be a general provision of law.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman cite the case in the Court of Claims to which he refers?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I said it has been decided in the Court of Claims and in the Supreme Court that the language of an appropriation bill was to have effect only for the time the bill had to run; that is, for the fiscal year.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is true as to an appropriation, but a general enactment in an appropriation bill is as good as made in any other bill. Such is the law made upon the appropriation bill providing for the refunding of the public debt by the purchase of United States bonds.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] rests upon clause 3 of Rule XXI, which provides that—

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

It is admitted by all who have argued the question that there is now being turned into the Treasury of the United States under the act of 1886–'87 about $87,000 annually of fees that had under the act of 1883 been retained by these officers; and it is sought to re-enact the statute of 1883.

The amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi provides:

And the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, entitled "An act in relation to certain fees allowed to registers and receivers," are hereby re-enacted.

The Chair thinks the existing law requires these officers to turn over all moneys received by them in excess of the salary of $3,000. The amendment itself provides for a re-enactment, which could not be done without there had been a previous repeal of the act.

Mr. CATCHINGS. If the Chair will permit me, I said that while this did in terms propose to re-enact the law, it was simply to secure a construction of the law. That it was in its nature declaratory..

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair remembers that statement of the gentleman, and it is proper that the Chair should have called attention to the fact.

The Chair is of opinion that the language of the act of 1886–'87 is so broad that it brings this provision sought to be incorporated in the bill under the third clause of the twenty-first rule, which the Chair has read: and that to adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi would be to work a change of existing law.

The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I now move a further amendment, for the purpose of carrying into effect the recommendations of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. It changes existing law, but it ought to be changed, and I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not make the point of order against it.

The Clerk read as follows:

And all fees paid into the Treasury by said officers shall constitute a special fund to be used in paying for such additional clerk-hire and office-rent as the Secretary of the Interior may deem it proper to engage and pay.

Mr. RANDALL. I must make the point of order against that.

I will state in this connection that I am forced to make points of order where changes are sought to be made in the bill, or otherwise it would be mutilated from beginning to end.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment changes existing law, and hence is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I wish to ask, Mr. Chairman, if the Clerk has concluded the reading of the paragraph ending with line 12, on page 46?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that the reading of it had not been completed.

The Clerk will read the paragraph now.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXPENSES OF THE COLLECTION OF REVENUE FROM SALES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Salaries and commissions of registers and receivers: For salaries and commissions of registers of land offices and receivers of public moneys at district land offices, at not exceeding $3,000 each, $500,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I send up an amendment to this provision.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 11 and 12, strike out "$500,000" and insert "$524,000."

Mr. BLANCHARD. I presume the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not desire to raise the point of order upon that amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I would if I could. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. Chairman, to those who have looked into the operations of the General Land Office, and the amounts appropriated for carrying on that branch of the public business, the appropriations carried by this bill for this service are known to be entirely inadequate. Here is an appropriation of $500,000 to pay for the salaries and commissions of the registers and receivers of all public land offices throughout the country.

There are 112 land offices in the United States. At each of these land offices there are two commissioned officials, each of whom is entitled to a salary and commissions. These officials are known as registers of the United States land offices and receivers of public moneys. The land offices are located as follows: In Alabama, 2; in Arkansas, 4; in Arizona, 2; in California, 10; in Colorado, 10; in Dakota, 10; in Florida, 1; in Idaho, 5; in Iowa, 1; in Kansas, 10; in Louisiana, 2; in Michigan, 4; in Minnesota, 9; in Mississippi, 1; in Missouri, 3; in Montana, 3; in Nebraska, 9; in Nevada, 2; in New Mexico, 2; in Oregon, 5; in Utah, 1; in Washington Territory, 5; in Wisconsin, 6; in Wyoming Territory, 3; making a total of 110; and there have been two others recently established, the locations of which are as yet unknown to me.

Now, Mr. Chairman, for these one hundred and twelve land offices, there being two officials entitled to the salary and commissions at each office, we find a total number of registers and receivers throughout the United States of two hundred and twenty-four. They are entitled to a salary each of $500 a year and 1 per cent. commission upon the amount of sales of public lands. Their salaries and commissions combined are limited so as not to exceed in any one year for any one official the sum of $3,000. If all of these land offices, one hundred and twelve, sold public lands enough so that the commissions of the register and receiver, added to the salary of $500, would amount to the full complement of $3,000 for each of the two hundred and twenty-four officials, the total amount that would be required to pay both salaries and commissions would be $672,000.

It thus appears, Mr. Chairman, that the amount appropriated by this bill, $500,000, is $172,000 less than will be required to pay these salaries and commissions if the officials at the various land offices earn the full complement of their salary and commissions. I anticipate the learned gentlemen on the Committee on Appropriations will endeavor to meet this argument by stating that all the one hundred and twelve land offices with two hundred and twenty-four officials do not realize as much as $3,000 each per year. That is granted.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have before me a statement of what was earned by each of these land officials at each of these several land offices throughout the United States in the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1887. We may surely take that as a criterion by which to judge what they will earn in the fiscal year which will end June 30, 1889. Now, the statement which I hold in my hand shows that in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, the total salaries and commissions earned by these United States land officers at the several land offices throughout the country aggregated $535,682.94. Here is the statement:

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. RYAN. I will yield my time to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, in 1887 it required $535,682 to meet the salaries and commissions of the registers and receivers, at which time there were only one hundred and nine United States land offices, whereas there are now one hundred and twelve. So that on the basis of the amount needed in 1887 the amount appropriated in this bill is more than $35,000 short

Mr. RYAN. But my friend does not maintain that that statement is correct as to the expenditures for this service in 1887, does he?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, the statement I have read from gives the amount that was earned in salaries and commissions by the United States land offices in 1887.

Mr. RYAN. The amount of the appropriation for 1887 was $490,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The appropriation was $490,000, but the amount earned was as I have stated.

Mr. RYAN. The deficiency was $38,400; the total expenditure was only $528,000,

Mr. BLANCHARD. The statement I have read is official. It was taken from the Book of Estimates submitted to this Congress.

In 1887 there was appropriated for these receivers and registers $490,000. The amount they actually earned, according to statement read, was $535,682. In 1886 I stood here, as I am now standing, and protested against the small appropriation for this service; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] met this protest by reading what had been expended in the last six months of the fiscal year preceding that time, and argued that the appropriation, judged by that standard, would be sufficient.

Instead of that being so, however, there was reported as a deficiency in that appropriation at the end of the fiscal year $38,000. For the present fiscal year, the one which ends on the 30th of this month, the appropriation was $500,000, and there is also a deficiency much larger than the preceding one. This deficiency is $60,000. I desire to call that fact to the attention of the Committee of the Whole. In 1887, for the present fiscal year, the appropriation was $500,000, and it was not enough by $60,000. In the general deficiency appropriation bill, which will be shortly reported by the Committee on Appropriations, there will have to be incorporated the sum of $60,000 to meet the deficiency in the expense of this very service.

In view of that fact, Mr. Chairman, in view of the many deficiencies which come in at the end of every fiscal year, is it not strange that the Committee on Appropriations should persist in reporting an amount so entirely insufficient to meet the expense of this service? Notwithstanding the deficiency of $60,000 for the present fiscal year, the committee brings in the same appropriation of $500,000. Instead of that sum the amount appropriated should be $560,000. It is true, however, that the estimate for this service is only $524,000.

My amendment is made to cover that amount. The estimate is far too small; but small as it is, these gentlemen have cut it down $24,000. It is time to put a stop to this parsimony. I believe in economy justly and judiciously applied; but when you come to make an appropriation, make it for an amount commensurate with the needs of the public service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CHEADLE. I yield my time to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, we have the lesson of 1888 before us. The fiscal year will end in a few days. If $500,000 was not enough in 1888, and there is a deficiency of $60,000 in this very appropriation for the present fiscal year, in the name of common sense why is it the Committee on Appropriations does not heed the lesson and bring in an appropriation sufficient to carry on the land-office business of the country?

Do they want another deficiency of sixty or seventy thousand dollars at the end of the next fiscal year? What is the use of waiting for a deficiency bill to pay these officers of the Government their just dues? Why not appropriate it at one time and in this bill? Why take two bites at this cherry?

In addition, sir, to what I have said, I will read further, briefly, from what is appended in the Book of Estimates, by way of a note to this estimate of $524,000, which is the amount my amendment covers. In this statement accompanying the estimate it is insisted in the strongest manner that there shall be a sufficient appropriation to meet the necessities of this service, and yet, with all this before them, the gentlemen of the committee have failed to make an appropriation anything like what is demanded. This statement is as follows:

The estimate submitted for compensation of registers and receivers is based upon the salaries earned and the fees and commissions collected and covered into the Treasury by them during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, with the addition of the office to be opened at Buffalo, Wyo. For a number of years it has been found necessary to appropriate annually large amounts to cover deficiencies. The appropriation for the fiscal year just closed covers but 90 per cent. of the amount required for the service.

Mark you, gentlemen, that reference to the appropriation for 1887. The appropriation for 1888, the present fiscal year, was for less than 90 per cent. of what was required for this branch of the service.

The amount estimated for herein is based upon the actual amount paid registers and receivers during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, and therefore is not excessive. The compensation of registers and receivers is limited by law not to exceed $3,000 to any officer, regardless of the amount in excess of that sum earned by him. By the provisions of the act of August 4, 1886, it becomes necessary to appropriate larger sums for the compensation of registers and receivers, although the actual amounts received by them are no greater than they were prior to the passage of that act. During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, the fees and commissions earned by registers and receivers amounted to $1,752,000, while the entire appropriation for their salaries and commissions was $490,000.

So that, Mr. Chairman, it is apparent this money is not a charge upon the Treasury. The fees and commission earned at the various land offices yield $1,752,000 a year revenue to the Government, and out of that amount it is simply asked that justice shall be done to this branch of the public service in the way of an appropriation adequate to the needs of the service. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, as I said in the beginning, I repeat now, that the ground the committee took in reference to this appropriation was, first, that the President had the power to consolidate many of these land offices——

Mr. BLANCHARD. But he did not do it.

Mr. RANDALL. That the President had the power to consolidate many of these land offices, and that we had no other mode of making the suggestion than in the way we have made it.

Mr. VANDEVER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a few observations in reference to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. From my limited knowledge of the operations of the land system in the district from which I come, I am satisfied that there is no branch of the public service to-day that stands more in need of reform and retrenchment. The amendment of the gentleman proposes to increase an appropriation. Now, sir, I desire to say in connection with this amendment that in the land office of the district from which I come there have been suspended entries of public lands under the desert-land act for the last ten or twelve years, ever since the passage of that act in 1877.

It does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, from the manner in which the public-land offices have been administered in that part of the country, that in practice the land laws have amounted in many instances to an actual conspiracy against the settler rather than a means of aiding him in acquiring the right to a homestead upon the public lands. I know this is a strong observation to make, but I call the attention of the committee to one circumstance. This desert-land act was passed, I think, on the 3d of March, 1877, and in one land district in the State of California there were upwards of three hundred locations. The parties who made those locations within from thirty to sixty days of the passage of the act proceeded to transfer them to two or three men, who to-day hold those lands in their own hands, although the law specifically provided, as I understand it, that no one man should have the benefit of more than one location under the desert-land act.

And while the right of these persons to make these transfers was subsequently called in question by settlers who desired to acquire these lands for homesteads, representing that these entries of so-called "desert lands" were, in many cases, made upon agricultural lands—not desert lands at all—those cases have, upon one pretense and another, been pending in the Department to this day without any determination by the Commissioner of the General Land Office or by the Secretary of the Interior.

I mention this as one circumstance of many tending to show that this whole public land system to-day requires thorough investigation. Some method of reform needs to be applied by which the settler shall be protected. The system was designed for the benefit of honest settlers upon the public lands; yet a few men—not exceeding four or five—in that portion of California hold under their control to-day some 300,000 or 400,000 acres, located under this desert-land act; and no relief can be obtained by any appeal to the General Land Office or to the Interior Department itself.

In these observations I do not intend to cast any reflection upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office or upon the head of the Interior Department. There is maintained in that Department a kind of machinery by the operation of which subordinates in their influence in the administration of these laws seem to be paramount over the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior. You may claim a right; it is questioned; you put in your complaint; it goes to the General Land Office, and is put through this routine mill. The head of the Department is no more responsible perhaps for the abuses which are practiced there than is any member of this House. Yet the fact remains that, in the multitude of their engagements and with the varied responsibilities resting upon them, neither the Commissioner of the General Land Office nor the Secretary of the Interior seems to be able to fathom the abyss in regard to the misapplication of these laws and the frauds which are perpetrated in the machinery of their offices, and apparently under their observation.

Mr. MORROW obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to my colleague [Mr. VANDEVER].

Mr. VANDEVER. It is high time, then, Mr. Chairman, that in making these appropriations some limit should be placed upon them and some care exercised. These appropriations are proposed in good faith by the committee, and in the same spirit are advocated on this floor; but I tell you, sir, that no portion of the public service to-day requires more thorough investigation and reform, for the purpose of protecting the interests of settlers on the public lands, than does the public land system, especially as it is administered in the land districts of California.

For instance, a man may, in good faith, make a location upon the public land for the purpose of establishing a homestead; somebody settles alongside of him and disputes his right; a contest arises; the question goes before the local land officers; a decision is rendered, and an appeal is taken. The appeal goes to the General Land Office, and from there it is carried before the Secretary of the Interior. The contest is permitted to run along year after year until this honest, well-meaning settler upon the public land, discouraged by the obstacles thrown in his way, in many instances, as I believe, by the connivance of men in the land offices, abandons his right.

I feel justified in affirming my belief, which can be supported by the representations of men of unquestioned veracity, that some of the lands entered as "desert lands" in the Visalia land district, and held under assignments of the right of location made in 1877, are not desert lands at all. Lands in Fresno, Tulare, and Kern Counties which have been taken up in this way would to-day, if they could be occupied and improved by settlers, be worth a thousand dollars an acre. Yet they have been held up from 1877 to the present time as desert lands; and the papers connected with those cases are stowed away in musty pigeonholes of the Interior Department without any attempt to determine this question affecting the rights of multitudes of honest settlers in that part of California.

That is the condition of things there to-day; and we sit here in this House and talk about these appropriations in a calm and deliberate manner, as if there were no abuse under the surface needing to be reformed. I make these observations in justice to the public service and to the head of the Department himself, as well as to the honest settler who is to-day defrauded of his rights under the operation of this land system, which, as I have said, is so administered in many instances as to amount to an actual conspiracy against the settler rather than in aid of his rights and for the benefit of the Government.

The important fact has been stated here that the sum of $1,700,000 has been paid into the coffers of the Government through these land offices. This money has come from the settlers—these very men, perhaps, who have been defrauded of their rights for a long series of years. While they are paying the expenses of administering the public-land laws, they are at the same time being deprived of their right to make settlement upon the public land. I throw out these observations now merely by way of suggestion. When the bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands and now pending in this House shall come up, it may be an appropriate time to offer propositions for the cure of the existing abuses; but it is well to take into serious consideration in connection with the present bill the question whether we should make these appropriations, running up into hundreds of thousands of dollars, for the support of these offices without any restriction or reservation looking to the protection of the rights of settlers.

Mr. HERMANN. I move to strike out the last word.

Now, Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the great West I thank the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] for the earnest words they have spoken in behalf of an increased appropriation so urgently demanded for the land system of the country. Representing as I do one of the largest States in the Union, especially one of the largest public-land States, nearly as large as the whole of New England and New York combined, the House will pardon me for rising now in defense of the amendment now pending before the Committee of the Whole.

I have made it, sir, a part of my representative duty to travel over the land districts of that immense empire of the Pacific West, to visit the various land offices and converse with the Government employés as to the necessities of the service, and I am sure, as has been suggested by the gentleman from California [Mr. VANDEVER], there is no part of the public system so much neglected as that which pertains to the sale and disposition of the public lands belonging to the Government.

Gentlemen must not forget this is not asking for an appropriation of what we ordinarily understand to be the public funds of the Government, but it is money earned through contributions of the settlers to these various offices—the fees and commissions allowed the officers.

Gentlemen must remember, so far as these salaries are concerned, there is a minimum salary of $500—a fixed salary paid to every register and receiver of a United States land office; but all beyond that must be actually earned in the legitimate and current business of the land office.

I can say as far as clerical service is concerned there are but few land offices under the Government entitled to this, for the simple reason the appropriations heretofore have been so meager the Department felt it was unable to comply with the demands in that respect.

Let me emphasize what I have been saying by reading the earnest recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior on this subject:

ESTIMATES AND APPROPRIATIONS.

The estimates heretofore submitted to Congress for expenditures in the public-land service have very generally been based upon calculations of how much less than the sums really required it might be presumed Congress would be willing to appropriate rather than upon the actual necessities of the service. These reduced estimates have also habitually been further reduced in the appropriations made, with the result that the service has been crippled in every direction to the injury of the Government, and to public inconvenience and disadvantage. The annual increase of business, which has been steady and rapid, has been unprovided for, and a vast volume of work in arrears has been accumulated.

Increased appropriations are now absolutely necessary to bring up this accumulated work, and a general increase is equally imperative to enable the increased amount of the current business of the land department to be properly conducted.

My estimates for the next fiscal year are based upon the actual needs of the present time, and the amounts specified are absolutely indispensable to a just and economic administration.

I wish the House to notice particularly the words which I desire to emphasize in this portion of the report of the Secretary of the Interior:

Increased appropriations are now absolutely necessary to bring up this accumulated work, and a general increase is equally imperative to enable the increased amount of the current business of the land department to be properly conducted.

If gentlemen of this House should travel in the West and go personally among these land offices and make their own observation, they would not hesitate a moment to appropriate a sufficient amount of money for the purpose of putting these various land offices in the very best condition to do the public work for which they have been established.

There are but few instances in the West of land offices kept in brick buildings. Safes are not provided, nor are there any vaults for safe-keeping of money and papers. Local officers can not afford the expense.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BIGGS. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. HERMANN. I thank the gentleman for his kindness. Mr. Chairman, as I have already stated, there are no safes provided for the safe-keeping of money and papers in any of these Government land offices. In my own city, in one of the largest land districts in the West, I know full well the receiver of the land office takes his money every night and carries it into a mercantile house convenient and there deposits it for safe-keeping in the safe of that merchant. He not only deposits his money, but he also takes there for safe-keeping the tract-books, as well as the daily account-books of the register and receiver. Now, is it consistent with any idea of real economy, or in view of the safety of the public business, this condition of things should be allowed to continue? Go through any of these land offices and you will find from the opening to the closing of those offices from morning until evening they are crowded with public business, largely with contests.

These contests occupy the attention of both the register and the receiver. They find that while such contests are in progress they must devote their attention largely to them to the exclusion of the ordinary and legitimate business of the office; and while the clerks (in such cases authorized) are employed to transcribe testimony, at the same time either the register or the receiver must be present to conduct the examination, and this of course takes that much of their time away from the current business of the office.

By reason of being deprived of the ordinary clerical aid, in connection with the business of their offices, I claim that they are the hardest-worked officials in any department of the Government, and therefore they appeal to us from every land office under the Government by petition, by personal requests, by letters, and by official recommendations through the Departments for an increase in the appropriations for clerical aid, and especially for an allowance of the rent of their offices, in order that they may keep their offices and buildings reasonably safe and have a small surplus which would warrant them in having safes and vaults for the proper keeping and custody and protection of the Government records. In the interest of true economy in the public service, therefore, I thank these gentlemen for the interest they have shown in proposing this amendment and advocating its adoption before this committee.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say but a word in addition to what has been already said in support of this amendment.

I hold in my hand a statement which I find in the report of the Committee on Appropriations accompanying this bill, and it is headed:

Statement showing the appropriations, expenditures, unexpended balances, and estimated expenses for the fiscal year 1887 and for the first six months of the fiscal year 1888.

And I desire to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to this, that whereas in the present fiscal year, which will now end in a few days, and for this same service—that is, for the salaries and commissions of registers and receivers—$500,000 was appropriated, exactly the same amount is incorporated in this bill for the coming fiscal year.

This statement shows that of that $500,000 which was appropriated for the present fiscal year, for the first six months of that year, to wit, up to the 1st day of January of the present year, there had been expended $278,764.68, showing that on a similar appropriation of $500,000 in the last sundry civil bill there was a deficiency in the first six months of more than $28,000; and at that rate, assuming that the deficiency will continue in the last six months as it was in the first six months, it will reach very nearly $60,000 in the one year.

In other words, here is the most conclusive argument against the meagerness of this appropriation embodied in their own report, showing that a similar amount appropriated in the last fiscal year for this same service ran short in the first six months over $28,000 of its one-half of the sum appropriated.

Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, in other words, was the amount appropriated for the first six months and $250,000 for the next six months out of the total appropriation of $500,000. But for the first six months it ran short, I repeat, something over $28,000, and there was consequently that deficiency, which has extended through the succeeding six months, making the total deficiency nearly or quite $60,000; and yet with that statement and that information before them these gentlemen have incorporated into this bill the same amount thus found to be entirely insufficient.

Mr. RANDALL. As I said twice during this debate, and I repeat now, the basis upon which the Committee on Appropriations proceeded in respect to this sum was that there were too many land offices, too many receivers, and too many registers, and that the President having the power to consolidate land offices and get clear of this excessive force, that we would, as far as we could, indicate to him that it ought to be done; and therefore it is upon that basis that the $500,000 is appropriated.

Mr. BLANCHARD. In answer to that——

Mr. RANDALL. A moment more. I want to say a word or two in response to the observations of the gentleman from California [Mr. VANDEVER].

No one can deprecate more than myself the delays which exist in the settlement and determination of titles for the actual settlers on the public lands, and if that gentleman had taken the trouble to read a little farther on in this bill he would have found embodied a clause which is inserted to meet that question, and which provides that in the surveys of the public lands, preference shall in all cases be given in the survey of townships where land is to be held and occupied in whole or in part by actual settlers. In other words, the Committee on Appropriations indicated to the House that a provision should be incorporated into the laws of the United States, which would give preference to actual settlers in this connection. This, as I am advised, is the Canadian system, and has been found to work well. I believe it will work well in the United States. In fact, I have heard no opposition from any source, from any person with whom we have conferred in this connection, as to the propriety of such a proviso being enacted into law.

Mr. HERMANN. Does the gentleman refer to the provision incorporated in the bill on page 48, under the head of "Surveys of the public lands?"

Mr. RANDALL. I refer to the proviso in the paragraph relating to the surveys of the public lands and to resurveys, which I propose to modify, when we reach that provision, in the manner I have already stated; that is to say, in expending this fund preference shall be given in favor of surveying townships occupied in whole or in part by actual settlers.

Mr. HERMANN, Will the gentleman indulge me for a moment?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. HERMANN. It is fair to say this, that so far as the great portion of the West is concerned this clause is actually now and will hereafter forever be absolutely inoperative. It is of no earthly use, and the Commissioner and the Secretary of the Interior have so pointed out in plain language to the Committee on Appropriations.

I shall do myself the honor of submitting an amendment to that, if it be within the rules, and if not, I shall ask unanimous consent for its entertainment at the proper time, for the reason, permit me to state to the honorable Chairman, that so far as the greater portion of the country unsurveyed is now concerned, it consists of mountainous country, country densely timbered, country covered with dense undergrowth, country which surveyors will not survey at existing rates or at the rates provided for in this section.

Mr. RANDALL. Your objection is to the rates and not to the principle involved, that preference should be given to the survey of townships where they are likely to be in whole or in part occupied by actual settlers.

Mr. HERMANN. I favor that, and I believe that has been the policy of the Government heretofore; but my objection is principally to the rates.

Mr. RANDALL. These rates are fixed by law. I hardly think there would be 250,000,000 acres of the public domain already surveyed and not taken up if they were low.

Mr. HERMANN. This is the suggestion: All the land which lies in plains and plateaus and could be surveyed at a nominal cost of course was eagerly sought for by surveyors, syndicates, and combinations. The residue of the land yet to be surveyed consists of mountainous land densely covered with timber.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McSHANE. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has three times distinctly stated that in the opinion of the Committee on Appropriations there were too many land offices in this country; and as the President had not seen fit to consolidate or abandon some of them, or a sufficient number to come up to the requirements of the committee, the committee had reduced the appropriation for carrying on the expenses of the different land offices throughout the country. Now, I say in all fairness that the Committee on Appropriations has no right to force a reduction in the number of land offices in this country at the expense of the registers and receivers performing the service. I will say that to my personal knowledge every land office in my section, whenever it runs below or comes within the law governing the closing or consolidation of land offices, has been so treated.

The law requires that the number of acres of public land within the district shall be reduced to a certain amount before the land office can be closed or consolidated. I hold in my hand a statement from the General Land Office showing the appropriations for carrying on the different land offices and the number of acres of public land disposed of from 1880 to 1887, inclusive. We find in 1880 that the number of acres of public land disposed of was 14,792,000. The expense of the land offices was 6.36 mills per acre. We also find that the work of the local land offices has been increasing year by year, from 14,792,000 acres in 1880, at an average cost of 6.36 mills per acre, to 25,858,000 acres in 1887, at an average cost of 4½ mills per acre. So that the business of the local land offices from 1880 to 1887 has nearly doubled, and still you find the appropriation for defraying the expense of doing this work not more than one-half the amount appropriated in 1880.

With this reduction in the appropriation the average cost to the settlers has been reduced nearly one-half. You have done well because you have reduced. As is stated by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the local land offices throughout the country are run and managed on a starvation basis. That is the result of your reduction. Last year the appropriation was $500,000, and there was a deficiency of $60,000. If the registers and receivers are not permitted to retain the money they earn from their work, as was provided in a former law, I see no justice in the proposition that they should be deprived of the salary which they are legally allowed, which Congress is supposed to appropriate money to pay. Why should they be compelled to wait sixty or ninety days for their pay when they do the work, earn the money, and monthly return that money to the Treasury?

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask the gentleman a single question. He is a fair and frank man. I would like to ask him whether he does not believe there could be a consolidation or repeal of some of these land offices, and a dismissal from office of some of the registers and some of the receivers in the older States of the Union.

Mr. McSHANE. I will say to the gentleman that I know nothing about the land offices east of the Missouri River, located in the eastern part of the country, but I do know that no consolidation can be made in the land offices in the State from which I come. We had eleven land offices in that State a year ago. The number of acres of public land within one district became reduced below the amount allowed by law. As soon as it came within the law the land office was abolished. This Congress is establishing four new land offices in New Mexico and Wyoming. With the appropriation here made, instead of reducing the number of land offices we will have an increased number of land offices.

Mr. BLANCHARD. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has not attempted in any manner to meet the argument which has been made by myself and several other gentlemen in favor of an increased appropriation to pay the salaries and commissions of registers and receivers of the land offices throughout the country. All he has said in opposition to the adoption of the amendment I have offered is that the insufficient appropriation in the bill is a gentle intimation to the President that he should consolidate some of these land offices. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania said exactly the same thing on the 28th of June, 1886, nearly two years ago. I hold in my hand the debate on the sundry civil bill of that year, and I read briefly from the gentleman's remarks in opposition to a similar amendment then offered by me:

> Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, it does not always do to depend upon the estimates of a Department. There are one hundred and eight receivers and one hundred and eight registers, making in all two hundred and sixteen of these officials to be provided for; but the President has power to consolidate offices if he sees fit.
> Mr. BLANCHARD. Has he done so?
> Mr. RANDALL. He has not, that I know of.

And, Mr. Chairman, that is true to-day. Instead of the President consolidating these land offices and decreasing the number of registers and receivers, the members of the Committee on Appropriations well know that whereas in 1886, when the gentleman [Mr. RANDALL] made the statement I have read, there were only two hundred and sixteen registers and receivers, there are to-day two hundred and twenty-four. In other words, that instead of there being a lessening of the number of land offices by reason of their consolidation by the President there has been an actual increase of four in the number of such offices.

Therefore, what is there in the argument that the President may consolidate them? The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], by using that as the only argument which occurs to him in opposition to the amendment which I offer, concedes that the appropriation in this bill is not enough to meet the requirements of the service if the present number of land offices, one hundred and twelve, is to continue.

He says the President may consolidate, but the President has not consolidated, and does not consolidate, and the number of land offices has increased from one hundred and eight in 1886 to one hundred and twelve in 1888.

Mr. HERMANN. The Department does not recommend that they be consolidated.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And, as suggested by my friend on the right [Mr. HERMANN], the General Land Office of the Interior Department does not recommend consolidating the land offices.

And, Mr. Chairman, it would be unwise for the President to consolidate them. It is well known to every gentleman on this floor who represents a public-land State that all of the land offices of the country are a long way behind in their work. They have not got sufficient clerical force to enable them to keep up with the current work, and if they were consolidated the work would be much further behind than it is at present, and the settlers would be the sufferers.

Now, in view of these circumstances, and in view of the fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] can advance no argument against this amendment except that the President may consolidate these offices, I trust that my amendment will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses of land offices: For clerk-hire, rent, and other incidental expenses of the several land offices, $155,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move to amend, in line 15, by striking out "fifty-five" and inserting "sixty-five." Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be considered by the Committee of the Whole as too urgent in insisting upon adequate appropriations for this service, but here is another case where the amount is insufficient. This is an appropriation for the contingent expenses of the land office.

What are the contingent expenses of the land office? They are as follows: "Salaries of clerks, office rent, and a variety of other incidental expenses, such as binding plats, rebinding old and dilapidated plat-books, worn out by constant handling and use (of which there are a large number), furniture, etc. This amount is deemed the smallest possible sum with which the exigencies of the local offices can be met." The quotation is from the Book of Estimates.

The sum which the Secretary refers to as "the lowest possible sum" is $165,000. That is the estimate which was incorporated in the Book of Estimates under this head. The committee report an appropriation of $155,000, which is $10,000 short of the estimate. Now, Mr. Chairman, while $165,000 is the amount incorporated in the Book of Estimates for this service, it is well known to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and to his colleagues upon the Committee on Appropriations that the amount recommended, urgently recommended by the present Commissioner of the General Land Office—a gentleman with whom many of us in this House served when he was here as a member of Congress, a gentleman who enjoys in the highest degree the confidence of every one who knows him—under this head was $217,000.

Those who made up the Book of Estimates reduced the amount to $165,000; and this paltry sum the Committee on Appropriations have cut down $10,000, so that the bill proposes to appropriate only $155,000.

Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a statement prepared at the General Land Office showing the amount appropriated for this particular branch of the land-office service from 1880 to 1887, inclusive. It is as follows:

Statement showing the amount appropriated for contingent expenses of local land offices, the amount expended, the number of acres of the public lands disposed of, and the average cost per acre expended from the foregoing appropriation by fiscal years from 1880 to 1887, inclusive; also the number of local land offices in existence each year.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERMANN obtained the floor and said: I move to strike out the last two words, and yield my time to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. BLANCHARD. In 1885, before the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, alluded to in the preceding discussion, and when the registers and receivers could apply to the payment of clerk-hire the fees for redncing testimony to writing, making plats, etc., collected in their respective offices, the amount appropriated under the head of "contingent expenses" was $165,000. And in 1886 the same amount was appropriated.

But now, when these officers can no longer appropriate for clerk-hire any part of the money collected in their offices, when they are confined to the amounts appropriated under the head of "contingent expenses," the Committee on Appropriations propose to reduce the appropriation from $165,000 to $155,000, and this in spite of the urgent appeal of the Secretary of the Interior for an appropriation of $165,000, as recommended in the Book of Estimates, and the still more urgent recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who estimates that it will require for the efficient discharge of this particular branch of the public service $217,000.

My amendment, Mr. Chairman, proposes simply to make this appropriation what it was in 1885 and 1886. In those years it required $165,000 to pay the expenses of this branch of the General Land Office service. Surely in the year 1889, for which this bill provides, when the number of land offices has been increased by several, $165,000 should be appropriated for this branch of the service. I can not see any reason why the committee should appropriate $165,000 in 1885 and 1886, and yet for the fiscal year 1888-'89 should reduce the amount to $155,000.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania will doubtless lay stress upon the fact that in 1887 the amount appropriated was $120,000. It is true that in the short session of the Forty-ninth Congress, when the sundry civil bill was put through under whip and spur, the amount appropriated was only $120,000; but that amount has proved entirely inadequate for the payment of the contingent expenses of the land offices. Gentlemen on the Appropriations Committee know it; every gentleman who has inquired at the General Land Office knows it; every gentleman who has had access to the land offices throughout the country knows it.

I know myself that in the land offices in my own State the registers and receivers have been paying out of their own pockets, not only during the last year but for years preceding, compensation for extra clerks to perform clerical duties in their offices. The same is, I have no doubt, true at other land offices throughout the country.

The insufficiency of the appropriation of $120,000 in 1887 has crippled the land-office service. Every one who has had access to these offices knows, as was stated by the gentleman from Nebraska, that they have been run upon a starvation basis.

Mr. RANDALL. One side of a story is generally good until the other is told. The last year of the appropriations under Republican administration was $140,000, and the first year under Democratic administration was $165,000.

I want to direct the attention of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], who states that the appropriations for 1887 were inadequate, to the fact that the expenditures of that $165,000 given in 1886, were as follows: The aggregate amount expended under this paragraph was $117,928.50, and of that $165,000 in that year there was turned into the Treasury unexpended $47,071.50.

The expenditure for 1886 having been less than $120,000, it was a fair basis for the Committee on Appropriations to fix the appropriations for these objects for the next year, to wit, 1887. In 1887 the amount appropriated was $120,000. There was but $54,116.77 expended in the first half of that year, leaving for the next six months $65,883.23.

Mr. BLANCHARD. What year was that?

Mr. RANDALL. The year 1887.

I do not think that the Committee on Appropriations have shown, therefore, any disposition whatever to cripple this branch of the service. They gave for 1888 $120,000, and have also given a deficiency of $35,000, making for the current year a total of $155,000; and we have put that same amount in this bill for the coming year, which we think is quite sufficient and all that will be required.

Mr. HERMANN. How far does that allowance in this bill fall below the estimates of the Department for the year?

Mr. RANDALL. Ten thousand dollars. I know quite well that the amount recommended is below the estimates to that extent; but the Committee on Appropriations recommended the amount that was expended last year, which they consider ample, as I have said, upon the prior year, and was found to be entirely sufficient for that year; but it did not so appear for the next year, the current year, and the committee therefore gave $35,000 more, by way of a deficiency, than was originally appropriated for the current year. But having given a total of $155,000, they believe, as I have said, that amount to be ample for the coming year.

There has been no effort to cut it down at all below what seemed to be reasonable and proper. We have given for the coming year exactly the amount of the current year.

I do not think that the bill which the gentleman from Louisiana refers to was passed under a suspension of the rules. It was reported on the 9th of December, and I think it was passed on the 17th, but I do not recollect that it was passed under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I did not assert that it was. I only asked for information.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not positive, but I think not.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The salaries and commissions of the registers and receivers are fixed by law, and hence where the appropriations run short the difference has to be made up by a deficiency appropriation. But when it comes to clerks employed in the land offices, and the contingent expenses of the land offices, there can be no deficiency, and why? Because there is no authority of law in the Commissioner of the General Land Office to exceed the appropriation.

Mr. RYAN. But there was a deficiency of $35,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir; in this year.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I know, but——

Mr. RANDALL. And in this very paragraph.

Mr. BLANCHARD. All right; I stand corrected on that. But there is no authority in law for the expenditure beyond the amount appropriated.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that in 1887 they incorporated in the bill $120,000 for this service because in the preceding year the amount expended under the head of "Contingent expenses" was $116,000.

Mr. RANDALL. The amount expended was $117,928.50.

Mr. BLANCHARD. One hundred and sixteen thousand three hundred and fifty-one.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, this is official.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And so is this. This was obtained at the General Land Office. Mr. Chairman, from the very statement of these gentlemen the amount of $120,000 appropriated in the last sundry civil bill was short just $35,000, because they admit there is a deficiency now existing in the fund to that extent, and they argue that the $35,000 deficiency, added to the $120,000, making $155,000, is the amount which will be required the coming year, and accordingly have incorporated that sum in this bill. That is good, Mr. Chairman, as far as it goes, but unfortunately for the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania it does not go far enough, as I shall undertake to show.

Since that $120,000 was put in the bill in 1887 there have been several additional land offices created. That fact the gentleman from Pennsylvania has overlooked. It will take the extra $10,000 to pay the clerical hire at these new land offices.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I will further meet the gentleman's argument by reading from the note in the Book of Estimates under the head of "Contingent Expenses of the Land Office:"

With the present appropriation of $120,000, appropriated in 1887, it is impossible—

Says the Commissioner of the General Land Office—to provide the different offices with more than half—

I ask the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to this—the clerical force needed, and the result is great delay in the work of the officers and loss to the settlers therefrom.

The appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1885 was $140,000, which was afterwards supplemented by a deficiency of $25,000, while that for 1886 was $165,000. These sums were then insufficient and the work of the local offices was carried on under great personal embarrassments to the local officers and to the disadvantage of the Government. In June, 1887, this insufficient appropriation was reduced to $120,000, although the number of land offices had been increased. The result is that the land offices of the United States are now on a starvation basis and important interests of the Government are sacrified by the disallowance of the necessary force to properly conduct the public business.

So it appears, Mr. Chairman, that although $155,000 might have done in a meager sort of way in the last fiscal year, according to the gentleman's statement, it will not do now, when there has been an increase of the land offices of the country.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2930) to authorize the Paris, Choctaw and Little Rock Railway Company to construct a bridge across Red River at or near Hook's Ferry, Red River County, Texas.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 2527) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North by the Duluth, Rainy Lake River and Southwestern Railway Company.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendments the bill (H. R. 4320) to authorize the construction of a graveled or macadamized road from the city of New Berne, N. C., to the national cemetery near said city.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1786) to regulate appointments in the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States;

A bill (S. 1582) for the relief of the estate of Lucien Goyaux;

A bill (S. 2515) to provide pneumatic gun-carriages for the War Department;

A bill (S. 2658) to validate acknowledgments, taken before United States commissioners appointed by the circuit courts of the United States or by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, of deeds recorded in said District; and

A bill (S. 3134) for the erection of an additional fire-proof building for the use of the National Museum.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR DAKOTA.

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up and pass the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk. It is a bill providing for an additional judge for the Territory of Dakota. In the early part of the session a bill was introduced providing for two judges, and was referred to a committee. The committee reported back the bill favorably, but included judges for several other Territories. I understand there is to be opposition to that bill when it comes up on account of its extent. Without wishing to antagonize any other measure, I will state that I have here a memorial from the judge of the court to the effect that it is absolutely necessary, in view of the condition of business, to have at least one additional judge. I will include the memorial as part of my remarks.

The memorial is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Grand Forks, Dakota, respectfully represents that the material interests and the dispatch of justice in the third judicial district of the Territory of Dakota, imperatively demand a speedy division of said district. The reasons for the urgency of this act were well stated by the Hon. W. B. McConnell, judge of said district, last January, in a letter to Delegate Gifford, as follows:

"From information just at hand from the clerks of court in different counties of this district, I find that between the 26th day of May, 1885, the day I qualified as judge, and the 13th of this month, the number of judgments, including decrees entered in civil cases, is 1,953. The number of appeals to the supreme court is 11. The number on the dockets at issue awaiting trial is 649. This can give no particular idea as to the amount of actual cases pending, because attorneys are only required to have their cases put upon the docket ten days before a term of court, and they rarely notice cases sooner.

"I have had yet no report as to the number of cases which have been put upon the docket and been compromised and dismissed. This number must be very large.

"In criminal cases there have been ninety-eight convictions, felonies and misdemeanors, five acquittals, and three disagreements by juries. Of this number fifty-nine cases have been sent to the penitentiary, and one has suffered the death penalty. In all the criminal cases tried only in two cases has there been motions for a new trial. One was granted, the other was denied, appealed to the supreme court, and there affirmed. The latter was in the case where the death penalty had been imposed. I have held twenty terms of the district court, and have had twenty grand juries, four terms of the United States district court and four sessions of the United States grand jury, and have attended four sessions of the supreme court, two at Deadwood (1,200 miles travel by the usual route), one at Yankton (600), and one at Bismarck (200 miles).

"I have had two of the very best court stenographers, and both have been kept busy with court work and getting out transcripts.

"The amount of work at chambers has been very heavy and very exacting. Here issues to the pleadings for the most part are argued and settled, orders for provisional remedies are granted, denied, and set aside, and motions of every character are constantly coming up.

"It is very hard and inconvenient for attorneys and expensive to clients to have to travel so far to make and meet motions before the court.

"My work is the more wearing from the fact that it takes nearly two-thirds of my time away from home."

Not only does the judge of this district earnestly desire it, but every law association in the district unites in an effort to procure division, as necessary to secure the rights of person and property in the district and insure speedy trial in all cases. The rapidity with which justice is now necessarily dispensed makes of an excellent thing frequently a solemn farce, and our people's dearest interests are at stake.

Whether Dakota be divided or not, or whether she be enabled to form her own constitution, this chamber prays that your honorable bodies may grant immediate relief by the passage of an act dividing the third judicial district of Dakota, and they will ever pray.

W. H. BROWN, President.
W. R. BIERLEY, Secretary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill is as follows:

A bill to provide for one additional associate justice of the supreme court of Dakota, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the supreme court of the Territory of Dakota shall consist of a chief-justice and six associate justices, any five of whom shall constitute a quorum.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the President to appoint one additional associate justice of said supreme court in manner now provided by law, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and until his successor is appointed and qualified.

SEC. 3. That the Territory of Dakota shall be divided into seven judicial districts, and a district court for the trial of all cases arising under the laws of said Territory, or which may be within the jurisdiction of said courts under the laws of said Territory, shall be held in each district by one of the justices of said supreme court, at such time and place as may be provided by law. Each judge, after assignment, shall reside in the district to which he is assigned.

SEC. 4. That the seventh judicial district of said Territory shall consist of the counties of Grand Forks, Walsh, Pembina, Nelson, Ramsey, Cavalier, and Towner.

SEC. 5. That temporarily, and until otherwise ordered by law, the additional associate justices herein provided for shall be assigned to such counties in the judicial districts, as the chief-justice may designate; and it shall be the duty of said judges to appoint and fix the terms of holding courts in each of the counties of their respective districts until the Legislative Assembly of said Territory shall fix said terms.

SEC. 6. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent the Legislative Assembly of said Territory at any time from changing or arranging the boundary-lines of the judicial districts of said Territory, nor from fixing the time of holding the several terms of court in said districts.

There being no objection, the bill was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MACDONALD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, according to previous order, the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. CLARDY: A bill (H. R. 10574) granting a pension to Mattie V. Boothe and Mary M. Boothe—to the Committee on Pensions.

The following petition, praying for the enactment of a law providing temporary aid for common schools, to be disbursed on the basis of illiteracy, was referred to the Committee on Education:

By Mr. FRENCH (by request): Of 169 citizens of Meriden, New Haven County, Connecticut.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 20, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 18th instant approved and signed the following bills:

An act (S. 300) granting a pension to Mrs. Juliet G. Howe;

An act (S. 1146) granting a pension to L. J. McGoffin;

An act (S. 2167) granting a pension to Mary E. Woodward;

An act (S. 2332) granting a pension to John Linsley;

An act (S. 1037) granting a pension to the infant children of Michael A. Moran; and

An act (S. 393) for the relief of Frances Anne Pyne Ricketts.

The message also announced that the President had, on the 19th instant, approved and signed an act (S. 1191) for the relief of the legal representatives of Mary H. Pike, deceased.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of Keystone Council, No. 11, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Manayunk, Pa., and a petition of Eureka Council, No. 38, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Pittsburgh, Pa., praying for the passage of Senate bill 553, to regulate and restrict immigration; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. FRYE. I present the memorial of the Constitutional Defense Association of America, remonstrating against the resolution in favor of arbitration, and giving reasons therefor. As the resolution has been reported, I move that the memorial lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 9523) for the relief of Margaret Lahey;

A bill (H. R. 3836) granting a pension to Hiram Bateman;

A bill (H. R. 4788) granting an increase of pension to William Winans; and

A bill (H. R. 9174) granting a pension to Woodford M. Houchin.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I report from the Committee on Foreign Relations adversely the bill (S. 2544) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to make proclamation prohibiting the importation of products of foreign states in certain cases, and for other purposes. There is a written report accompanying the bill, which will, of course, be printed. As the bill was introduced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL], who is now absent, and it is possible that he may wish to have it considered, I ask that it go on the Calendar; but for public information, as it might seem odd from the title that the committee should report it adversely, I will state that the ground of our adverse report is that the substance of the same provisions that are contained in this bill, with greater amplification and wider powers, is embodied in a Senate bill concerning the exportation of meats, etc., which passed the Senate in March and is now pending in the House of Representatives.

The committee therefore thought it would be unnecessary to pass this bill, inasmuch as the same provision in a broader and more ample extent had already been made in a bill which had passed the Senate, and is still pending in the other branch.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report, and the report of the committee will be printed.

Mr. MORGAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back, with amendments, the bill (S. 994) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868." The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] desires to make orally before the Senate a report or a statement from the minority in opposition to the report of the majority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the Senator from Georgia proceeds the Chair will receive further morning business and recognize him later.

Mr. BROWN. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted a report to accompany the bill (H. R. 9859) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, heretofore reported by that committee; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 3722) for the relief of Jennie D. Rice;

A bill (H. R. 8455) for the relief of Elizabeth Terralls;

A bill (H. R. 964) granting a pension to James Turner;
A bill (H. R. 2640) for the relief of Judith A. Kinsey;
A bill (H. R. 2641) granting a pension to Emily W. Ogden; and
A bill (H. R. 8984) granting a pension to Griswold Rogers.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 3188) granting a pension to Martha Ackerson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3189) granting a pension to William T. Hutton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3190) for the relief of Calvin Gunn; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 3191) to amend section 4 of the act of March 3, 1875, as amended in section 2 of the act of March 3, 1877, in relation to the issue of supplies to Indians; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. DANIEL and Mr. MORGAN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which were referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act. I move its reference to the Committee on Claims. I will remark that the papers showing the proceedings of the Court of Claims are filed with the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Claims, and printed.

VIRTUE SMITH—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 1957, entitled "An act granting a pension to Virtue Smith."

The beneficiary named in this bill is the widow of David M. Smith (incorrectly named David W. Smith in the bill), who served as a bugler in a Minnesota regiment from August 22, 1862, to September 28, 1862, in a campaign against the Sioux Indians.

He received a gunshot wound in the right elbow, for which, in 1867, he was granted a pension of $6 a month, which was very soon thereafter increased to $8, and in August, 1875, said pension was further increased to $10 a month, which he received to the date of his death.

He died in the city of Washington on the 22d day of January, 1880.

He obtained a position in the Second Auditor's Office of the Treasury Department in 1864, and worked steadily there until about six months before his death.

Medical examinations had from time to time up to 1877 seem to have found him in excellent physical condition except the wound in his right elbow, which caused stiffness, and an injury to his left forearm not received in the Army.

In 1879 he was examined by a physician of this city who stands among the best in the profession, and found in the last stages of consumption; and this physician declares he died from that cause. A female physician certified that the cause of death was "wounds in the Army."

The pensioner was sixty-four years old at the time of his death.

I am perfectly satisfied from the medical testimony and from other facts connected with this case that the death of the husband of the beneficiary was in no manner related to his military service.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 19, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the message and the bill be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 1705) to provide for the erection of a public building at Statesville, N. C., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 1851) providing for an international marine conference to secure greater safety for life and property at sea; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BELMONT, Mr. RUSSELL of Massachusetts, and Mr. MORROW, managers at the conference on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 901) for the relief of Sophia W. Wright;
A bill (S. 1241) to prevent obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City by dumping or otherwise, and to punish and prevent such offenses;
A bill (S. 2882) to pay Aaron Friedheim the rebate due him under the act of March 3, A. D. 1883;
A bill (H. R. 128) for the relief of John Fletcher;
A bill (H. R. 4691) for the relief of John P. Hageman;
A bill (H. R. 7255) for the relief of A. B. Tyan;
A bill (H. R. 8372) authorizing the sale of a portion of the Winnebago reservation in Nebraska; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 183) authorizing the loan of tents and tent equipage to the veteran organizations of the Society of the Army of the Potomac.

AWARDS UNDER MEXICAN TREATY.

Mr. BROWN. In connection with the report submitted by the honorable Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] in what is known as the Weil case, I desire to present a minority report, and in connection with that report to submit some remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The views of the minority will be received and printed.

Mr. BROWN. I ask that the views of the minority be printed with the report of the majority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President prior to the year 1868 there were numerous claims made by citizens of the United States against the Government and people of Mexico on account of damages which our citizens had sustained at the hands of that Government and its people. The Government of Mexico also complained that many of its citizens had suffered damage at the hands of the people of the United States; and the two Governments in a friendly spirit concluded a treaty on the 4th day of July, 1868, under which an international commission or tribunal was established to adjudicate these conflicting claims. Mexico appointed a commissioner and the United States appointed one, and finally Sir Edward Thornton, then the British minister at Washington, accepted the position of umpire. A great many claims were submitted to the commission by citizens of the United States against Mexico, and many claims were submitted by the citizens of Mexico through that Government against the United States.

Among others, Benjamin Weil, an American citizen, filed his petition before the International Claims Commission on the 27th of April, 1870, against Mexico, for a large lot of cotton belonging to him taken by the Mexican authorities; in which petition all the particulars of his claim were set forth, with a description of the property taken, its value, when and where it was taken, with all the attendant circumstances, which are given in detail. The evidence in support of this claim was filed on the 3d of August, 1870, and the case was not finally disposed of by the commission until 1875. Thus the Government of Mexico had five years within which to make its defense after the claim had been filed, and the evidence to support it had been placed of record and was all well known to the Mexican commissioner. The substance and details of the transaction, as given in the petition, were sustained by the evidence.

When it become necessary for the commission to finally dispose of the case, the Mexican commissioner admitted that he had in his possession much evidence, documentary and other testimony, showing that the claim was not well founded. But he declined to produce it, and gave as one of the reasons for its non-production that there was then sufficient evidence before the commission on which to judge the claim. In other words, he was willing to risk the case of the Government of Mexico upon the evidence which had been filed by the petitioner.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to inquire whether he has submitted his minority report?

Mr. BROWN. I have.

Mr. MORGAN. This is a speech on the case, then, in addition to the minority report?

Mr. BROWN. It is in addition to the report, and in explanation of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The minority report has been presented and ordered to be printed with the report of the majority.

Mr. MORGAN. The proceeding is rather an unusual one, to take a case up for trial when it was ordered to be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BROWN. I am just submitting some remarks in connection with the report.

Mr. MORGAN. I may ask the indulgence of the Senate to be heard in reply.

Mr. BROWN. Of course I have no objection to the Senator being heard. He is prepared, as he always is.

The American commissioner offered to give every facility in his power to the Mexican commissioner to make his defense if he desired to do so, but he persisted in refusing to file any evidence to rebut the proofs made by Weil. The result was that the two commissioners failed to agree, and the question was submitted to Sir Edward Thornton, the umpire, for his decision and award. After the case had passed from the commission into the hands of the umpire the Mexican commissioner then proposed to file his evidence and have it considered for the first time by Sir Edward Thornton; but as the umpire could only act upon the evidence produced before the commission, Sir Edward Thornton very justly and properly, as all admit, refused to hear the evidence. This left the case in his hands for adjudication upon the petition and evidence submitted by the claimant, and the evidence was so strong and convincing that he had no hesitation in making an award against the Government of Mexico for the amount claimed by Weil. Indeed, there was nothing else that he could do.

After Weil's claim, with the evidence, had lain five years in the office of the commission, with full knowledge of the Mexican commissioner, and he had refused to submit any evidence in rebuttal, and had permitted the case to go before the umpire in that condition, and the proof submitted by Weil strongly sustained his case, and not being in any degree impeached or contradicted, there was nothing for the umpire to do but to render judgment against the Government of Mexico for the amount involved. At a later period, when application was made to Sir Edward Thornton to grant a new trial, he refused to grant it, as there was no legal ground whatever upon which he could predicate a judgment granting a new trial. Thus the matter stands. Weil and his representatives have a judgment, no matter what may have been the nature of their claim, which was obtained in a tribunal which is in no sense impeached. It was obtained upon a petition setting forth all the facts and circumstances connected with the claim, upon evidence of which the Mexican Government had notice for five years before the case was closed, and upon evidence which upon its face was ample to sustain the finding.

Now what was declared by the treaty which brought the commission into existence should be the effect of this judgment or award? By the treaty the two powers solemnly engaged that the awards should be not only "absolutely final and conclusive," but also that both parties should give full effect to such decision "without any objection, evasion, or delay whatsoever." How has Mexico kept this solemn treaty engagement? That Government, instead of giving full effect to the decision without objection, evasion, or delay, attempted at once to evade it by a motion before the umpire for a new trial. That being denied, it again attempted an evasion by appeals to the Secretary of State, and was for the time there defeated. Then successive appeals were made to Congress for evasion or relief from the award, and for a new trial in a Federal court, which was refused.

Then appeal was again made to the treaty-making power, and after years of deliberation the Senate, as part of the treaty-making power, rejected the proposed treaty and refused to grant a new trial. Then an appeal was made to the Forty-ninth Congress, which was not sustained; and now the appeal to Congress is renewed, and the legislative department is asked to grant a new trial before one of the courts of the United States, thirteen years after the award was made when Weil, the party, and most of the witnesses are dead.

Mr. Evarts, then Secretary of State, in his report to the President has discussed the question of the validity and conclusiveness of this judgment with so much power and force that I shall make no apology for quoting extensively from his report. He says:

First, I am of opinion that as between the United States and Mexico, the latter Government has no right to complain of the conduct of these claims before the tribunal of commissioners and umpire provided by the convention, or of the judgments given thereupon so far as the integrity of the tribunal is concerned, the regularity of the proceedings, full opportunity and time, and after notice to meet the case of the respective claimants, and the free and deliberate choice exercised by Mexico as to the methods, the measure, and the means of a defense against the same.

I conclude, therefore, that neither the principles of public law nor considerations of justice or equity require or permit, as between the United States and Mexico, that the awards in these cases should be opened and the cases retried before a new international tribunal, or under any new convention or negotiation respecting the same between the United States and Mexico.

Again he says:

First. In the complaints of the Mexican Government there is not the slightest impeachment, express or implied, of the character or composition of the commission, of its methods of procedure, or of the entire regularity and integrity of its actual proceedings. It was composed of able and eminent men enjoying the full confidence of the governments by whom they were respectively appointed. And the umpire selected, Sir Edward Thornton, was pre-eminently fitted for his laborious and responsible duties, by his long diplomatic experience, his recognized ability, his high character, and his special knowledge of the two countries whose citizens and governments were interested in the arbitration.

Second. Before this commission the Government of Mexico had full opportunity and ample time to present its defense both in evidence and argument against any claim that was submitted. In the La Abra case a large amount of testimony was taken on both sides, the comparison and valuation of which was within the power of the commission, and the opinion of the umpire shows that it was carefully considered.

In the Weil case it is true that the Mexican Government submitted no testimony, and that the case was decided upon the evidence offered by the claimants. But the Mexican commissioner explicitly declined the offer of further time to produce such testimony, although he professed that his government had such in possession.

Again Mr. Evarts says:

The treaty under the provisions of which the commission was appointed was explicit in recognition of the finality of its action. By Article II of that convention the two governments bound themselves to consider the decisions of the commissioners and of the umpire as absolutely final and conclusive, and to give full effect to such decisions without any objection, evasion, or delay whatsoever; and by the fifth article the high contracting parties agree to consider the result of the proceedings of the commission as a full, perfect, and final settlement of every claim upon either government arising from the transactions prior to the exchange of ratifications thereof.

Again he says:

Aside from this special provision of the finality of the decision of the commission in the very act of its creation, it would seem impossible to review and retry any individual case without opening the door to other reclamations of the same sort. In addition to these cases, with the result of which the Mexican Government is dissatisfied, there are many others which failed of preparation in time, which were rejected on principles not always acquiesced in by those interested, and some in which the claimants deemed the awards very insufficient. The adherence of the Government of the United States to the strict letter of its convention, that the decision of the commissioners should be absolutely final in every case and a complete bar to any claim arising from transactions prior to its ratification, has hitherto prevented any effort on the part of this Government to renew such discussion in favor of its citizens. But if it be once admitted that for any reason short of an impeachment of the integrity of the commission its proceedings can be reopened for review and its decisions for reversal, there will not be wanting numerous urgent appeals to the justice and sympathy of the Government to extend this measure of relief to many who think that their claims have been erroneously estimated or rejected.

Lastly. The principle of the settlement of international differences by arbitral commissions is of such deep and wide reaching interest to civilization, and the value of such arbitration depends so essentially upon the certainty and finality of its decisions, that no government should lightly weaken its influence or diminish its consideration by making its action the subject of renewed discussion. It is only in extreme cases where the commission is itself charged with corruption or where it has clearly exceeded its powers in deciding matters not submitted to its judgment, that prompt and cheerful acquiescence should not be rendered to its action. No such charge is here suggested. It may be true that in this or that instance more adequate justice might have been rendered. The methods and processes of such tribunals which in time it may be confidently hoped will be improved and perfected, are not yet so complete as to eliminate much opportunity of error. But the results of such arbitration, covering, as it did, large, complicated, and numerous transactions, deciding not upon oral testimony winnowed by cross-examination, but upon the contradiction of vague affidavits, can not be fairly judged by the apparent errors of this or that individual case.

There is probably no just ground for saying that the aggregate of the awards against Mexico more than equaled the just claims of our citizens, and much complaint has been made that such aggregate falls quite short of them. But the awards made by this commission were something more than the settlement of mere private claims—it was the adjustment of long-standing national differences. And if in the result more or less was added to or taken from particular awards; still, if on the whole a fair and just balance has been struck; if, considering all that has been given and all that has been refused, the examination has been careful and the judgment impartial, it is the interest and the duty of the Government to maintain it.

He then adds in a subsequent part of his report that—

These cases ought not to be made the subject of a new international commission. He then expresses the conclusion that the honor of the United States was concerned to inquire whether in these cases submitted by this Government to the commission its confidence had been seriously abused, and the Government of Mexico, acting in good faith in accepting a friendly arbitration, had been subjected to heavy pecuniary imposition by fraud and perjury in the maintenance of these claims, or either of them, before the commission, and he recommends that Congress decide whether such an investigation should be made, and that it provide an adequate procedure for its conduct and prescribe the consequences which should follow from its results.

I may here state that in 1880 the Judiciary Committee of the Senate expressed its dissent from this view of Mr. Evarts by saying that the reasoning of the Secretary of State would seem to be unsatisfactory.

In this connection it is proper that I should refer to the act of 1878, in the fifth section of which it is recited that the Mexican Government has called the attention of the Government of the United States to its allegations of fraud in the exaggeration of the damages in the La Abra case, and in the procurement of the judgment in the Weil case, and asking a rehearing in those cases. Congress authorized the President to withhold payment of said awards or either of them until such case or cases should be retried and decided in such manner as the Government of the United States and Mexico may agree, or until Congress shall otherwise direct; and in case of such retrial and decision, any moneys paid or to be paid by the Republic of Mexico in respect to said awards, respectively, shall be held to abide the event and shall be disposed of accordingly, and the said awards shall be set aside, modified, or affirmed as may be determined on such retrial, provided nothing herein contained shall be construed as an expression of any opinion of Congress in respect of the character of said claims or either of them.

Now, it is claimed that the President of the United States has no power to dispose of the balance of the money paid into the Treasury by the Government of Mexico in the Weil and La Abra cases until further action has been taken by Congress. It is with very great deference that I dissent from the opinion of Mr. Evarts on the subject of the plenary powers of Congress over this question. I hold that it is a political or diplomatic question which must be acted upon by the treaty-making power, and that the Congress of the United States has no jurisdiction over the matter further than to direct the proper division or distribution of the fund which is paid in by the Mexican Government in gross sum and distributed among the claimants by our own Government, and that Congress was within its proper sphere when it advised the President to withhold payment of the awards until the case or cases are retried or decided in such manner as the Governments of the United States and Mexico may agree, which of course looked to the negotiation of a new treaty.

But the addition of the words "or until Congress shall otherwise direct," I hold can not tie the hands of the President in disposing of the fund to the claimants under the general provision of the act of Congress for its distribution, after the President is satisfied that no further treaty or agreement between the two Governments through the treaty-making power is necessary or can be agreed upon. When that conclusion is reached by the President, I have no doubt about the power of the President under the general act for the distribution of the fund allowed to the American claimants under the awards of the commission, to distribute the money properly among the different claimants, and that his power extends to all the claimants. In fact, I claim that I have high authority to sustain this view of the question. Subsequent to the passage of the act of 1878, when the fifth section was in force, just as it is in force to-day, Mr. Evarts, as Secretary of State, in the exercise of a sound discretion, and, I think, a correct discretion, concurred in by the President, distributed to the claimants that portion of the money due the La Abra claimants which had been paid into the Treasury.

And during the subsequent administration Mr. Blaine, then Secretary of State, followed the precedent set by Mr. Evarts, ordering the distribution of such part of the fund due the La Abra claimants as had been paid in by Mexico. Either President Hayes and President Garfield had no right to direct Secretary Evarts and Secretary Blaine to distribute the portions of the fund paid subsequent to the passage of the act of 1878, and prior to any further or final direction by Congress during their respective administrations, or President Cleveland now does have the authority to direct Secretary Bayard to make the distribution of the balance.

The fifth section of the act of 1878 makes no qualification or exception which would authorize the President or Secretary of State to distribute part of the fund and withhold the balance. If a portion of it must be held until Congress shall otherwise direct, all of it must be held until Congress shall otherwise direct. If a portion of it can be distributed without such direction of Congress, all of it can be distributed without such further direction of Congress. It is a question for the decision of the President. If it is true, then, that the money is tied up in the Treasury, and can not be paid out upon the order of the President until Congress takes further action, it is very clear that the law of 1878 has been violated in case of the payments already made by the two former Secretaries of State since the passage of that act.

I believe they acted within the legitimate sphere of their authority, and that the payments made by them were authorized and were legal and just; and I have no doubt that the President of the United States to-day has the like power to order the present Secretary of State to distribute the balance, and that he would act faithfully and justly and discharge a high duty towards his fellow-citizens who are claimants if he would pass such an order. There is, I believe, a legal maxim, interest reipublicæ ut finis sit litium—it is the interest of the republic that there should be an end of suits.

Where is to be the end of this contention? First, the two sister Republics enter into a solemn treaty or contract submitting claims of the citizens of the respective Governments to an international commission, and they bind themselves in the strongest terms known to the English and Spanish languages that the judgments of findings of that commission shall be absolutely final and conclusive, and no effort shall be made to evade or set them aside.

These two awards were made, the judgments rendered by a tribunal of unimpeachable integrity. Both Governments were solemnly pledged to carry them into effect. That pledge was in the interest of the whole people of the two Republics, and especially in the interest of the claimants who had been successful in obtaining judgments. After judgments of unquestioned validity had been rendered in both cases against the Government of Mexico she has used every effort to evade or get rid of these judgments.

Mexico first appealed to our executive department for a rehearing of the cases. The Executive brought the matter to the attention of Congress, and Congress, whatever may have been its authority, by act of 1878 requested the President to examine carefully into the facts and to grant a rehearing if the honor of the Government should require it. The question was referred to the Secretary of State by the President, and he in very masterly arguments demonstrated that Mexico had no just cause of complaint and no right in the premises. But he insisted that Congress take action providing for a rehearing of these cases on the ground that the honor of our Government required it.

In 1880 a bill was introduced into the Senate providing substantially for the same relief which is intended to be given by the present bill; in other words, providing for a reference of the case to a Federal court. That bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. That committee was composed of Allen G. Thurman, chairman, Joseph E. McDonald, Thomas F. Bayard, L. Q. C. Lamar, Augustus H. Garland, GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, Roscoe Conkling, David Davis, and Matt H. Carpenter. Certainly an abler Judiciary Committee of the Senate never existed at any period of the Government.

That committee took up this question, and after reciting the fifth section of the act of 1878 and reviewing the claims of Mexico to a new trial in equity, and the able report of Secretary Evarts, they discussed the points in the La Abra case and the Weil case, and they say:

In the investigation that has taken place in the State Department under authority of the fifth section above quoted, no suggestion appears in the report of the Secretary that the honor of the United States, the principles of public law, or the considerations of justice and equity, require that this case should be retried; but on the contrary, after stating considerations of public policy which would seem to forbid the reopening of the case, the questions of honor, principles of public law, and considerations of justice and equity are left to Congress to decide. This would involve an investigation by Congress of facts of an international character, which in the opinion of the committee properly belongs to the executive department, and which it was the intention of the fifth section of the act of June 18, 1878, to leave with that department.

They add:

The bill under consideration proposes to withdraw these two claims from the domain of international jurisdiction and place them before a tribunal organized and existing solely by virtue of the laws of this country; and in this way it would seem designed to avoid the opening of other questions of complaint that are known to exist in behalf of citizens of the United States whose claims for various causes failed to receive favorable consideration by said commission under the treaty creating the commission.

The second article of that treaty bound the two governments absolutely and conclusively by the final awards of the commission and the umpire, in all cases coming within its provisions, and it would seem right that if it is to be set aside as to one of the claimants, it ought to be by a new convention in which provision should be made for doing justice to all claimants.

Then referring to the argument of the Secretary of State showing the conclusiveness of the judgments, and to his proposition to submit the question to Congress, which is claimed to have plenary power over the subject, the committee say:

The reasoning of the Secretary against the propriety of such a course as this would seem to be unsatisfactory. But in the aspect these cases are presented to us we feel constrained to report back said bill adversely and recommend its indefinite postponement.

This was the decision of the ablest Committee on the Judiciary, and I say it with great respect for all other Judiciary Committees, that has existed in the last twenty years, and probably within the history of the Government. This opinion of the committee applies to the bill now pending with all the clearness and force with which it applied to the bill then before the committee. The two bills are very similar, and the objects of both were identical.

We would naturally have thought there ought to have been an end of litigation when this report was made to the Senate and the bill then pending was indefinitely postponed. But not so. Mexico then appealed to the Executive; and a treaty was negotiated between President Arthur and the President of the Mexican Republic, which was regular and within the power of the two Governments. This brought up the question for discussion before the Senate on the motion to ratify the treaty; and it was discussed during two or three sessions of the Senate, as is well known, and was finally voted down, the Senate refusing by a constitutional majority to ratify the treaty. We would naturally have thought that was the end of the litigation. But not so. During the Forty-ninth Congress another bill was introduced in the House and Senate to reopen and retry these cases. The Committee on Foreign Relations in the House took up the question in the La Abra case and investigated it with great care, and by an overwhelming majority reported against the passage of the bill. So that action was refused by the Forty-ninth Congress.

We would have thought then it was time for the litigation to end and time that the American citizens who were entitled to this fund under the awards of the commission should receive their just dues. But not so. Another bill was introduced in the Fiftieth Congress, which is now under consideration asking substantially the same relief. Where is the matter to end? Unless the President of the United States has the nerve and the sense of justice to go forward, as it is his duty to do, and distribute these funds, I presume one appeal after another will be made to Congress and to the treaty-making power in this case for the next twenty years.

But, Mr. President, what is the rule governing applications for relief against judgments which obtains everywhere? It is that to entitle the party to relief it is not sufficient that the facts alleged are material, but they must be such as he could not by reasonable diligence get knowledge of when he was put upon inquiry; for if by such reasonable diligence the party could have obtained knowledge of the facts equity will not relieve him, since that would be to encourage culpable negligence. (Story on Equity, section 146.)

Much less will he be entitled to relief when the proof offered came to his knowledge and was in his possession at the time of the trial and he declined to use it.

The Supreme Court of the United States thus states the universal rule:

A court of equity can never be invoked to remedy the consequence of laches or neglect or the want of reasonable diligence. Whenever, therefore, a competent remedy or defense shall have existed at law, the party who may have neglected to use it will never be permitted to supply the omission to the encouragement of useless and expensive litigation, and perhaps to the subversion of justice. (See Sample vs. Barnes, 14 Howard, 75.)

Again—

To entitle a party to relief he must show that he had a good defense which he was prevented from availing himself of by fraud or accident, unmixed with negligence of himself or agent. (Hendrickson vs. Hinkley, 17 Howard, 445.)

It follows, therefore, under every known rule of law, that the Mexican Government, which had full knowledge of the nature of the claim and of the evidence given in before the commission to sustain it, and which for five years declined to make any defense, and finally made none, comes too late with its complaint, and would not be entitled to relief in any court of law or equity according to the jurisprudence of any civilized nation.

Grant that Mexico has the right to file her bill in a court of equity seeking relief, she would then have to set forth the facts and circumstances which, according to her contention, entitle her to relief; and I apprehend there is no court of law or equity in this country, or any civilized country, that could grant a new trial upon the facts and circumstances of this case. If, then, the Republic of Mexico is clearly not entitled to relief under any known rule in a court of equity, admitting her right to go there, then it is very clear that she has no right to expect relief by an appeal to the Congress of the United States after the treaty-making power has refused the relief sought.

This case having been heard by an international commission created by solemn treaty between the two Republics, and final judgment having been rendered by the umpire in said international court, and said umpire having refused to grant a new trial, the judgment in accordance with the express terms of the treaty became absolutely final and conclusive between the parties; but the Government of Mexico having appealed to the Government of the United States for a rehearing on the ground of alleged fraud committed by the claimant or his agents, and the President of the United States having entertained the complaint of Mexico, and having consented to enter into a new treaty granting a rehearing, and said treaty having been agreed upon between the President of the United States and the President of the Mexican Republic, and the Senate of the United States being part of the treaty-making power having rejected the treaty, and having thereby held that the honor of the United States did not require further investigation, I hold that this was a finality in this case, and that no branch of the Government of the United States has any power to grant a new trial or to grant further relief.

The question being international in its character, or a contest between the two governments, no power in either government except the treaty-making power was competent to deal with it, or had jurisdiction in the case. The treaty-making power having agreed upon the tribunal which was to hear the case, and that tribunal having tried it and rendered judgment against Mexico, on an appeal for a new trial, and the treaty-making power of the United States having refused to negotiate a new treaty granting relief against the judgment, no other branch or Department of the Government of the United States has any jurisdiction of the case or any right to interfere or grant a rehearing of the case. The parties have had their day in court, final judgment has been rendered, application for a new trial has been refused, the effort to conclude a new treaty granting a new trial has been a failure, the treaty-making power of the United States having explicitly refused to enter into such treaty.

The question never was a judicial question for the courts of either country, and jurisdiction of such matters under the Constitution of the United States being conferred upon the treaty-making power exclusively, neither the legislative branch nor the judicial branch of the Government can assume to exercise the jurisdiction of the treaty-making power. It had jurisdiction; it alone had jurisdiction. It has exercised that jurisdiction and final judgment has been rendered, and that judgment is absolutely conclusive upon all parties concerned.

If it is claimed that Congress has the power to annul or set aside a treaty by legislative action, that power applies as well to a treaty of peace between this Government and a belligerent as it would to a treaty of this character. But if Congress possesses the power to annul or destroy a treaty, it certainly does not possess the power to negotiate one, or by negotiation to amend or modify a treaty. The only power Congress claims over that question is the power to set aside a treaty which, of course, may involve a question of war or peace. But it does not claim and can not possess the power to hear and adjudicate cases of claims of an international character, nor has it any right to alter or modify such treaty when made by the treaty-making power.

After a final adjudication of these cases doubts are still raised under the fifth section of the act of 1878 whether the President can proceed to pay out the balance of the money held in the Weil and La Abra cases until further direction from Congress. In the light of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, Frelinghuysen vs. Key, 110 United States Reports, page 73, there would seem to be no doubt on that question. The Supreme Court says:

> The first section of the act of 1878 authorizes and requires the Secretary of State to receive the moneys paid by Mexico under the convention, and to distribute them among the several claimants; but it manifests no disposition on the part of Congress to encroach on the power of the President and Senate to conclude another treaty with Mexico in respect to any or even all the claims allowed by the commission if, in their opinion, the honor of the United States should demand it. At most, it only provides for receiving and distributing the sums paid without a protest or reservation such as, in the opinion of the President, is entitled to further consideration. It does not undertake to set any new limits on the powers of the Executive.
> The fifth section, as we construe it, is nothing more than an expression by Congress in a formal way of its desire that the President will before he makes any payment on the Weil or La Abra claims investigate the charges of fraud presented by Mexico; and if he shall be of opinion that the honor of the United States, the principles of public law, or considerations of justice and equity, require that the awards * * * or either of them, should be opened and the cases retried, that he will withhold payment * * * until the case or cases shall be retried and decided in such manner as the Governments of the United States and Mexico may agree, or until Congress may otherwise direct.

The court adds:

> From the beginning to the end it is, in form even, only a request from Congress to the Executive. This is far from making the President for the time being a quasi judicial tribunal to hear Mexico and the implicated claimants, and determine once for all as between them whether the charges which Mexico makes have been judicially established. In our opinion it would have been just as competent for President Hayes to have instituted the same inquiry without this request as with it, and his action with the statute in force is no more binding on his successor than it would have been without.

Again the court says, on page 75:

> The concluding paragraph of the report—

Referring to the report of the Secretary of State—> is nothing more than a notification by the President that unless the means are provided he will consider that the wishes of Congress have been met, and that he will act on such evidence as he has been able to obtain without the help he wants.

The court then refers to the then pending treaty between the two governments, which has since been rejected by the Senate, and it adds:

> Under these circumstances it is, in our opinion, clearly within the discretion of the President to withhold all further payments to the relators until the diplomatic negotiations between the two governments on the subject are finally concluded. That discretion of the executive department of the Government can not be controlled by the judiciary.

And I may here add that the diplomatic negotiations have been closed, and there is now no restriction upon the discretion of the Executive to dispose of this money according to the award of the umpire who tried the case, and neither the Congress of the United States nor the judiciary has a right to interfere and by granting a new trial reverse the action of the treaty-making power, upon which alone the Constitution confers the jurisdiction.

Nor can Congress confer the jurisdiction on the judicial department. The question is a political one that falls properly within the domain of international decision, and Congress can no more control it than Congress can negotiate a treaty; nor can Congress confer upon the judicial department of the Government the jurisdiction to overrule, reverse, or control the decision of the treaty-making power. This view of the case is sustained, I think, by the current of authorities generally. In the case of Gordon vs. The United States, reported in 2 Wallace, 561, Chief-Justice Taney discussed this question with great ability. The pith of the decision is in these words:

> Nor can Congress authorize or require this court to express an opinion on a case where its judicial power could not be exercised, and where its judgment would not be final and conclusive upon the rights of the parties and process of execution awarded to carry it into effect.

The power of this great tribunal does not extend to an international controversy of this character. The controversy is outside of its judicial power, and it has no power to pronounce or execute a final judgment in the case. In fact, it can not call the parties before it, as Mexico is an essential party at interest to such a litigation, and there is no provision in the proposed act of Congress for bringing the Republic of Mexico into court to answer, nor is there any way of compelling her to abide the process or final judgment of the court. It is very clear, therefore, that the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction and that Congress can not confer jurisdiction in such case.

When a question was submitted to Caleb Cushing, while Attorney-General of the United States, of this character (see 7 Opinions, 599) he replied:

> The question whether the United States will pay according to their original tenor, drafts drawn by the Mexican Government under the Macilla convention, or suspend payment at the subsequent request of said Government, is a matter of political and not of legal determination.

The same legal principle has been decided in numerous other cases. See Luther vs. Borden, 7 Howard; White vs. Hart, 133 Wallace, 649; Phillips vs. Paine, 92 United States, 132, and cases there cited; United States vs. Lee, 106 United States, 209; The Exchange vs. McFadden, 7 Cranch, 116; State of Georgia vs. Stanton, 6 Wallace, 50; and other cases might be cited, but I deem these sufficient.

I will add that the Judiciary Committee of the Senate in 1880, in the case already referred to, similar to the bill now under consideration, took the same view of this question. The eminent lawyers composing that committee use the language which I have quoted in another part of this argument.

It is clear that the Senate Judiciary Committee of the Forty-sixth Congress, after mature consideration, were of opinion that this is a case for an international tribunal only, and is not properly the subject of investigation by a court of the United States.

It is well known that many of the claims by citizens of the United States, and many just claims no doubt, were either rejected or not reached by the commission, where the failure of the claim gave great advantage to the Mexican Government; and the committee is clearly right in holding that if a new trial is to be had in any case it should be before a new international tribunal, and all the cases where complaint of injustice or hardship is made be again submitted and retried by the new tribunal. This would have about it the semblance of justice; but to open the cases and set aside two of the awards rendered by the commission against the Republic of Mexico, and refuse to set aside and rehear the cases in favor of American citizens where complaint is made of palpable injustice, would be a hardship and inequality that I presume the Senate is not ready to encourage. Let the awards stand; let the final judgments rendered by the only competent authority control these cases, or by a new commission open the door for a rehearing of all the cases where complaint is made that injustice was done from any cause. Less than this would be a partial adjudication in favor of Mexico and a cruel denial of justice to our own citizens.

But, Mr. President, while the conclusiveness of the judgment in favor of these American claimants is not questioned by any department or any officer of the Government, the appeal is constantly made to us to do justice to a sister republic.

Those who are constantly asking justice should show a willingness to do justice. In other words, it would seem right to adopt the rule of equity, that "he who asks equity must do equity," and that everybody who comes into a court of equity must come with clean hands. Now, Mr. President, let us see what is the practice and position of the Mexican Government in reference to the conclusiveness of judgments where her interests are concerned, or where the rule is changed and it is the interest of that Government to insist upon the conclusiveness of the judgment.

I understand there are a number of claims of citizens of the United States now pending for damages for confiscations and robbery committed by the Mexican authorities upon American citizens where the Mexican Government carries the cases before its own district judges and procures judgments of confiscation of the property of our citizens under circumstances of flagrant wrong and outrage, and then refuses to do justice to such citizens on the ground that the judgment of its own court is conclusive in its own favor. I will cite only one case, which, as I understand, is one of a class of cases.

The Rebecca was an American schooner, engaged in the coastwise trade between the States of Louisiana and Texas, making an occasional trip to a Mexican port, and was to that extent engaged in the foreign trade. At Brashear, La., she took on a cargo of lumber for Tampico, Mexico, with regular clearance and regular manifest. She also took six boxes of merchandise on board to be delivered at Brazos Santiago, Tex. No clearance and no manifest was necessary to carry these goods from the port in Louisiana and deliver them at the port in Texas. She sailed for Brazos, intending to discharge the part of her cargo there which was consigned to that place, and when she was near that port she encountered a very heavy storm, which made it impossible for her to enter at Brazos, and she was driven southward by the violence of the storm and was badly crippled and in a leaking condition, which made it necessary to open the six boxes of merchandise intended for Brazos and deposit the thirty packages they contained in such parts of the vessel as would keep them dry.

In this condition she found herself at sea off Tampico, Mexico, and after much effort she entered that port. On arrival at Tampico, the captain of the vessel noted a protest of distress to the American consul. Disregarding this protest and frank statement of the condition of the vessel and the stress of weather which rendered it impossible for her to land at Brazos and deliver the portion of the cargo intended for that port, the Mexican authorities on the next day seized the thirty packages of goods and arrested the captain of the vessel for attempting to smuggle. He was afterwards released and again arrested and imprisoned and required to give bond to answer the charge of bringing in goods without the proper papers. The case was brought before a Mexican court for that district, and after an order that triple duties be paid upon the goods, which the captain of the vessel was not in condition at that time to do, it resulted in a seizure of the schooner and the goods, and a judgment of the court that they be confiscated and sold, which was done, and the money arising from the sale was applied first to the payment of triple duties to the Government, and the balance was divided between what is known as the "corresponding participants," or, in other words, as I understand it, the detectives and spies who conducted the affair. Here is the case of an American vessel which encountered a violent storm off a Texan port where she was to enter and discharge part of her cargo, and was driven by the violence of the storm in the direction of Tampico, her ultimate destination.

She was badly crippled and in a leaking condition and the persons on board were exposed to great hardship and their lives were in great peril. In this condition she sought refuge in a Mexican port, where she was seized and her captain, an American citizen, imprisoned and the goods on board and the vessel confiscated and sold by order of a local Mexican court.

The American consul at Tampico at the time, Mr. Augustus J. Cassard, in writing to the Assistant Secretary of State of the United States, says:

> I have, however, stated to them that the trial of that case had left me intimately convinced that the said schooner had been improperly seized, considering the complete failure of the prosecution in furnishing the slightest evidence, implicating the said vessel or her crew in even an attempt at defrauding the revenue of Mexico. Reference to the court's sentence in that case, shows that seizure was decreed simply upon private information received by the court from Brazos; that that part of the captain's declaration before the court, stating that owing to the stormy weather which prevailed on the date when said schooner was about effecting her entry into said port of Brazos, and which stormy weather blew the vessel in distress into the port of Tampico, proved untrue, since on that same date as aforesaid investigation disclosed the fact that the weather (meaning at Brazos) was unusually good.
> Referring to the captain's imprisonment I stated that, inasmuch as he had never resisted in any way the orders of the custom-house and the court authorities, and considering that the judge himself declared to me that the captain's apprehension and close detention was a mere medida precautori (precautionary measure) I considered said apprehension and detention by military force totally arbitrary and illegal.
> In connection with that case, and an almost similar one (the seizure of the steamer Pittsbury), allow me to remind you that in both cases my official intervention was most peremptorily ignored.

Here, then Mr. President, was the seizure and imprisonment of an American citizen, the captain of a schooner, and the seizure and confiscation of the schooner and cargo that had encountered a storm at sea and been driven by stress of weather in a crippled condition into a Mexican port, and all the facts and circumstances showed to the satisfaction of every honest man that there was no attempt to evade or violate any Mexican law. But, with a view to plunder, the captain was imprisoned and the vessel confiscated and sold, and the proceeds divided out between the government and its retainers, and the judge put his decision, as appears from the statement of the consul, upon the ground that he had had private information from Brazos that there was no storm at the time mentioned, and that the weather was unusually good, when, as is shown in another part of the case by the affidavits of respectable people and the reports of the weather bureau, the storm was raging at the time furiously, as claimed by the captain of the schooner.

Here, then, is a case where, according to every principle of equity, law, and justice, it is the duty of the Mexican Government to pay exemplary damages to the captain of the schooner on account of the cruel and false imprisonment, and to pay to the owners of the schooner Rebecca, and of the goods on board which were seized and confiscated, full and adequate value for the same.

Under instruction from the Department of State of this Government our late able and distinguished minister to Mexico, Hon. Henry R. Jackson, of Georgia, opened a correspondence with the minister of foreign affairs of Mexico, Signor Igno. Mariscal, and brought the case of the Rebecca prominently before the minister, and in behalf of the Government of the United States demanded reparation and indemnity. Now, how was this just claim met by the Government of Mexico? Not by showing a disposition to do prompt and full justice to American citizens who had been imprisoned, outraged, and robbed, but the Mexican Government plants itself firmly on the finality of the judgment of its own district court, rendered in behalf of the Government of Mexico against a citizen of the United States, which judgment confiscated the schooner Rebecca and its cargo, and refused all redress to Captain Dujay for his illegal imprisonment.

In his letter of 31st of October, 1885, Mr. Mariscal, in replying to the very able presentation of the case by Minister Jackson, says:

> I deem it proper to transmit to your excellency inclosed herewith copy of the communication of the Treasury Department of the 5th July of that year, to which are annexed the sentences of the district court of the south and center of Tamaulipas, which are duly carried out, and have therefore completely ended the question in conformity with the laws in force.

Again, Mr. Mariscal says in the same communication:

> In view of the foregoing, and the executive being unable to remedy or change the consequences of an affair which has been followed, resolved upon, and consummated by the judiciary, to whom Captain Dujay was submitted for trial, I deem it useless to forward to the court at Tampico the report which your excellency was pleased to send me with your note above referred to.

Again, in his letter to Mr. Jackson, of the 9th of February, 1886, Mr. Mariscal says:

> It is also shown by the respective documents that as it was communicated by the Treasury Department to that of foreign affairs in note of July 5, 1884, in compliance with the orders of the Mexican court, the goods were sold at auction and the corresponding duties were applied to the federal treasury, the balance being distributed among the corresponding participants. Therefore, Mr. Minister, this is a matter which has been examined, decided upon, and executed by the judicial power in conformity with the laws of the Republic, and which must not and can not be subject to revision by the executive.

In the letter of Mr. Secretary Bayard addressed to Shellabarger and Wilson, May 26, 1886, he says on this subject:

> All arguments, however, have been unavailing, the Government of Mexico contending that the records of its courts should be incontrovertible.

Now let us contrast the two cases for a moment. In the one case, an international tribunal or commission is formed under a solemn treaty entered into by the two republics, each pledging itself to the other in the most solemn form to abide by and carry out in good faith the awards or judgments of said commission, which it is agreed shall be absolutely final and conclusive, and there shall be no attempt to evade or delay the execution of such judgments. In the Weil and La Abra cases such judgments were rendered by a court selected by both parties, whose integrity is not questioned, upon evidence that is amply sufficient to sustain them, which evidence had been subject to inspection of the Mexican authorities for five years, and which they did not attempt to rebut. Under this state of the case the Mexican Government appeals to the Government of the United States to set aside these binding judgments rendered under circumstances of so much solemnity, and grant a rehearing and relieve the Government and people of Mexico from the payment of the amount of said judgment.

In other words, it is an appeal by Mexico to this Government not to insist upon the finality of the judgments of an international court, which are admitted to be valid and binding. This is one case. Now, what is the other? An American vessel which has encountered a storm and came well-nigh being wrecked, the vessel and the lives of those aboard being saved with great difficulty, worked its way in a crippled condition into a Mexican port, at once noting a protest of distress and communicating with the consul of this Government, and laying all the facts honestly and fairly before the Mexican authorities. The local authorities seeing an opportunity to plunder our citizens interested in the vessel and cargo, seize the captain of the vessel and commit him to prison, and seize the vessel and cargo, and obtain a judgment of the local district court of Mexico for the confiscation of the vessel and the cargo. The proceeding was high-handed, unmitigated robbery, done under the pretext of trial and sentence of a local judicial tribunal of Mexico with whose selection and appointment the United States had nothing whatever to do.

This case is brought before the enlightened Government of Mexico, and damage is demanded for the false and cruel imprisonment of Captain Dujay, and compensation is demanded for the seizure and confiscation of the Rebecca and her cargo. How is this most just and meritorious claim met? By a prompt disposition to deal justly and fairly with the citizens of a sister republic in that spirit of comity and good neighborhood which is invoked in the case now under consideration? No; it is not. But the Government of the United States is met with the declaration that the local district court of Mexico, with whose creation or appointment this Government had no connection, and whose judgments are in no way binding upon it, has tried that case, as it must be admitted, upon an ex parte showing, and has rendered a judgment, as the court has informed our own consul, upon private information which he professes to have received from Brazos, Tex., and which is falsified by the facts, which judgment confiscates the vessel and cargo.

And we are gravely informed by the Mexican Government, in its effort at good neighborhood and international comity, that it will not settle the claim; that it will not even investigate it; that there stands the judgment of its district court justifying the imprisonment of Captain Dujay, and ordering the confiscation and sale of the vessel and cargo. That that judgment is final and conclusive and can not be reviewed by the Mexican Government; and compensation for the losses and indemnity for the imprisonment are absolutely denied, the Government of Mexico taking shelter behind the conclusiveness of this judgment of its own local court. The only possible justification that can be pleaded for the outrage is that it has already been determined by the judgment of a court which is final and conclusive.

While this correspondence stands of record, and while Mexico refuses under this pretext of the finality of the judgment of its district court to do justice in the case mentioned, there can be no just reason why anybody should ask that a judgment of an international court of the most solemn sanction should be set aside by the consent of the American Government for the benefit of the Government and people of Mexico.

When Mexico comes into court with clean hands we will be ready to meet her half way, and extend to her and her citizens in the fullest degree the same measure of justice and equity which she extends to the Government and people of the United States. This is all she has the right to ask.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Georgia, in behalf of a minority of the committee, presented his report first to the committee, and then presented it to the Senate, and has taken occasion to elaborate that report, or to explain it, as he says, in some remarks which he has just submitted to this body.

Supposing that it would be proper on my part to make some reply to the remarks of the Senator from Georgia against the report of the committee, I ask that the report lie on the table and be printed, so that I may submit my remarks in explanation of the report of the majority to-morrow, before the case goes regularly upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the order placing the bill upon the Calendar will be reconsidered, and it will lie upon the table. The report will be printed, and the Senator from Alabama will have the opportunity to call it up to-morrow.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 1705) to provide for the erection of a public building at Statesville, N. C., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. WALTHALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 2952) to allow certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL (by request) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

STATUE OF FRANKLIN.

Mr. VOORHEES. What branch of morning business is in order at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business has been concluded, but the Chair will receive further morning business if there be no objection.

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to offer a joint resolution for present consideration and action.

The joint resolution (S. R. 96) authorizing the District commissioners to designate a site for a statue of Benjamin Franklin was read the first time at length, as follows:

Whereas Stilson Hutchins has offered to donate to the United States a colossal statue of Benjamin Franklin in white Italian marble and erect a pedestal therefor of Massachusetts granite at his own expense, after plans which have been submitted to the Joint Committee on the Library: Therefore,

It is resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That authority is given to erect the statue, under the supervision and direction of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, upon such part of the streets or public spaces in the city of Washington, D. C., as the said commissioners may designate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first reading having been at length, the joint resolution will be considered as read the second time by its title.

Mr. VOORHEES. In explanation of the necessity of the joint resolution, I ask that a brief letter from the commissioners to Mr. Hutchins be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, June 14, 1888.

DEAR SIR: The commissioners direct me to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 13th instant containing a proposal to erect and present to the capital city a statue of Benjamin Franklin, to be placed at the intersection of Pennsylvania avenue, Tenth, and D streets northwest, and to add that while they think very highly of the proposition they find that they are without authority to grant a permit for its erection on public ground. It is necessary that authority be obtained from Congress, and the commissioners submit the accompanying blank form of a joint resolution giving them the requisite power in the premises, which they have no doubt would meet with prompt and favorable consideration.

Very respectfully,

W. TINDALL, Secretary.

STILSON HUTCHINS, Esq.

The sketch of the statue is herewith returned.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FOURTH VIRGINIA COLLECTION DISTRICT.

Mr. TURPIE. I was authorized by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] to withdraw the motion entered by him to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 1890) to amend an act approved June 15, 1882, changing the boundaries of the fourth collection district of Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be withdrawn if there be no objection.

ADDITIONAL BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SAULSBURY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3192) granting increase of pension to Daniel H. Kent; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 3193) directing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to convey to William Brown a part of an alley in square 120 in the city of Washington on certain conditions; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BROWN introduced a bill (S. 3194) to establish Indian police courts and to define their jurisdiction and to regulate judicial proceedings within the Indian reservations, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GEORGE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3195) for the relief of Louisa Q. Lovell and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of such pension bills on the Calendar as are unobjected to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of private pension bills favorably reported upon the Calendar to which there is no objection. If there be no objection, the first private pension bill on the Calendar will be stated.

JAMES M'GOWAN.

The bill (S. 2764) granting an increase of pension to James McGowan was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-two;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James McGowan, late a private of Company H, Twentieth Regiment Maine Volunteers, and to pay him during life a pension of $72 per month in lieu of the one now received by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. AURELIA P. HALL.

The bill (H. R. 9487) granting a pension to Mrs. Aurelia P. Hall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Aurelia P. Hall, mother of Wilson S. Gilliland, deceased, late a private in Company A, Third Ohio Infantry Volunteers; also of Company G, Fourteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry; and still later, of Company C, Fourteenth Infantry, United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLARD A. JACKSON.

The bill (S. 1960) granting a pension to Willard A. Jackson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Willard A. Jackson, late of Company I, Seventeenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW J. HADLEY.

The bill (S. 2756) granting a pension to Andrew J. Hadley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Andrew J. Hadley, late of Company E, Third Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLEN M. THORNTON.

The bill (S. 2982) granting a pension to Ellen M. Thornton was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported amendments, in line 7, after "United States," to insert "Navy;" and in the same line, after the words "rate of," to strike out "sixty" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ellen M. Thornton, widow of James S. Thornton, late a captain in the United States Navy, at the rate of $50 a month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MATHEW H. REYNOLDS.

The bill (H. R. 4774) granting a pension to Mathew H. Reynolds was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to put the name of Mathew H. Reynolds, late private of Company B, First Michigan Cavalry, on the pension-roll.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT STAUNTON, VA.

Mr. DANIEL. By consent of the gentleman who made the motion to take up private pension bills, I ask that the order be suspended informally, so that we may proceed with the Calendar for a few minutes.

Mr. PADDOCK. Not to displace the order already made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia desire the consideration of any particular bill on the Calendar?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, sir; I want the consideration of the first bill in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the pending order be informally laid aside to enable him to move to take up Order of Business 1410, being Senate bill 1291, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1291) for the erection of a public building at the city of Staunton, Va.

Mr. PADDOCK. I inquire if the Senator thinks that bill will lead to any debate.

Mr. DANIEL. I think not. If it does I shall give way at once.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is fair it should be done, for that bill was taken up and under consideration last evening when we adjourned, and it was stated to the Senator from Virginia that it could be disposed of just as well this morning.

Mr. PADDOCK. I make no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 4, after the word "purchase," to insert "acquire by condemnation;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, acquire by condemnation, or otherwise provide a site, and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office and the internal-revenue office, and for other Government uses, at the city of Staunton, Va.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to read:

The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 21, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty;" and in line 22, after the word "building," to insert "which sum is hereby appropriated;" so as to read:

And no purchase of site nor plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $50,000 for site and building, which sum is hereby appropriated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are the words "which sum is hereby appropriated" all? I suggest to the Senator from Virginia, as that is an amendment, that there ought, for safety, to be added to it "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," for fear there may be a technical difficulty at the Treasury about paying the money.

Mr. DANIEL. I thank the Senator for the suggestion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the population of Staunton?

Mr. DANIEL. Ten thousand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a nice town, I know.

Mr. DANIEL. I move to amend the amendment, in line 22, by adding:

Out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WICHITA, KANS.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senators on the Pension Committee to yield to me for a moment, as I am called out. Yesterday there was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the bill (H. R. 1451) for the completion of a public building at Wichita, Kans. Some time since the Senate passed a nearly equivalent bill. I have a note from the Treasury Department stating that it is very important that this bill, if passed at all, should be passed immediately in order that the plans now under consideration may be perfected. The bill was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I have had some conversation with those members of the committee who are present, and I ask that the committee be discharged from the consideration of the bill in order that it may be considered by the Senate now. It is House bill 1451.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] moves that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1451) for the completion of a public building at Wichita, Kans.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the bill be amended by inserting "$100,000" instead of "$50,000" as the amount. That is the amount of the estimate.

Mr. PASCO. I should like to hear the explanation of the Senator from Kansas as to the necessity for this action.

Mr. PLUMB. The bill is exactly in the terms of a bill which has already passed the Senate for the same purpose. The subject-matter, therefore, has received the assent of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I am advised by the proper officer of the Treasury Department that it is very important, if the bill is to be passed, that it should be passed at a very early day.

Mr. PASCO. This is in the terms of a bill which has already passed the Senate?

Mr. PLUMB. Precisely.

Mr. PASCO. I see no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. VEST, Mr. PASCO, and Mr. MORRILL were appointed.

THOMAS WYNNE.

The bill (S. 3116) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Wynne was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas Wynne, late a private of Company C, United States Infantry, at $50 a month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

Mr. PADDOCK. In line 6, after the words "Company C," I move to amend by inserting the words "Second Regiment;" so as to read:

Late a private of Company C, Second Regiment United States Infantry.

It is a matter of description.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN LANGLAND.

The bill (H. R. 885) to amend chapter 253 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, passed June 15, 1878, granting a pension to John Langland, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend chapter 253, passed June 15, 1878, second session of the Forty-fifth Congress, so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Langland, late a private of Company B, First Michigan Sharpshooters: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the said John Langland from completing his claim on file in the Department of the Interior, numbered 108931; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to adjudicate said claim on the evidence on file and to be furnished hereafter: Provided further, That in case of the allowance of said claim by the Secretary of the Interior he shall deduct from said allowance the amount of money drawn by said claimant under this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill should be amended so that the chapter of the General Statutes (and not of the Revised Statutes) may be referred to. If there be no objection the amendment will be made by reference to the Statutes so as to comply with the fact. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that the report in relation to the bill just passed be printed in the RECORD, with a letter from General Sherman attached thereto. The committee desired that the report should be read, and perhaps it would have been done if the chairman of the committee had been present at the moment the bill was under consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed, if there be no objection.

The report, submitted by Mr. DAVIS June 19, 1888, is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a bill (S. 3060) providing a pension for Matilda C. King, have examined the same and report:

Accompanying the petition in support of the bill is a mass of testimony illustrating the long and honorable military career of the late Col. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. John H. King, husband of the petitioner; but the whole is so clearly summarized in the eloquent tribute to his services and memory by General W. T. Sherman that the committee adopt his letter as their report, and in its spirit recommend the passage of the bill.

NEW YORK, June 5, 1888.

I was well acquainted with General John H. King, whose death was reported at Washington, D. C., April 7, 1888, and I have just read the above "état de service," prepared officially by General Drum, the Adjutant-General of the Army. The period of his service was his whole manhood, from 1837 to 1888, fifty-one years, covering the most important epoch of American history, and very few men of to-day realize what they owe of the growth in power, physical resources, cultivation, and refinement to the little regular Army commanded by such men as John H. King.

His career, full of dates, resolves itself into three periods—before the civil war, during it, and after. In the first and last of these he was on the frontier pushing back the Indians to make room for the enterprising emigrant, establishing military posts whence radiated the influence of order, system, and good government. When in 1861 this whole country became convulsed by civil war, and when so many of his comrades abandoned their colors, he stood fast, firm in the faith, and did a man's whole share, as above shown, at Shiloh, Stone River, Chickamauga, Resaca, New Hope, Kennesaw, and Neal Dow Station.

It would take a volume to do justice to the subject, and as much of his service was directly under my command, I do a simple but grateful duty in adding this small tribute to his memory.

I bespeak for his widow and children the watchful care of a Government made rich and powerful by the manly conduct of such faithful servants as was John H. King.

W. T. SHERMAN, General.

ELIZA J. ALEXANDER.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES H. ORR.

The bill (H. R. 6761) for the relief of James H. Orr was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James H. Orr, late private in Company D, Twenty-first Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, and to pay to his legally constituted guardian the pension to which he will be entitled.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES W. HARRIMAN.

The bill (H. R. 618) granting a pension to James W. Harriman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James W. Harriman, late of Company E, First Regiment Maine Cavalry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS BENSON.

The bill (H. R. 6070) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Benson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas Benson, late a private in Company A, Thirty-second Regiment Maine Volunteers, at $35 per month, in lieu of the amount he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN F. HUCKABA.

The bill (H. R. 9200) granting a pension to John F. Huckaba was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John F. Huckaba, a private of Company H, Second Regiment of Tennessee Mounted Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN MAGHER.

The bill (H. R. 888) granting a pension to John Magher was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John Magher, late of Company F, Tenth Regular Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSAN L. WATSON.

The bill (H. R. 7883) granting a pension to Susan L. Watson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of Susan L. Watson, widow of Adolphus E. Watson, late pay director, United States Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMSON M. DAVID.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall pension bills favorably reported this morning be considered?

Mr. BECK. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 21, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 20, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—ELIZABETH BURR.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 488, entitled "An act granting a pension to Elizabeth Burr."

It is proposed by this bill to grant a pension to the beneficiary therein named as the widow of William Burr, who enlisted for one hundred days in 1864, and was discharged on the 3d day of September in that year.

He is reported as present on all roll-calls during his service. He died April 7, 1867, of dropsy, never having made any application for a pension.

His widow filed an application for pension in 1880, thirteen years after the soldier's death, alleging that the disease of which he died, claimed to be dropsy, was contracted in the service.

The claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the dropsy causing his death was not due to his military service, but that he was subject to the same before his enlistment.

I am perfectly satisfied that the rejection upon the ground claimed was correct.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 19, 1888.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message be printed, and, with the accompanying bill, be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

EDWARD FITZGERALD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, requesting that the papers in the case of Edward Fitzgerald be taken from the files of the House and transmitted to the War Department for use by the Quartermaster-General; and it was so ordered.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE NOXUBEE RIVER, NEAR GAINESVILLE, ALA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8343) to authorize the construction of a wagon and foot-passenger bridge across the Noxubee River, at or near Gainesville, in the State of Alabama, with amendments of the Senate thereto.

The bill and amendments were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent of the House that a recess be taken at 5 o'clock this afternoon until 8 o'clock p. m., the evening session to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of bills authorizing the construction of bridges across navigable streams and bills granting rights of way. These bills are very long, members have a great interest in them, they involve no appropriation, there are a good many of them, and I think that if we devote one night session to the business a large number can be disposed of.

Mr. RANDALL. The bills granting rights of way involve, I suppose, no appropriation of public lands beyond that made for depots.

Mr. CRISP. I presume so. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the Committee on Commerce, which I virtually represent in making this request, do not consider those right-of-way bills, but I coupled them in my request because I was informed that there were a good many such bills, which involve no appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. Bills involving right of way might be subject to amendment by making grants of lands. I do not object to giving land for depots if they are 10 miles apart.

Mr. CRISP. If there is any question about the right-of-way bills I will modify my request so as to confine the evening session exclusively to the consideration of bridge bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. PEEL. There is a Senate bill which I intended to ask unanimous consent to have considered now. While it is a bill granting a right of way to the Utah and Northern Pacific Railroad Company, it also ratifies an agreement with the Shoshone and Bannock Indians. I should like to have that bill included in this order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] modify his request, or does he desire to have it put in its original form?

Mr. CRISP. If there be no objection, I shall leave the request unmodified.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the request to be for the consideration of bills of the character indicated to which there is no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. But some of us might not come here if we knew that no bills involving grants of the public domain were to be considered.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that there are some bridge bills, one for a bridge in my own district——

Mr. RANDALL. There is no objection to bridge bills if they conform to the general law.

The SPEAKER. The question is in relation to bills granting rights of way.

Mr. STOCKDALE. There is neither a right of way nor an appropriation involved in the bill to which I refer. It simply authorizes the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River.

Mr. RANDALL. Bills granting rights of way might involve contests between corporations for the construction of railroads, and I would feel it incumbent on me to object to including right-of-way bills in the order unless I knew that they were free from the objections I have indicated.

Mr. CRISP. Then I will modify the request so as to confine the evening session to the consideration of bridge bills.

Mr. MAISH. A good many bills have been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs granting rights of way, which ought to be considered as soon as possible. They are bills which, I think, involve no controversy whatever.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Military Affairs is likely to get a day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] asks unanimous consent that a recess be taken at 5 o'clock until 8 o'clock p. m., the evening session to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of bills authorizing the construction of bridges to which there is no objection. The Chair supposes the request to include Senate amendments to House bills of that character. Is there objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman from Georgia, whether the Committee on Commerce intends to make any effort to recover the two lost days.

Mr. CRISP. Oh, yes. I will state to the gentleman that the Committee on Commerce have reported perhaps more than one hundred and fifty bills——

Mr. BUCHANAN. Because there are bills reported from that committee which are just as important as these bridge bills, and we have already passed more bridge bills than almost any other kind of legislation.

Mr. CRISP. The Committee on Commerce have a proposition pending before the Committee on Rules to secure two days for the consideration of their business, and from conferences that I have had with the Committee on Rules I think I can state that if time is given to any committees the Committee on Commerce will retain its place.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That, however, is rather a nebulous assurance.

Mr. CRISP. That is as far as I can go.

There was no objection to the request of Mr. CRISP for an evening session for the consideration of bridge bills, and it was so ordered.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 2527) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North by the Duluth, Rainy Lake River and Southwestern Railway Company, the bill having been returned from the Senate with amendments.

Mr. CRISP. I ask that this bill retain its place on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the order just made by the House would permit the Committee on Commerce to report back at this evening's session any House bill with Senate amendments to which there is no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. Regular order.

The bill, with the amendments of the Senate, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

GENERAL G. CLUSERET.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 474) for the relief of General G. Cluseret; which, with the amendments of the Senate, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were respectively read a first and second time, and referred as indicated:

The bill (S. 489) for the relief of John Finn—to the Committee on War Claims.

The bill (S. 2816) to authorize the construction of a bridge for railway purposes across the Mississippi River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, to be located north of and in the vicinity of the city of Alma, Wis.—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 2875) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase-money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands," approved June 16, 1880—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The bill (S. 1404) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, and to establish it as a post-road—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 1786) to regulate appointments in the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 1582) for the relief of the estate of Lucien Goyaux—to the Committee on War Claims.

The bill (S. 2515) to provide pneumatic gun-carriages for the War Department—to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (S. 2658) to validate acknowledgments, taken before United States commissioners appointed by the circuit courts of the United States or by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, of deeds recorded in said District—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 3134) for the erection of an additional fire-proof building for the use of the National Museum—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

FORT HALL RESERVATION, IDAHO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2266) to accept and ratify an agreement made with the Shoshone and Bannock Indians for the surrender and relinquishment to the United States of a portion of the Fort Hall reservation in the Territory of Idaho, for the purpose of a town site, and for the grant of a right of way through said reservation to the Utah and Northern Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. PEEL. I desire to make a request in reference to that bill.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. PEEL. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will allow me to ask unanimous consent that this bill be included in the order for this evening's session. It is a bill which the Department is very anxious to have passed.

Mr. RANDALL. If I yield in one direction I may have to yield in all.

Mr. PEEL. I hope the gentleman will allow me to submit the request for unanimous consent. A bill similar to this has been reported from the House committee and is on the Calendar. This bill meets the approval of the Department, and its passage is very important. It proposes to ratify an agreement which has already been made.

Mr. RANDALL. An agreement between what parties?

Mr. PEEL. An agreement by the Shoshone and Bannock Indians for the surrender of a portion of their reservation in Idaho for a town site, and for a right of way to the Utah and Northern Railway Company.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood the gentleman to say, a while ago, that the Committee on Indian Affairs had reported no bills granting rights of way through Indian reservations.

Mr. PEEL. This is to carry out an agreement by the Indians themselves. The bill is well guarded.

Mr. RANDALL. I prefer to have the regular order.

Mr. PEEL. I hope, then, the bill will be retained on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will withhold the bill for the present, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

INTERNATIONAL MARINE CONFERENCE.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BELMONT, Mr. RUSSELL of Massachusetts, and Mr. MORROW as conferees on the part of the House on the bill (S. 1851) providing for an international marine conference, etc.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 128) for the relief of John Fletcher;

A bill (H. R. 4691) for the relief of John P. Hageman;

A bill (H. R. 7255) for the relief of A. B. Tyan; and

A bill (H. R. 8372) authorizing the sale of a portion of the Winnebago reservation in Nebraska.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CROUSE, for six days, on account of important business; and

To Mr. SHERMAN, until July 10, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of certain bills granting pensions which were postponed by the order of the House.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, the bills that are set down for a hearing to-day were brought into the House with the object of having a full attendance, and a quorum of members present; the most of them, I think, having been brought here at the instance of my colleague [Mr. CHEADLE]. He informs me that he will still insist upon a quorum being present to vote upon them. It seems to be impossible to get a quorum now; and I understand the Committee on Appropriations desire to proceed with the consideration of the sundry civil bill. Considering the importance of having that bill passed before the end of the fiscal year, I ask that these pension bills, thirteen in number, I believe, be postponed for two weeks from Friday next.

Mr. MILLS. I can not consent to that. I think the pension bills ought to have remained in the Friday night sessions, and been there disposed of. It is a violation of the agreement for gentlemen who meet here on Friday nights to take up and partly consider bills and then send them forward to block other legislation in the House. If my friend from Indiana wants to postpone these bills—and I think they ought to be postponed—to some Friday night, and consider them at night, as was originally intended in making the order for night sessions, why, then, there is no objection. But I do object to setting apart a day for their consideration. We have important public business pending to be considered in the day sessions.

Mr. MATSON. In reply to the gentleman from Texas, I desire to state that it is not the fault of the members present at Friday night sessions that these bills were not considered then. It is the fault of those members who were not present, and who by their absence prevented a quorum.

Mr. MILLS. Yes; but it is the fault of those present to send them forward on the ground that a quorum was not present, and thus take up the time of the House for their consideration. It is a violation of the agreement.

Mr. MATSON. There is no violation of agreement. These bills are entitled to be considered just as much as any other bills.

Mr. MILLS. They are entitled to be considered on Friday nights.

Mr. MATSON. They are entitled to be considered on Friday nights; but when any gentleman makes the point of order of no quorum, the only possible way to dispose of them is to have them considered when there is a quorum present. If my friend from Texas and others would be present at Friday night sessions there would be no such trouble.

Mr. BRYCE. One of these bills was made a special order for the following day, just before the other bills were referred from the committee to the House; and it seems very hard that in that particular case a further postponement should be had, and that consideration should not be promptly given to it. It has now waited a long time.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman from Texas will allow me to make a suggestion or explanation, I think he will not insist upon his objection. Perhaps the gentleman does not exactly understand the position of these bills?

Mr. MILLS. I do.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. They passed during the pension night sessions, except that on the final vote under the previous question the point of no quorum was made, and consequently under the rules of the House these bills came forward for consideration on the next day; but by consent their consideration was fixed for a certain date, to which day they were postponed with the privilege of fifteen minutes debate on each side. The previous question was ordered upon the bills, and they came over under that condition of affairs.

Mr. MILLS. I understand that.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I do not suppose that they could come up to-day; because there is not a quorum present, as the gentleman who objected perhaps to their consideration at the Friday night sessions does not wish them considered without a quorum. But it would be very unfair to those who were here upon the nights when the orders were made if they should not have a hearing in this House, and especially after the previous question has been ordered upon the bills.

Mr. MILLS. They ought to have been disposed of at the Friday night session. Gentlemen present ought to have had a call of the House if necessary to compel the attendance of a quorum.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the first bill.

Mr. MILLS. I ask, for information, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania is going to move to go into Committee of the Whole on the appropriation bill?

Mr. RANDALL. I have no right to make that motion.

Mr. MILLS. You can by moving to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. RANDALL. These bills are in order immediately after the reading of the Journal, the previous question having been ordered upon them.

The SPEAKER. They were not made a special order immediately after the reading of the Journal, but were postponed until to-day; and under the practice they can be called up at any time. Of course the question of consideration can be raised against any one of them.

Mr. RANDALL. But the previous question operates.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but still the question of consideration can be raised against any bill, the House having the right at any time to determine whether it will or will not proceed to consider.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 381) for the relief of Jesse H. Strickland.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that no debate is allowed on this bill. Five of these bills are postponed with the agreement that there shall be thirty minutes' debate, fifteen on each side.

Mr. MILLS. I move to postpone the further consideration of these bills until Friday night next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can only move to postpone the one under consideration.

Mr. MILLS. Then I move to postpone that one.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Better move to postpone it until some day session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves to postpone the further consideration of this bill until next Friday evening.

Mr. RYAN. I hope that will not be done, because if postponed to some evening a quorum will not be present and the result will be that no action will be taken whatever.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The object of the committee is to have a quorum present.

Mr. MATSON. I want to make a proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to correct a statement which was just made by the Chair. The Chair stated that there were five of these bills upon which, by order of the House, there was to be allowed thirty minutes' debate. The Chair discovers that there are twelve of these bills, upon each of which debate is allowed for fifteen minutes on a side.

Mr. MATSON. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Texas by fixing the time for the consideration of the bill for next Friday a week; and further, to provide that the bill shall be considered immediately after the House assembles for the evening session. It will be impossible to get a quorum here on next Friday night.

Mr. MILLS. I will accept that.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that that order may be made as to all the bills; and I hope we will have a quorum here at that time.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest that beyond all question there will be no quorum at that meeting, and the result will be to block all pension legislation.

Mr. MATSON. Why will there not be a quorum?

Mr. BURROWS. Because members will not come.

Mr. FARQUHAR. If they want the bills passed why will they not come?

Mr. BURROWS. The point is this: Under this agreement these bills are to be taken up first, and therefore that will block all pension legislation.

Mr. FARQUHAR. This is a part of the pension legislation that has been laid over.

Mr. BURROWS. Of course there are many cases in which no objection is made.

Mr. RYAN. This order was made because there was no quorum on the evening when the bills came up for consideration. The intention was to bring the bills up before the whole House, so that the action of a quorum of the House could be had upon the bills. We have not a full House now. I think that these bills ought to be postponed. They should be postponed to a day, not to a night. I agree that they ought to be postponed to some other time. It is a notorious fact that there is never a quorum here at evening sessions.

Mr. MACDONALD. Further than that, Mr. Speaker, if this motion is adopted it will simply have the effect to defeat the passage of any other pension bills; nothing more nor less.

Mr. BURROWS. Why could not some day be fixed for the consideration of these bills under an agreement that a vote be taken on all of them without debate.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Oh, no; that will not do.

The SPEAKER put the question, and was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. MILLS. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and thereupon there were—ayes 53, noes 42.

Mr. MORRILL. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL].

While the House was dividing the following took place:

Mr. SPINOLA. I ask the attention of the House for a moment. It strikes me, sir, that this is a question which can be solved now if gentlemen will have a little consideration one towards the other. I am prepared to go as far towards taking an early opportunity for legislation on pension matters as any member of this House, and notwithstanding my disabled condition I am willing to come here any evening that may be set aside for the consideration of these bills. I believe, sir, that is the shortest way to reach them; to fix either Friday night or some other night specially to consider these bills.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That is the proposition now pending.

Mr. SPINOLA. That is the proposition which, in my judgment, should prevail. I state that in the interest of the applicants for pensions. I believe if we adopt some course of that character we will be able to reach this legislation and dispose of it in the most satisfactory manner to all who are interested. I trust our friends will not make the slim excuse that we can not get a quorum at an evening session. We have agreed in our contract with the people of the United States to come here and discharge all our duties; and on this side of the House there seems to be no trouble. I appeal to our friends on the other side to unite with us in disposing of these matters at evening sessions. Let us not waste all our energy and all our sympathy at home in behalf of the soldiers; but let us discharge our duties toward them here. I believe, sir, this is the shortest possible way to do it; and I ask our friends on both sides of the House to consent to come here on some evening which shall be designated by a vote of the House to-day. It is evident we can not get action now. Every one knows there is no quorum present.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Do we ever have a quorum on Friday night?

Mr. SPINOLA. If members can not come let them stay at home, and let the soldiers understand they have suffered because members of Congress have been derelict in the discharge of their duties.

Mr. MILLS. I will modify my motion to meet the views of the gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. MORRILL. Let us fix upon three weeks from Thursday night.

Mr. MILLS. All right.

Mr. MORRILL. I simply wish to say I am not pressing for the consideration of these bills to-day.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent that these bills may go over until three weeks from Thursday night.

Mr. MORRILL. I am utterly indifferent whether it be one week, two weeks, or three weeks.

Mr. MILLS. Then let it be three weeks from Thursday night; a recess to be taken from 5 o'clock until 8.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 46, line 15, strike out "fifty-five thousand dollars" and insert "sixty-five thousand dollars."

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. McSHANE. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand an itemized statement from the Commissioner of the General Land Office showing in detail the requirements of local land offices throughout the country for clerk-hire and incidental expenses. The amount is $217,000. Of this amount $171,600 is for clerk-hire, $32,115 is for office rent, $5,020 is for furniture, $3,618 is for fuel, $2,549 is for registration fees, and for findings the amount is $2,876. There are employed in the local land offices two hundred and one clerks, not including the clerical force employed in contest cases. In other words, there are employed for the necessary clerical work, exclusive of contest cases and the making of abstracts and copying of plats, two hundred and one clerks, and for payment of that service and all classes of incidental expenses this bill allows only $155,000. Deducting from the appropriation in this bill the amount that is absolutely necessary for rent of offices, there is left $123,000 for the payment of clerical force and other incidentals.

This makes the salaries of the clerks in the local land offices $615 each per annum, or about $51 per month. Now, it must be conceded by all that competent clerks for the performance of this service can not be employed for anything like $50 per month. In addition to that, the expenses for new furniture, for registration fees, and for findings must be deducted from this amount. This compels the registers and receivers of the local land offices to pay the excess of clerk-hire, and it is impossible to employ a competent clerk for less than $100 per month. The adoption of the appropriation in the bill compels the registers and receivers to pay from their own salaries of $3,000 a year each—not from the office fees, but from their salaries—$50 per month for clerk-hire. The Commissioner of the General Land Office informs me that his estimate for this service was $217,000, but that when it was sent to the Secretary of the Interior he was compelled by that officer to accept the estimate of $165,000, knowing when he did so that it would be impossible to pay for the service with that amount. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, with this statement of facts before him, I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will at least accept the pending amendment adding $10,000 to this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I want the attention of the committee for a few moments, because I wish to speak plainly in relation to this and kindred matters in connection with the public service. If I understand what brought the Democratic majority to this House, it was the assurance they gave the country that they would abolish all needless offices and reduce public expenditures wherever it could be done with safety. To that line of policy the Committee on Appropriations, in its majority at least, has strongly adhered.

We see that the last administration in its final year spent for these purposes $140,000; and in the face of that we are told by the Commissioner of Public Lands that the sum of $217,000 is necessary for this purpose for the next fiscal year.

Mr. McSHANE. That is, since the fees have been taken away from these officers.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, take from that the $80,000. The fees were never obtained fairly.

Mr. McSHANE. Still, they were in the hands of these officers all the same.

Mr. RANDALL. Yesterday this House increased the appropriation for registers and receivers $24,000 over the amount recommended by the Committee on Appropriations. Now, I want to say to this side of the House at least that the Committee on Appropriations have given months of attention to these questions, and have made an investigation into every item of this bill; and when they make their recommendations they make them upon a thorough review of all the facts. I say with deliberation that the Committee on Appropriations understand perfectly well that a number of these land districts ought to be dispensed with. Two of them have been dispensed with, as I understand, in Michigan; two more ought to be dispensed with in Minnesota; two more in Wisconsin; two more in Kansas. Why? Because in those districts nearly all the lands subject to entry have been surveyed, and the officers could be dispensed with without injury to anybody. In view of these circumstances the Committee on Appropriations think they have a right to expect, at least from the majority side of this House, support in their effort to adhere determinedly to the policy which put the representatives of our party in power here.

When in this paragraph we give $155,000, the sum which was expended last year, we make an adequate appropriation; and I say further that there is no purpose on the part of members of the Committee on Appropriations on either side to cripple the public service in any degree. I hope that, under these circumstances, the amendment will be voted down.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLANCHARD addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment has been exhausted.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BLANCHARD to strike out "fifty-five" and insert "sixty-five," so as to make the appropriation for contingent expenses of land offices $165,000, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 15, noes 59.

The Clerk read as follows:

Depredations on public timber: To meet the expenses of protecting timber on the public lands, $75,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "75" and inserting "90," so as to make the appropriation "$90,000" instead of "75,000." I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania is ready to accept this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think that paragraph has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has just read the paragraph.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in his remarks a few moments ago, to state that there has been a consolidation of certain land offices, and that others ought to be consolidated; but he did not tell this House that there are now more land offices in existence than ever before in the history of this Government. He argued that there had been this consolidation, in order to show that the amendment adopted yesterday was improperly adopted; and he makes that statement in the face of the fact that although $500,000 was appropriated in the last sundry civil bill to cover salaries and commissions of the registers and receivers of land offices there was at the end of the year a deficiency of $60,000; and that, too, when there were fewer land offices in existence than there are to-day.

But, Mr. Chairman, since we have passed that paragraph, I will proceed to address myself to the amendment I have just sent to the desk. I will take occasion, however, to state that when the gentleman from Pennsylvania asserts that this side of the House should keep in line with the policy of economy which brought the Democratic party into power, I am fully in accord with him. I believe as thoroughly as he does in just and properly applied economy. But when we have before us the experience of past years, showing that every one of the appropriations which have been made to cover the expenses of this branch of the public service has been insufficient, I say a continuance in that line leads beyond economy and trenches upon parsimony.

Not one of these appropriations, made in years past, under the head of "Expenses of the collection of revenue from sales of public lands," has been sufficient to defray the just expenditures of that branch of the service, and the Committee on Appropriations know this fact. Under the head of "Depredations on public timber" they propose to appropriate $75,000, when the amount asked for by the Secretary of the Interior is $90,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is done under this head of "Depredations on public timber?" The special agents appointed by the General Land Office are paid out of this fund. Their operations extend all over the United States where there are public lands, and their duty is to protect the timber on the public lands from those who would trespass upon it. The agents of the Government who protect the Yellowstone National Park are paid, I believe, out of this fund.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. RANDALL. We make a distinct appropriation for that. The military authorities now take care of that park.

Mr. BLANCHARD. At any rate the timber on all the public lands of the United States is protected by the special agents of the Land Office, who are paid out of this fund. The number of these special agents I do not know, but they are many.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERMANN obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. BLANCHARD. The Commissioner of Public Lands in his last annual report, speaking on this subject of depredations on public timber, says:

TIMBER TRESPASS.

The appropriation of $75,000 for the prevention of depredations on the public timber is totally inadequate. The vast field to be covered, stretching from Florida to Alaska, can not be supervised by twenty-five special agents, nor can the determined efforts of timber depredators, many of them corporations with millions of dollars at their command, to despoil the forests of the country, be met by puny attempts to check their unlawful and disastrous acts. The service is more than self-supporting, and draws no money from the Treasury that is not more than returned to it by fines and recoveries.

It is no part of an intelligent or defensible policy to make timber depredations a source of revenue. The object to be attained is to save the forest lands from unlawful destruction, and if this can be accomplished by appropriating the whole of the receipts derived from trespass prosecutions there should be no hesitancy in allowing the administrative department the aid, at least, of the money it recovers. My estimate for the next fiscal year is $100,000 for this purpose, a modicum only, I must say, of the amount that could be beneficially and profitably expended.

It will be observed that the Commissioner of the General Land Office recommends $100,000 for this service. The Secretary of the Interior reduced that $100,000 to $90,000, and the Committee on Appropriations has still further reduced it to $75,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I repeat what I said in reference to the salaries of receivers and registers of the land office; that they are no charge to the public Treasury. The amount recovered by these special agents in the way of prosecutions, criminally and civilly, amounts to more than the sum which the Committee on Appropriations have embodied in this bill.

I hold in my hand a statement made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to which I call attention.

Statement showing actual results accomplished by the special-service division of the General Land Office from March 4, 1885, to April 30, 1888.

Criminal suits pending June 30, 1887, 436.

Three hundred and ninety-nine thousand six hundred and seventy-five dollars and thirty-six cents is the amount recovered in the time mentioned and paid into the Treasury through the civil and criminal prosecutions of parties who had depredated on the public timber. It thus appears that this service is more than self-sustaining. If this is so, why should not an adequate appropriation be made to cover the expenses of the service?

There is no economy, Mr. Chairman, in a policy which denies it. I submit to the House that the sum of $75,000 is inadequate, and should be increased to the full amount of the estimate of $90,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, during the last year of the Republican administration $75,000 was given for this service. Every year since then that sum has been given, and the Committee on Appropriations recommend no increase be made therein.

It is true, with the expenditure of this money we got more back than we paid. One year we got $126,000 with $75,000 expended; but I submit to this House the object of appropriation is not so much to get money back as to create an apprehension in the minds of these depredators, so as to keep them away from these lands.

There is no deficiency and has not been during the number of years to which I have alluded. I hope, therefore, the amendment will not prevail, but that, on the contrary, the appropriation provided by the Committee on Appropriations shall be voted instead of the $90,000 asked by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. McRAE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I agree to much that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations states in reference to this amendment, but I think when he understands what has been done by this Administration with such appropriations he will not longer object to the increase asked by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

While this appropriation is the same as the one made for the last year of the Republican administration, that administration produced no such results as have been produced by the present Administration. It is not a waste of money to give all the Commissioner asks for, and so I think the amendment should be adopted. I have in my hand a statement prepared at the General Land Office showing what has been done, and I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and of the country to the facts which it discloses. There are 910 civil suits pending for timber trespasses, involving nearly $7,000,000, and 1,812 criminal actions.

Since the 4th day of March, 1885, the present Administration has actually recovered in money on account of such trespasses upon timber the sum $399,675.36.

Mr. RANDALL. Do you not know all that is paid for out of another appropriation by the Department of Justice?

Mr. McRAE. Which?

Mr. RANDALL. That.

Mr. McRAE. I understand the expense of all suits are paid out of the appropriation made for the Department of Justice, but these suits for timber trespass are instituted by reason of investigations made by these agents. They are appointed for that purpose and are paid by the Interior Department. Without them it is utterly impossible for the district attorneys to prosecute successfully. If the Government expects results the Department and the courts must have the aid of the agents.

Mr. RANDALL. I say they have enough of agents, and I say when you come to look at the aggregate expense to the Government, it is largely in excess, and instead of the service being remunerative, when you come to add the fees of district attorneys, jurors, and everything of that sort, you will find in this matter of depredation on timber lands more is paid than is received. I think it is desirable to keep up the system in order to continue the apprehension on the part of these timber depredators, that they are not only to be mulcted in damages, but they are to be prosecuted criminally.

Mr. McRAE. It is hardly fair to count all the court expenses. I hardly think they are any larger than they otherwise would be. There are 1,812 criminal suits pending, instituted, I presume, on account of the vigilance of the timber agents or inspectors now in the field. If it is the policy of this Administration to continue to protect against such trespasses, then let us give money enough to get all of the agents needed in the field. It is, I think, the duty of this House to give the Department all the money that may be needed to get through with the investigations already commenced, and let these cases serve as a warning to trespassers in the future, rather than dole it out annually to keep up an apprehension in the minds of the evil-doers.

I do not want an organization of agents kept solely to terrorize the settlers of this country. The settlers require no such watching. If there is no necessity for these agents, no appropriation should be made, and the offices should be abolished. If the pending suits and investigations already commenced are to be prosecuted, I know that there is a necessity for them, and I hope the committee will give all the money that is necessary to get through with the matter and call off the force.

I will ask in this connection to insert in the RECORD a statement prepared at the Land Office, giving the figures bearing upon this question.

B. B. SIMMES,
Chief Division "P."

Mr. RANDALL. These agents get about $1,400——

Mr. McRAE. Yes, I think from $1,200 to $1,400.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, $1,200 and $1,400; and get their fare—that is, their mileage—and per diem for support, $3 a day, if I recollect.

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir. I think that is about correct. They get their salary and all expenses or allowance for expenses.

Mr. RANDALL. And I hope, in this connection, that the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations (being of opinion that this amount of money was sufficient for the employment of these agents) will be sustained.

Mr. McRAE. I do not of course pretend to know how many men are needed, and therefore defer to the Interior Department, whose duty it is to know. It asks for $90,000, and the committee gives $75,000. The difference is too little to be considered very long, when time is as valuable as it is to the House at this time. Mr. Chairman, I do know that the adjustment of claims growing out of alleged trespasses by citizens of this country and manufacturers of the lumber, as well as the litigated cases and prosecutions, are very often delayed and continued for months, and sometimes years, on account of the inadequacy of the force whose duty it is to get the witnesses and a clear understanding of the case. It takes time and money to do this. People are slow to furnish evidence to the Government voluntarily.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the appropriations for this service come under the head of the Department of Justice. As I remember, the amount appropriated here goes simply to agents.

Mr. McRAE. I understand that, but the investigation of the facts necessary to be known before the actions are commenced or the prosecutions instituted must be made by these timber agents, who are also expected in some cases to be present at the trial to aid the district attorney. The Department wants more help.

Mr. RANDALL. Put more agents in.

Mr. McRAE. Then the appropriation is not enough, the agents will not work without pay.

Mr. RANDALL. The appropriation ought to be reduced to get rid of the dead wood. If these men are not competent to perform the duty others ought to be put in their places.

Mr. McRAE. The men are competent, and do perform their duties faithfully, as far as I am advised; but there are not enough of them to do what ought to be done.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, a word more in support of the amendment. Of course I am not fooling myself at all with the idea that the Committee of the Whole is going to adopt the amendment in the face of the objections of the Committee on Appropriations; but I am going to do my duty and point out the insufficiency of the appropriations so far as they pertain to the Land Office Department.

These special agents of the General Land Office, whose duty it is to protect the timber on the public domain from trespass, are relied upon to furnish the names and addresses of witnesses to prove the trespasses, whether it be under criminal prosecutions or in civil suits. On the 30th day of June there were pending in the courts of the United States three hundred and twenty-three civil suits, involving $6,907,520, and at the same time there were pending in the United States district courts throughout the country four hundred and thirty-six criminal prosecutions against timber trespassers.

In these cases the Department of Justice pays the expenses of witnesses who attend the courts to prove up the cases on the part of the Government; but the special agents of the General Land Office are relied upon by the Department of Justice to furnish the names of the witnesses to prove the facts and make up the case. This is the condition of affairs; and yet for this service throughout the length and breadth of this great country the Appropriations Committee recommend $75,000 instead of $90,000 asked for by the Secretary of the Interior, and that, too, in face of the fact that both the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office have stated that $75,000 has heretofore proven entirely inadequate for this service.

Now if, in view of this statement of the facts, this House shall see proper to defeat the amendment, then let the responsibility rest where it belongs.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BLANCHARD, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Protecting public lands: For the protection of public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, $100,000.

Mr. McSHANE. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "one hundred thousand," in line 24, and insert "fifty thousand."

Mr. McSHANE. This, Mr. Chairman, is one branch of the public service where, in my judgment, a portion of the public money is uselessly expended. It is intended by this bill to appropriate $100,000 to be used for the employment of twenty-three special agents at nearly $5,000 per annum, including expenses per diem, etc. One hundred thousand dollars for prosecuting fraudulent land entries, and only $125,000 for the clerical force of two hundred and one clerks employed in performing the service, in all the local land offices, one hundred and eleven in number.

Now, it does seem to me that it does not require $100,000 to provide funds for twenty-three special agents, if any portion of that amount is used to persecute the honest settlers on the public domain.

Mr. LAIRD. That is correct.

Mr. McSHANE. I make the charge here on this floor upon well-founded information that a portion of these appropriations has been used by some of these special agents in the procurement of fraudulent affidavits against honest settlers on the public lands.

I repeat, for the procurement of fraudulent affidavits; and so far as I am concerned I am not in favor of appropriating a dollar for that purpose. I do not object to the appropriation of the public funds for honestly prosecuting fraudulent land entries; but I am opposed to appropriating the public funds for the persecution of honest claimants.

For that reason and in view of the fact that the appropriation for performing the clerical service in that department is, in my judgment, far below what it ought to be, and, as is well stated by the department itself, namely, that the department must be managed upon a starvation basis, I am in favor of reducing the amount for the prosecution of work in this branch of the service to a reasonable sum, at the same time giving them all the necessary funds in my judgment to prosecute the work of detecting fraudulent entries and to carry out the intentions of the law in that regard.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. McSHANE]. Really I think the Land Department ought to have in this instance, as in the other, what it asks for. Certainly the amount proposed by the Committee on Appropriations should not be reduced from $100,000 to $50,000. There is no question but that this Administration has done a great service to the country in protecting the public domain, as well as reclaiming that which has been fraudulently entered by individuals and withdrawn for and granted to corporations under the Republican administration.

The showing is an excellent one, and reflects much credit upon the Interior Department. It was a difficult and hard work, and to be thorough and complete necessarily involved hardships and injustice to some honest people whose entries have been suspended temporarily. We all deprecate this fact, and as far as can be we want to avoid it in the future. With an increased force of good men under the control of the Interior Department as it is now organized, the practice about which we have heard so much complaint will cease. Much fraud has been committed against the Government, and in reaching and punishing it suspensions have been made that ought not to have been made, but there was no other way to get at it.

The fact that honest claims are suspended increases the necessity for an early investigation. To get this the Department must have more men. I desire to call attention to exactly what has been done with the small force employed with money that has been given for this purpose. The administration has in regular course of examination and proceedings canceled for abandonment, illegality, and other causes entries under the pre-emption, homestead, timber-culture, desert-land, mineral and timber-land laws from the 4th of March, 1885, to the 12th day of May of the present year, aggregating 27,460,608 acres, to say nothing of the thousands and millions of acres yet suspended and awaiting examination. I know among the suspended entries there are thousands of cases, perhaps, where the suspension ought not to exist; but with such results as these this House can not afford to say we will abandon the investigation and give nothing to aid in this important work.

The public domain must be protected against fraudulent entries of every character and kept as homesteads for actual settlers. This side of this House is pledged to that, and I think it intends to keep that pledge.

I do not indorse all that has been done by this Administration about these entries, because I think in a few cases they have suspended entries in localities where nothing ought to have been done. But it was an honest effort to protect the public lands. Taking it as a whole, the good is tenfold more than the injury that has come to the country. Coming into power under the pledge that we would reclaim and recover the lands that had been granted to corporations and syndicates, the Administration entered honestly and faithfully to work to do it. The work, as far as it has gone, has been thorough. The quantity restored by the executive department, exclusive of legislative forfeitures, amounts to over 52,000,000 acres.

The following table and statement shows the quantity of land actually restored to the public domain by the present Democratic Administration since March 4, 1885, exclusive of forfeiture bills:

Land actually restored to the public domain.	Acreage.
Lands in granted railroad limits restored	2,108,417.38
Railroad indemnity lands restored	21,322,690.00
Private land claims; withdrawn lands restored	576,000.00
Entries under pre-emption, homestead, timber-culture, desert, mineral, and timber land laws canceled in regular course of examination and proceedings in General Land Office for abandonment, illegality, and other causes	27,460,608.74
Invalid State selections restored to United States	968,747.52
Total actually restored to the public domain and opened to entry and settlement	52,437,373.59

With this showing there ought to be no objection to this appropriation from any friend of the administration. The settlers whose entries are suspended demand it as well as the Administration. How do you expect ever to dispose of these questions unless you provide the means? It is neither economy nor justice to withhold the money asked. Having suspended all entries in certain localities until we can overhaul and overtake the dishonest settlers, it is absolutely cruel to refuse to delay consideration. Give them a chance to be heard at once, and if their entries are honest let them have their patents. It is on behalf of the honest settlers of the country as well as the Department that I speak and ask that the appropriation be made. So I hope the amendment will not be adopted; but if there is to be any change at all let the amount be increased to $150,000, as the Commissioner of the General Land Office has asked.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

This is by no means a partisan matter. It concerns the rights of the people, their rights in a particularly precious respect, their rights of property, their rights to possess their property without aggravation and embarrassment by uncalled-for surveillance on the part of the Government; it concerns the right of the poor to their all, their homes. I want sincerely to congratulate the Democratic party upon one thing: That at last there has come to this House a man with courage enough to stand up and tell the truth as he knows it about the management of these land affairs in the West.

We have had enough of detraction heaped upon these settlers by a ministerial officer regardless of the consequences of his reckless accusation or without a considerate examination of the premises on which he rests an accusation against a great class of people and a great section of country. I congratulate my colleague from Nebraska [Mr. McSHANE] upon the fact that he has stood here upon this floor and denounced a system which has grown up foreign to freedom, outrageous as far as the property rights of the people are concerned, and yet which has gone on for years, during the present Administration unchallenged, at the hands of men on the Democratic side who have scores of times told me in private conversation that they denounced the conduct of the Commissioner of the General Land Office so far as his treatment of the Western settlers was concerned.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] tells the House of the fruits of the labors of the secret agents of the Government. I have a great deal of respect for the gentleman from Arkansas. I have a profound respect for the gentleman who at present presides as Commissioner of the General Land Office. I can scarcely measure, I am frank to say, the absence of respect with which I view the gentleman who was his immediate predecessor, and who has fastened upon this country a policy infamous in its operation upon the rights of honest men.

The gentleman from Arkansas speaks of the number of claims that have been rescued from the hands of thieves and scoundrels in the West. I think my friend is mistaken generally, and so far as the agricultural West is concerned I know he is. I think the information from which the gentleman speaks—the daily history of the Land Department—is colored by the accursed policy of the man that Mr. Cleveland was compelled to fling from the official position which he had disgraced for three years, and this in deference to the inalienable rights of the settlers of the West whose property and honor he had assaulted without the justification of truth. And now let me say this, and in saying it let me add that my colleague from Nebraska [Mr. McSHANE] and myself can speak upon this subject with that authority which comes from personal knowledge.

We have known these men in Nebraska "from the ground up," because we knew them when they lived in the sod house, and have seen them evolve themselves from the sod house into the frame house and the happy home, and have seen the wild prairie, which science condemned twenty years ago as a desert, pass from the sea of grass in which the bison swam into a great land of schools, churches, colleges, thrift, civilization, and wealth. [Applause.]

Now, I say that the great presumption is, springing from the accomplished fact of the settlement and development of the West, that that which these men have done could not have been done by conspirators against law, could not have been done by perjurers, could not have been done by thieves, could not be accomplished by scoundrels. And yet until now the uncontested allegation has stood, so far as the Democratic side of the House is concerned, that these men were in a conspiracy against good government, that they were stealing the public domain by millions of acres, that they were achieving States by fraud, falsehood, and perjury.

Now, for the first time I have heard a Democratic voice raised to assert the truth as I know it, and scores of you Democrats of the South and West know it, and yet you and your party have through all those years stood mute while the fraud-frantic head of a great department of the Government was, in the name of reform and by means that would have disgraced the inquisition, robbing the settlers of the agricultural West of the homes they were struggling to found at the expense of every comfort, in the face of every privation, and sometimes at the cost of life itself.

I say I have listened for a voice to be raised on the Democratic side in behalf of the honest men, making the bravest struggle for a home that men have ever made since labor set its conquering foot upon the rock at Plymouth. I have listened for three years, and never until now have I heard it. You have dismissed our pleas saying they were partisan and for effect. Alas! can the soul of mortal man become deadened with prejudice that justice must speak through the prostituted voice of politics or remain unheard?

The gentleman from Arkansas says that 13,000,000 acres have been "rescued" by the policy of this Administration from cattle syndicates, etc., and I remember from my investigation of that subject that whatever amount may have been rescued from the clutches of the so-called conspirators against the public domain there are upon the records of the office something like 87,000,000 acres belonging to actual settlers now tied up, and how tied up? Tied up upon the complaints and the secret "informations" of these special agents that you are asked to give $100,000 to maintain them in the field.

Thirteen millions of acres taken from the guilty and 87,000,000 acres taken from the innocent—an undivine mission this. Punishment is apportioned by all the laws from God to man for the guilty and not for the innocent. From this "tieing" process the land west of the Missouri will never escape if you continue the policy of paid spies, whose confidential whispers, conceived and considered in secret, are received and accepted by the authorities here as sufficient ground for the cancellation of the prima facie title otherwise unchallenged and unimpeached.

Will this House vote money to further continue a system in which accusation is accepted as proof and suspicion as conviction? Where are the loud-voiced and long-tongued advocates of the Constitution on that side of the House who usually go about seeking for something to devour? Where are they, and why do they not lift their voices for the laws and the people, both of which must go down before this system? Where else than here, under any system, earthly or unearthly, is a man robbed of the presumption of innocence and convicted by assuming the truth of the charge that he is guilty? Out upon this un-American infamy that we are asked not only to endure but to pay for.

Let me give you an example. A friend of mine, if you please—a constituent—was accused by one of these agents. It was stated that his land had been procured by indirection, and that the evidence of the fact would be found upon the files of the General Land Office in the report of a special agent. I went to the Land Office and asked Mr. Sparks if I could see the report. He said: "In what capacity do you come?" I said: "I am asked to do so by this constituent."

A MEMBER. What do you mean by "procured land by indirection?"

Mr. LAIRD. It was charged by this special agent that the man from whom my constituent had purchased the land had not complied with the land laws——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN was recognized.

Mr. LAIRD. Let me complete this statement. It is due to public justice that it should be done.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. LAIRD. Five minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield to the gentleman for that time.

Mr. LAIRD. It was also charged that the man who had taken the land under the land laws had taken it with the understanding that he was to sell it to this constituent, who invited me to go to the Land Office and look at the record. I was asked in what capacity I came. I showed my letter asking me to examine the record. I was refused the opportunity to do so. I then asked, "Will you allow me as a member of Congress to see it?" The answer was, "No, sir." I said, "What have you done upon the accusation of this agent?" The reply was, "The claim of your friend has been canceled. It has been suspended, and he has been told that if he desires to appeal from the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior, he may do so within a certain length of time."

Now, here was an accusation involving the title to property which, so far as the United States is concerned, is final. The title which he had received from the original settler was based on the final receipt, so called, of the register and receiver of the land office in the district in which the land was taken, which receipt, under the decisions of the courts, is not only prima facie evidence of title, but, under all the State and a recent United States circuit court decision in Oregon, vest the purchaser with a vested right, of which under the Constitution he can not be divested except by due process of law; and you, the makers of law, do not need to be told that due process of law is trial, public trial before a court of competent jurisdiction provided with a jury, and accompanied by the precious privilege of confronting and cross-examining the accusing witnesses.

This money is asked to perpetuate a system which possesses only the damning merit of the substitution of secret accusation for public proof, of the ex parte decision of a mere ministerial officer, based on the ex parte hearsay and unsworn statement of a spy, for the formal, public, and reviewable decisions of a court. The question is: Will you continue a policy which spoils men of their title on private accusation by a special agent, and denies the Representative in Congress, or any other person interested in behalf of the settler, access to that accusation, which is treated by officers of the Department as a private paper?

I have spoken from my personal knowledge of the matters discussed here and their effect upon our people, and I say there is scarcely a man in this House who, if he knew the facts as my colleague [Mr. McSHANE] and myself know them, from actual observation, would contend for an instant in favor of granting a dollar of this appropriation. It is outrageous, it is infamous in its operation upon the rights of settlers. You gentlemen of the South come here pleading against the invasion of your homes and premises by the revenue officers of the Government, and in the discussion of that subject you naturally grow warm. I come here in the same spirit, pleading for the right of my people to enjoy their property without being harassed by the paid spies of a free government. [Cries of "Good!" on the Democratic side.]

A MEMBER (on the Democratic side). Help us to wipe them out.

Mr. LAIRD. I will.

Mr. Chairman, what is the state of business in the Land Office, and what are you doing by this amendment to afford a remedy? Do you not know that there are millions of acres the title to which is impeached by the mere ipse dixit of an executive officer having no particle of judicial power, millions of acres the title to which is tied up and nobody contests, nobody asks that the title of the settler shall be put in question? They are condemned unheard and hold their very homes at the mercy of a body of men paid to hunt them from the land into which is merged their toil and torture.

I will vote any amount of money which Mr. Stockslager, whom I believe to be an honest and conscientious officer of the Government, may ask for the purpose of expediting business and bringing to an end the delays which, by reason of the want of mere clerical force, have become so burdensome to the people of the West—the people interested in getting titles from the Government to their lands. But while I will do that, I will never vote a cent of money which will add to burdens that can never be relieved by any amount of clerical force at this end of the line. While there may be some trouble here, the great trouble which is causing this delay in regard to land titles is at the other end of the line, arising out of this system of special agents, who by the mere breath of suspicion can overturn the muniments of title which settlers have acquired by compliance with the law.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to fix by consent a time within which debate on this paragraph may be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. What time does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. PETERS. I would like to occupy ten minutes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I would like five minutes.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. And I, five minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I would be glad to have five minutes. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he had better allow the debate to go on for a while without limitation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Three-quarters of an hour ought to be sufficient.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask consent, then, that the debate be limited to forty-five minutes; and I am willing to leave the distribution of the time to the Chair, except that I would like to control the last five minutes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I shall object, unless the gentleman will increase the time to sixty minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to allowing sixty minutes, except that I mean to try and pass this bill to-day.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is right; we will stay with you.

Mr. RANDALL. If there is to be an hour's discussion on every paragraph, we shall not be able to do that.

Mr. PETERS. This is one of the few paragraphs on which there should be considerable latitude for debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to limit debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto to forty-five minutes?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I propose sixty minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the House decide between us.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The question recurs first on the amendment making it sixty minutes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. My proposition is to object to the forty-five minutes suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the committee rise.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. We have no quorum present. There are only fifteen minutes in dispute.

Mr. PETERS. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not object to granting us sixty minutes, as this is a very important question.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist upon my motion that the committee rise, as I want to pass the bill to-day.

Mr. PETERS. There is much more money recovered in these prosecutions than the appropriations which have been made for the service.

Mr. RANDALL'S motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLOUNT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill; and pending that motion I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in forty-five minutes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move to make it sixty minutes.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move to make it thirty minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope that amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. We understand this proposition as well now as we will by any further debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question first recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, that the debate be limited to thirty minutes.

The question was put; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. RANDALL demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 19.

Mr. BLANCHARD. No quorum has voted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This question does not seem to be understood. Some members think the proposition is to give thirty minutes in addition to the forty-five minutes proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope gentlemen will consent to limiting the debate to forty-five minutes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. No; we must have sixty minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appoints as tellers Mr. FORNEY and Mr. BLANCHARD.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 36.

Mr. FORNEY. No quorum has voted, and I now ask, by unanimous consent, that, as a compromise, debate be limited to fifty minutes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The motion and the amendment and the amendment thereto were withdrawn.

The question then recurred on Mr. RANDALL'S motion to go into Committee of the Whole, and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, and by order of the House all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto is limited to fifty minutes. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. RYAN. How is the time to be divided?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule limiting debate to five minutes the Chair will recognize gentlemen on both sides, giving an equal portion to each side.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask to be recognized for the last five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana rise to oppose the amendment or to favor it?

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to oppose it.

Mr. MCRAE. I ask, by unanimous consent, to be permitted to insert in the remarks made by me on this subject some tables and other matter in addition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] has spoken with too much passion to be either just or fair. I do not know what personal reasons the gentleman may have for bringing his personal controversies into this House, and that does not concern me. But it is not often that a member deems it just and proper that he should assail on this floor an absent citizen, especially one who for many years had been an honored member of this House, with terms of abuse and denunciation.

The judgment of the country, Mr. Chairman, is, I think, that in the employment of its officers and agents this Administration has been, as a rule, singularly fortunate. Whatever else may be said about the administration of Grover Cleveland, I think that all men of both political parties throughout the country accord to his administration an honorable purpose and a desire to secure to the people the blessings of good government. And I feel sure, sir, that the public judgment, in reviewing the multitude of men who have held offices under this Administration and the services rendered by each, if it selected one who had rendered a service of special and enduring value to the people, reflected especial honor on the Government, whose integrity rose above all question, who left the public service with the regrets of millions of people, that public judgment would without hesitation designate General Sparks, of the State of Illinois [applause], so recently at the head of the great bureau of the public lands.

I need not stand here, sir, to defend General Sparks. If any man of this period has established himself in the confidence of the people of this country for rugged integrity and firmness of character, of exalted devotion to the public service, that man is the late Commissioner of the General Land Office. [Renewed applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the sun in his course around this globe does not shine upon a man of purer heart, more sterling integrity, or of a higher sense of honor and duty than General Sparks, of Illinois. It is not necessary, sir, I repeat, to vindicate General Sparks. He is vindicated by all men who esteem high qualities and honorable and valuable public services.

And it was humiliating to this House to hear this gentleman, so long an honored member of this House, so recently filling with ability, unfaltering firmness, and unblemished character a high office of Government, whose great services are fresh in the memory of all men, denounced as leaving the public service with discredit—driven from the public service by the President of the United States.

He was not driven from the public service.

What were the facts communicated to the American people by the Chief Magistrate of the nation in this connection? That he parted with the services of General Sparks with reluctance and regret; with a high appreciation of the services he had rendered the people and the honor he had done the Administration. The only charge that ever has been or can be made against General Sparks as an officer of the Government, was that he was too strongly devoted to his duties and too intensely abhorred injustice and fraud.

Mr. Chairman, men from both sides of this Chamber, something unknown in our past experience in this body, and perhaps in the history of Congress, Democrats and Republicans as well, impressed with the high value of the services General Sparks had rendered to the country, urged that his resignation should not be accepted, notwithstanding the embarrassment which they realized arose from General Sparks's conflict of opinion, on questions of the administration of the land laws, with the head of the Department, and requested in the public interest alone that the people should have the benefit of his services.

Let another instance be found in our time in the history of this body where its members in appreciation of the service of a man who had served on this floor with distinguished honor and credit, both to his State and himself, impressed with the value of his services in public station under the Administration, had appealed, without regard to political differences, for his remaining in office, notwithstanding the embarrassment to the public service of a conflict of opinion between the head of a great bureau and the chief of the Department.

The condition of that, the greatest of the bureaus of the Government, the General Land Office, charged with the interests of our public domain, the existence of countless organized schemes of wealth and corporate power to rob the people and obtain by fraud the lands which should be their future homes, demanded the presence of such a man as General Sparks.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. I hope the Chair will recognize me, and I will yield my time to the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been the desire of the Chair to recognize gentlemen alternately on each side in this discussion.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yielded, in the first instance, my time to the gentleman from Nebraska.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has promised to recognize the gentleman from Iowa next.

Mr. WEAVER. If I can be recognized I will yield four minutes of the time to the gentleman from Indiana, as he is saying what I wanted to say better than I could.

Mr. LAIRD. I want to ask the House to extend the same courtesy to Judge HOLMAN that it extended to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been limited by order of the House.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I understood that this debate was given for the purpose of discussing the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I was coming to that in a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to divide the time as nearly equal as possible.

The Chair understands the gentleman from Iowa to yield four minutes of his time to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. WEAVER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I thank the gentleman from Iowa for this kindness.

Mr. Chairman, the whole country is well informed as to the circumstances under which General Sparks left the public service. A disagreement between himself and the chief of his Department rendered it impracticable for both to remain. General Sparks tendered his resignation, and under such circumstances the President was bound to consider the importance of harmony in the public service for the good of that service; and the President of the United States, with sincere regret, accepted that resignation. General Sparks left the service of the United States with the regrets of the whole people who loved honor and purity in public office, and with the regrets of the Chief Magistrate of the country. All coming time will appreciate the value of General Sparks's services and hold him in high esteem.

A word in regard to the amendment. I am surprised at the proposition of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MCSHANE].

I am surprised that when all men know the public lands, now nearly exhausted, have been made a prey to plunder on every hand; that when a brave, strong, manly, honest effort has been made and is still being made to secure to the people the portion of the once great public domain yet remaining, a policy should be tolerated that should embarrass the most searching inquiry into the extraordinary means now being employed to appropriate the public land in violation of law, thus actually encouraging it by the refusal of Congress to adopt any means to prevent and defeat the frauds well known to exist.

Was it a Democratic measure to reclaim the public lands sought to be taken from the public domain by fraud and in violation of law for the purpose of dishonest monopoly? We are not entitled wholly to that honor. Mr. McFarland, an honest and upright gentleman, the predecessor of General Sparks, appealed to Congress for $400,000 for the purpose of ferreting out these frauds and reclaiming these lands from the public plunderers.

General Sparks renewed that recommendation and request, and still but $100,000 was given. I call attention to one single instance of the countless number—the Redwood plunder scheme of the Scotch syndicate, by which the fraudulent entry of 60,000 acres of the most valuable timber land of Humboldt County, California, was secured and a trust created through American agents by a Scotch syndicate, no member of which was a citizen or resident of this country—60,000 acres valued at $11,000,000.

Is it possible Congress shall say for the purpose of defeating such frauds no reasonable sum shall be given from the public Treasury? Is it possible a body of gentlemen can go from New York by proxy, not in person, into the Territory of Wyoming and enter under your desert-land law 54,000 acres of land and turn it over to a syndicate, an absolute fraud, such as my friend from Iowa exposed last evening, and Congress refuse to inquire into the fact? Do you say no money shall be furnished to ferret out that fraud, defeat it, and secure those lands for the benefit of the people? Your public domain is almost exhausted.

Do gentlemen know that such is the desire of monopolists to reach through fraud what remains of your public domain, now so fearfully reduced in extent that last year alone the entries and filings in your land system reached the enormous proportion of 38,377,039 acres, more acres than the great State of Ohio, more than the great State of Illinois, entered and filed upon in a single year. Do gentlemen believe this is all honestly done?

The reports of McFarland and of Sparks inform you that a large percentage of lands that are entered are entered fraudulently; not to secure homesteads, but to secure land for the purpose of speculating, for the purpose of monopoly. And yet it is proposed that the most precious wealth of this country, lands for homes for your people, shall remain without protection, while fraudulent schemes on all sides assail it.

Sir, the public interests are aroused on this subject. They demand that every acre of this land that can be secured for homes shall be secured for homes, and that not one acre of it shall be appropriated for monopolies or speculation through fraudulent means, through which, according to the best information we have, millions upon millions of acres have been taken. Can Congress afford to neglect so important a public interest?

Mr. WEAVER. In the moment reserved to me I want to say that I hope this committee will make ample appropriation to enable the Interior Department to protect the residue of the public domain from fraudulent entries. I want to say one other thing in defense of the late Commissioner of the General Land Office, General Sparks, of Illinois. A more conscientious and able public servant never occupied that position. Very few have ever occupied any position in this Government who were abler than he. Not only that, but I want to say here that if this Administration has made a mistake it was in allowing General Sparks to retire from that bureau. With his magnificent courage and his incorruptible honesty he was fighting a continent of thieves almost unsupported, single-handed, and alone. [Applause on Democratic side.] That is what I believe about it. I want to say another thing, that there is not a land-grabber on this continent of America who will not indorse the speech the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] has made to this committee. [Applause.]

Mr. PETERS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas rise to speak in favor of the amendment?

Mr. PETERS. I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, no one can be so strong in the use of language as to displease me in the denunciation of all unlawful appropriation of the public domain. No one will go further than I will in supporting the integrity and honesty of Mr. Sparks, the late Commissioner. I have no fault to find with him as a man. I have no fault to find with his endeavors in trying to retain for the benefit of the public those portions of the public domain that have been sought to be monopolized by foreign syndicates, by cattle syndicates the world over. I am with him and with all those who commend him heart and soul.

But the difficulty with Mr. Sparks was not with the man, but the system that he used; the failure on his part to discriminate between sections which were given up for homestead and pre-emption and sections which were valuable only for cattle-pasturing or for the timber. That was the difficulty with Mr. Sparks. He placed the prairies of Kansas and Nebraska side by side with the large cattle ranches of Colorado, New Mexico, and Wyoming. He yoked the homesteaders and pre-emptors upon the lands of Kansas side by side with the men who attempted to defraud the public out of thousands of acres in Wyoming and in the Territories. In other words, he yoked the humble homesteaders who aimed to take possession of 160 acres of land in the same yoke and charged and branded them both equally with the foreign syndicates that came in here for the purpose of robbing our public domain of this land.

There is where I find fault with Mr. Sparks, and there is where I find fault with this infamous system of sending out detectives to go to the houses and the homesteads of pre-emptors upon the prairies of Kansas and Nebraska, and there seek to spy out something that will enable them to make a report that will sustain or cancel the entry of the homesteader or pre-emptor. I bid these detectives God-speed when they go out to search for the great land grabs that have been sought to be appropriated by the cattle syndicates and the foreign syndicates. Confine them exclusively to that field, where they can do effective work, and where they will not commit injustice and outrage against people who have gone out to settle honestly on the Western domain, and then I will have no complaint to make, and neither will the people whom I represent.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. PETERS. I have but five minutes. As to my own district I speak knowingly, because I have been a resident of that district for years; I have seen the first furrows plowed in every county in it, and there are thirty-six of them; I have held courts in eighteen of those counties; I have held the first courts in nine of them; I have represented the district here since the Forty-eighth Congress; so I know whereof I speak when I say that this system, while it may be applicable, perhaps, to Colorado and Wyoming and some of the other Territories, is not applicable to my district or to my State. There was a time—and I suppose that is what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] was going to refer to—when there were cattle syndicates in the southwestern portion of my district, but they have disappeared before the settlers as the snow disappears before the noonday sun. There is not a cattle syndicate now in any portion of my district unless it be the "syndicates" that are organized by the homesteaders who have gone in there in good faith and taken up their 160 acres of land each and have thrown their cattle together into large bodies in order that they may be taken care of and herded more economically.

Mr. SPRINGER. You have traveled through your district?

Mr. PETERS. Every part of it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Have you not traveled for miles and miles in that State without seeing a single homesteader's cottage, although every acre of the land had been taken for homesteads?

Mr. PETERS. I have not. Years ago that was the case, but there is not a county of the thirty-six that has now a less population than 4,000 people.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then the gentleman admits that formerly the land had been taken for homesteads, although no homesteader's cottages could be seen upon it.

Mr. PETERS. No, sir; I do not admit that it was taken by homesteaders. I admit that it was squatted upon by cattle syndicates.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MCSHANE] which is to reduce the appropriation under consideration from $100,000 to $50,000. In my judgment the amount should be increased $50,000 instead of being reduced that sum. The object of this appropriation is to protect the public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry. In other words, it is to furnish means to enable the Land Department of this Government to prevent what are called the cattle barons from absorbing and fencing in large portions of the domain of the people of the United States in the West, and also to prevent fraudulent homestead entries.

It was but a few years ago that the press of the country teemed with reports of the large area of the public domain in the West that was being fenced in by cattle syndicates without any warrant of law. The gentlemen from Nebraska, both of them who have addressed the committee, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] who has just taken his seat, all know that in their own States in 1884 and 1885 there were cattle companies, some of them foreign, that had fenced in without authority of law vast tracts of the public land.

I hold in my hand a statement of the extent to which this had been done. In Kansas there were whole counties fenced in and large areas in the counties of Kingman, Pratt, Barbour, Butler, Harper, Comanche, and Lane.

Mr. PETERS. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have only five minutes. It is true that in most of these cases, perhaps in all in the district of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS], these unlawful inclosures of the public domain have been done away with. We all remember the action taken by Congress to abolish the evil and the proclamation of the President following it, and the vigorous action of the Government has doubtless resulted in the tearing down or taking away the majority of these fences. But all of them have not disappeared. Many still remain.

I hold in my hand a statement of the General Land Office, showing the number of acres wrested from these cattle barons to be 3,591,179; but there are still cattle companies and firms, and also individuals in the West, occupying portions of the public domain without warrant of law or right. It is in order to ferret out these people and establish the fact that they have inclosed the public lands without authority of law that this expenditure of $100,000 is required. The amount recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office for this purpose is $200,000. The Committee on Appropriations gave only half that amount, yet now the gentleman from Nebraska proposes to reduce the committee's amount one-half, making the appropriation $50,000, instead of $100,000. The estimate of the Secretary of the Interior is $150,000, and that is the sum which should be appropriated. I can not, Mr. Chairman, better conclude my remarks than by quoting from the last report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office on this subject. I commend his language to the House.

He says:

Three years ago my predecessor recommended an appropriation of $100,000 to protect the public lands from unlawful and fraudulent appropriation. Since that period the need of such protection has increased with the intensified demand for public land holdings for monopolistic and speculative purposes. Yet Congress at the last session allowed but one-fourth of the sum regarded as requisite under the preceding administration of the Government.

Both Congress and the Executive, not less than political parties, annually assert an intention that the public lands shall be preserved for actual settlement. No public demand is greater than that land monopoly shall not be fostered by the Government. Yet at the vital point, where these words are to be put into action, Congress fails to place in the hands of the executive branch the means to redeem these public promises and to prevent the indiscriminate waste and misappropriation which has for years dishonored the public-land system, and through which great areas of lands needed for actual settlement pass into the hands of speculators, syndicates, and corporations.

The executive department of the Government is now faithfully endeavoring to enforce the laws and suppress the systematic frauds which threaten the unlawful absorption of the bulk of the remaining body of public lands, and to recover those which have been fraudulently seized and unlawfully absorbed. If the department is to be sustained in this effort, if the public domain is not to be handed over bodily to land-plunderers and their more or less prominent associates and allies, then appropriations more commensurate to the nature and extent of the work to be performed than have heretofore been allowed should be supplied. I have estimated for $200,000 for the ensuing year.

Plainly speaking, this is not nearly the sum that is really needed or could advantageously be expended for the preservation of public lands for settlement purposes and to the great saving of valuable public property in coal and other special classes of lands. Any less appropriation than that asked for would be wastefulness of the inestimable treasure of the public domain for a penny saving in the taking care of it. Property worth a thousand millions at some nominal cash price can not be protected at the same expense as property worth a hundredth of that sum. The appropriations heretofore made appear to have been based upon little or no estimate of the value of the property, the extent of territory covered, the widespread persistence and enormous magnitude of fraudulent claims, nor the shrewd, unscrupulous character of the vast moneyed and other influences of the despoilers.

Public land is already scarce in the public-land States and Territories, not because there are no considerable bodies of land still belonging to the Government, but because of wholesale seizures and fraudulent dominion which bar out settlers and home seekers, or lay the tribute of speculative prices for the relinquishment of speculative claims. Much of this can be prevented, and much valuable land now unlawfully held or dominated can be recovered to the legitimate uses of the people if Congress furnishes the means to enforce the laws and stay their violation.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, it is true that there have been frauds perpetrated on the public domain, and I have always been an advocate of every measure that would tend to secure a home for somebody upon every quarter section of land in the country.

I would do nothing that would take away from any one a home upon a quarter section of the public domain. But, sir, five years ago it was ascertained that cattle syndicates were fencing in the public domain where there was no settlement, that other syndicates were fraudulently entering the public lands and appropriating them to their own use. The lands thus occupied were always in large bodies, and were such lands as would attract the attention of those desiring to make settlement. Those were always notorious cases, the facts being easily ascertained, so that very little detective work was required. Congress then provided by law for this system, and appropriated $75,000 to enable the Department to send out agents to ascertain the real circumstances in the class of cases to which I have referred. That system has been followed up year by year. The second year we appropriated $90,000, the next year $90,000, for the current year $100,000.

Now there is not a solitary case where there has been a misappropriation of the public domain in large bodies that has not long since come to the notice of the Department. The only office now performed by these agents who are sent abroad over the country is to hunt out some irregularities in the entries which have been made by settlers, and report them to the Department, so as to have a settlement or adjustment of the settlers' claims arrested, and the entry possibly canceled on account of such irregularities, thus frequently expelling from his home a man who has in good faith made settlement, and perhaps putting in his place another who had incited the action of the agent against the settler.

In the State of Kansas to-day, I verily believe, no just complaint can be made that frauds against public land laws exist, although some settlers upon the public domain may have unintentionally committed some irregularities in making their entries. Complaints from this class come daily against this pernicious spy system. What is the result? One of these agents goes into a settlement, and from some one obtains information that is supposed to disclose an irregularity of some kind in the making of an entry. That irregularity is reported, and the settler is notified that he must defend his home. What is the effect? The whole neighborhood is thrown into consternation; a cloud is cast upon the settlers' titles in all that section of country. The result is that the settlers stand there constantly menaced with the danger of losing their homes, and the result is a general paralysis. Some of these settlers have been there for ten years; they hold what is known as the certificate of payment, upon which transfers have been accustomed to be made throughout the Western country. In many cases upon such transfers others have succeeded to the homes of the original settlers. These agents having gone around and found irregularities in cases where the land has been occupied for a period of several years, the settler is either subjected to enormous expense in defending his home or is compelled to lose it altogether.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the remarks of the gentleman from Arkansas, or the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MCSHANE], who occupied the floor before I came into the Hall. I did hear a portion of the remarks of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD], who last spoke, and I sought the floor immediately after he had taken his seat for the purpose of uttering some words in defense of the policy of the present Administration in regard to the public lands, and of refuting the insinuations which the gentleman has cast upon the character and services of General Sparks. The gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Iowa have, however, said perhaps all that is needed in defense either of the policy of the Administration or of General Sparks.

It is true, as has been said by the gentleman from Indiana, that no defense is needed of the course pursued by General Sparks in his administration of the Land Office. The record of his action there refutes every imputation upon his ability, fidelity, and honor. But, sir, while on the floor I may say that he is a constituent of mine and I have had knowledge of him for thirty years; through that period he has occupied various public positions, and in all of them he has proven himself to be the possessor of incorruptible honesty and unflinching courage in the discharge of public duty.

What has General Sparks done? When he was placed in charge of the Land Office he simply endeavored to faithfully enforce the policy of the new President. When Grover Cleveland came into office he inaugurated a new land policy—the policy of the party which elected him.

Mr. LAIRD. What do you say in regard to that officer's suspension of the homestead and pre-emption laws?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman must not interrupt me now. I have only five minutes, and no time to go into details.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, during the period the Republican party was in power nearly 200,000,000 acres were given away to corporations. These were lands which belonged to the people, and should have been reserved as homes for actual settlers. One of the reasons why the people placed Grover Cleveland in the White House was that he might redeem the pledges of the Democratic party as declared in its platform, and reclaim the lands which had been stolen from the people. He faithfully entered upon the discharge of the duty which the people had assigned him. He selected as Commissioner of the General Land Office one who was noted for his sterling integrity and courage in the performance of public duty. While in that office General Sparks simply endeavored to carry out the will of the President and the will of the people. The only accusation that is made against him by his enemies is that he was overzealous in the performance of his public duty. Sir, he should be proud of such a charge. No higher compliment can be paid to a public man than that he is free from every charge except that of extra zeal in behalf of the public interest.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] has said that Mr. Sparks was ejected from his office by the President. There is not a scintilla of evidence or fact upon which to base that charge.

The letter which the President sent to that officer when accepting his resignation testified in strong terms of his ability and rugged integrity. The President paid him one of the highest compliments which ever came from a President to a subordinate officer. Mr. Sparks was not removed from office, he resigned of his own will.

What was the condition of affairs when General Sparks went into the General Land Office? It has been stated by a distinguished Republican member of Congress, my colleague from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], in the debate on this floor:

> Take the reports of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the last four years and you can hardly find a page that is not bristling with accounts of fraudulent and fictitious entries——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. Five minutes remain in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I should like to have two or three minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. That can not be done, as there are only five minutes remaining in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. MCSHANE. How many minutes remain in favor of the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. There are five minutes remaining in opposition to the amendment, and fifteen minutes in support of it.

Mr. MCSHANE. If no other gentleman desires to speak in favor of the amendment, I will yield five minutes of that time, if there be no objection, to the gentleman from Illinois to conclude his remarks.

Mr. PETERS. I would like to have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Illinois occupying five minutes longer out of the fifteen minutes remaining in favor of the amendment?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, when interrupted I was reading from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD some remarks made by my distinguished colleague [Mr. PAYSON] June 7, 1886.

He then said:

> Take the reports of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the last four years and you can hardly find a page that is not bristling with accounts of fraudulent and fictitious entries, sometimes amounting to 30,000, 40,000, or even as high as half a million acres in inclosures based on these fraudulent entries. I have papers in my desk covering cases where at least a half million acres have been taken under fictitious entries.

I have no time to go into the details of the many iniquitous frauds which have been practiced under previous administrations of the General Land Office. I do not say who was responsible for the frauds; I only say now they existed, and a strong hand was needed to stop them. The new President, his Secretary of the Interior, and Commissioner of the General Land Office set themselves faithfully to the task of preventing further frauds and reclaiming lands obtained under fraudulent pretenses. And well have they discharged that solemn duty.

Sir, one of the grandest of the many great achievements of reform by the present Administration is that which it has accomplished in reclaiming the lost homes of the people and protecting them from further spoliation. As I have already said, nearly 200,000,000 acres were taken from the homes of the people and donated to corporations under Republican administrations, not one single acre of which was reclaimed or attempted to be reclaimed under any of the preceding Republican administrations.

Now, what has been done since the Democratic party came into power here and in the White House? What have we done in redemption of our pledges? I have official data to show that during the last three years the Democratic Administration has restored over 80,000,000 acres of lands to the public domain; and, in addition to that vast area, the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office have recommended further reclamations to the extent of over 65,000,000 of acres, showing as the grand total result of Democratic policy in this regard, when fully carried into effect, restoring over 145,000,000 acres of the nearly 200,000,000 of acres taken from the public domain by improper legislation.

I desire to call attention to the following table, containing a recapitulation of statement showing the quantity of land actually restored to the public domain, and of land recommended for recovery by the action of the General Land Office and Secretary of the Interior from March 4, 1885, to May 12, 1888:

	Acreage.	Total acreage restored.
LAND ACTUALLY RESTORED TO THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.
Lands in granted railroad limits restored	2,108,417.33
Forfeiture of railroad grants under acts of Congress	28,253,347.00
Railroad indemnity lands restored	21,323,600.00
Private land claims, withdrawn lands restored	576,000.00
Entries under pre-emption, homestead, timber-culture, desert, mineral, and timber-land laws canceled in regular course of examination and proceedings in General Land Office for abandonment, illegality, and other causes	27,400,608.74
Invalid State selections (internal improvements and swamp)	968,747.52
Total actually restored to the public domain and opened to entry and settlement		80,630,720.59
RECOVERY OF LANDS RECOMMENDED.
Land within railroad grants recommended for recovery:
Recovery of land recommended and pending for review of Secretary	12,300.00
Recovery of land recommended and pending on appeal before the Secretary	1,500,000.00
Suits recommended for the recovery of land	818,687.18
Railroad forfeitures under bills now before Congress	*51,323,995.00
Private land claims:
Recommendations to Congress to reject claims heretofore favorably reported	4,732,480.15
Resurveys ordered reducing areas of claims	629,500.00
Suits recommended to vacate patents	635,255.00
		63,652,218.33
Lands forfeited in Oregon and recommended for recovery under grants for military wagon-roads		2,368,339.00
Grand total actually restored to the public domain and recommended for recovery		145,711,258.92

*Under the bill which recently passed the Senate the quantity of land forfeited will equal 5,627,436 acres; but the aggregate quantity forfeited under the bills of the two Houses, if adopted, will equal 51,323,995 acres as above.

I have nothing further to say but to thank the House for the extension of my time.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of indifference to me what the gentleman may think of a question not at issue, namely, Mr. Sparks. I have no malice toward the official dead.

But since gentlemen on that side wish to drag the name of the defunct Commissioner into the debate I certainly have no objections. I had no respect for him in office and none out; he was oppression incarnate to the West; with a bigoted madness which you confuse with virtue, he struck down the rights of millions of toiling men and drove other millions of half-starved and half-clothed women and children out from the shadow of miserable homes, scarcely better than those of the beasts of the field, but still their all. He not only did this, but he led a conspiracy against the destinies of the yet unborn Dakotas, Montanas, and Wyomings. If you love him for what makes him abhorrent to the settlers of the West, do so; let even the devil have his due.

Sparks suspended all the claims in the Western country, and suspended them without authority of law. I charged it here, and I repeat it now, and I challenge contradiction of the statement, that he did it without authority of law and upon perjured testimony and subornation of perjury of these special agents, hirelings of the Government, and instituted by himself.

That was the policy which was pursued so unhappily and so oppressively to my own part of the country and my own people.

But the gentleman says there is not a land-robber who will not applaud the remarks that I made. Even so, because the land-robber not yet morally dead can appreciate the distinction between justice and injustice. But let me tell the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] this, that there is not a homesteader west of the Missouri River who will not approve of what I have said, not a toiler who is eking out his miserable existence in the tedious battle day by day with the sod and the sun but what thanked God when this Herod of the Land Office, whose spies were hunting the innocent and the guilty alike, was sacrificed by a long-suffering Administration, which at last, in very self-defense, removed this appalling menace to the rights of the people and its own perpetuity.

I repeat, not a homesteader engaged in the honest effort to hold a claim but what took new hope from his political demise, and who will now applaud what you provoke me to say. And this is true regardless of party. Sparks's career began and ended in suspension. He suspended the claims, the laws, and was himself suspended. After the suspension of all the claims, which order was revoked by the Secretary—and the Secretary was rewarded by having a place on the wool-sack, and he might have had the golden fleece—after suspending the claims he suspended the laws, and after suspending the claims and the laws he was finally suspended, by the gentleman at the head of the Government, himself.

And now, in the estimation of my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], he is sanctified and glorified, and if so, political death was a good thing for him.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. He was not suspended; he resigned.

Mr. LAIRD. Resigned! Well, perhaps he was resigned, but I doubt it, and if so, he had to be.

I want to say to the House, outside of all this political rot about Sparks——

Mr. SPRINGER. That is right.

Mr. LAIRD. That is, in behalf of Sparks——

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, that is another question.

Mr. LAIRD. That the reason why, in the agricultural regions affected by this system, there is no possible need for surveillance is to be found in this fact: There are, for example, a thousand claims in a county, each one of which when it passes from the Government into the inchoate title under the guaranty of the receiver's receipt being worth from $500 to $1,000. For every thousand claims covered by such titles there are from five to ten thousand seekers, and if there is a flaw in the title the man who has possession, if he has not made a careful compliance with the law, if he has not plowed, if he has not made improvements, if he has not built a house, if you please, and if his occupancy has not been in accordance with the law, there are a hundred men to point out the defect and prove it in a contest.

The contestant can go to the Land Office, contest the title as against the man who holds the land, and take it from him by due process of law on showing the facts; and the rights of the people are thereby protected against the interest of those who hold the title illegally by contests instituted by those who are seeking to obtain honest title to the public domain. All these harangues, therefore, about monopolies and about cattle syndicates operating on the public domain, and all that sort of thing, are, as a matter of fact, the merest humbug so far as Nebraska, Kansas, and most of Colorado is concerned. There are no cattle syndicates in Nebraska and Kansas, nor are there many in the country east of the Rocky Mountains—in Colorado.

The cattle business many years ago struck the high-water mark when the rain-fall passed hundreds of miles into the interior; when buffalo grass gave way and was supplanted by the blue joint, which is not of the character required for grazing purposes. That condition of things brought about many changes. The ranches are abandoned and owned by settlers; the cattle have gone to New Mexico and Arizona and to the other Territories; and under the operation of natural causes the great herds will soon exist only in history.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McSHANE. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I take the floor simply to call attention to an instance which appears in a paper published in my district showing the operation of this system of detectives in a homestead State. This paper says, and I desire to call the special attention of the committee to it:

We had a case come to our observation the other day. It is that of a lady in the south part of this county, who, coming to this county when the best claims had been taken, bought a piece of land from the pre-emptor, and up to date has paid out for purchase money and improvements the sum of $850. The other day, three years after proof had been made, she received a letter from Rowe citing her to appear before him at Larned in four days from the time she received the letter with witnesses, to convince him that he ought not to report the land for cancellation. This lady belongs to the noble army of Kansas school ma'ams, and is struggling heroically with the hardships of this year. It is a case of special hardship, but is only one in many that this man has selected for interference.

Now, that will instance one of a good many similar cases that take place in that country. Here is the case of this lady who went and purchased the right from the pre-empter when he had proved up and obtained his final certificates from the land office. There was a guaranty given by authority of the land officer that this man had complied with all of the provisions of the law. She goes out, pays for this land, and gets his right, and then three years from the time that she proved up and paid out her money, going on all the time making these improvements, she gets a notice from this land detective, giving her four days in which to go back three years, look up the witnesses that proved up for the pre-emptor from whom she bought, and get those witnesses to the land office 75 miles away, in order to convince him the former pre-emptor had complied with the law.

A MEMBER. Suppose she did not do it?

Mr. PETERS. In that case her title would have been canceled and all the money she paid to the pre-emptor and all the money she paid for improvements, $850, which this poor woman had made by schoolteaching and by hard work, would have been frittered away and would have gone into the coffers of the Government; it would simply have been stolen from her, because some man had the impudence to go down and complain to the detective that the person she bought from three or four years ago had not complied with the law.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McSHANE. In offering the amendment to this paragraph and in any remarks I made in support of the amendment I do not recall that in any manner I cast any reflection upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office or the management of the General Land Office so far as the administration of that office is concerned. That was far from my mind, but the action and procedure of the special agents in the field is what I object to. In providing the necessary funds to enable the General Land Office to detect frauds and prosecute fraudulent entries I will go as far as any gentleman on this floor.

But I say here that the special agents of the General Land Office in the field do not confine themselves to the fraudulent entries on the public lands, but rather, in my section especially, to the prevention of honest homesteaders from securing titles to their claims. This is what I object to. I believe $50,000 is amply sufficient to provide the necessary special agents for the detection of fraudulent entries by cattle syndicates, or any other syndicates, either foreign or domestic, in their fraudulent land entries. Hence, it is not necessary that we should appropriate $50,000 additional for the purpose, as I have named, of persecuting honest homesteaders in the agricultural States of Nebraska and Kansas.

I say that this money has been to a certain degree squandered, and I say further that this fraud has not been perpetrated by Democratic officials or special agents, but in most cases by Republican special agents who have held over from preceding administrations.

Mr. LAIRD. Put them out.

Mr. McSHANE. Some of them have been put out.

Mr. LAIRD. Put the rest out.

Mr. McSHANE. I say that those special agents have carried on this process of the persecution of honest homesteaders to an extent working great hardship and inconvenience to those poor people who have undergone the hardships and sacrifices of frontier life to the end that they might secure homes for themselves and their children.

I have knowledge of cases where the special agents have expended $1,800 in an endeavor to procure testimony that would defeat the claim of a settler. After expending this amount of money they found the title of the settler complete as it was possible to make it; that he had in every particular complied with the law. Even after expending this amount of money the special agent made request of the General Land Office for $1,200 more to continue the prosecution and the gathering of testimony against this settler. That would make $3,000 expended in prosecuting one case.

After spending the $1,800 and finding nothing, he suspended the case until he could get $1,200 more.

This is a matter I am opposed to. Those are the proceedings to which I am opposed to appropriate money to continue. But so far as the honest prosecution of fraudulent land entries, whether they are made by individuals, cattle syndicates, or any other syndicates is concerned, I will go as far as any gentleman in appropriating the necessary funds.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations made an exhaustive investigation, and amid conflicting statements on the one hand that frauds were practiced in the expenditure of the money and that the money was dishonestly gotten rid of, and on the other th t this appropriation was essential to the recovery of the land disposed of under fraudulent and illegal entries, we reached the conclusion to give the same amount this year we did last year, $100,000. There is nobody but what advises the expenditure of this money for the breaking up of illegal and fraudulent entries. If this money was expended improperly then the responsibility rests with the administrators of the law not with Congress. We give the amount necessary, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office and those under him had better see that the money is honestly expended, rather than indulge in such flippant utterances as that Congress is keeping the Land Office on a starvation basis. There is plenty of time for the officials to look after the integrity of the expenditure of this money instead of taking the trouble to reflect upon the acts of those here in a representative capacity. I hope, therefore, the judgment of the committee in giving $100,000 will be adhered to, and that no amendment to increase or decrease it will be adopted.

Now, a single word in conclusion as to General Sparks. I sat here many years with General Sparks and learned to know that he was a man of the strictest integrity, and in his public career quite beyond temptation; and I realize the fact, as many others do here and elsewhere, that his removal was a public misfortune.

Mr. HOLMAN. His resignation.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand resignations enforced and I understand removals; and I think I applied the proper term when I said he was removed. But I do not think he was removed by the wish of the President of the United States. The responsibility rests in that connection elsewhere. Perhaps there was a sort of general co operation or machination on the part of those who were interested in the omission of the execution of the law.

That was the trouble with Mr. Sparks, and in my judgment he can stand before his country as a publ.c official against the utterances of any man. I believe that his public career is without blot or blemish. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now I ask for a vote.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Has the committee voted to limit discussion upon this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. There was a limit fixed and that limit has been reached.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I was desirous of speaking a few minutes upon this amendment, not against it nor in favor of it, but to correct a matter of history which has been brought into the discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is exhausted. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MCSHANE].

The amendment of Mr. MCSHANE, reducing the appropriation from $100,000 to $50,000, was again read.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 54.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, is there an amendment to that paragraph pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is not.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "hundred," in the twenty-fourth line, the words "and fifty;" so as to make the appropriation $150,000. That is the amount recommended by the Department.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty" and inserting "twenty-five."

Mr. RANDALL. The committee recommend the same amount as last year.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. TOWNSHEND to the amendment of Mr. STONE, of Missouri, and it was rejected—ayes 8, noes 49.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I rise to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that debate is exhausted upon the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio on the next paragraph if he desires.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. If the committee are willing to increase the amount $25,000 I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. LAIRD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That the reports of the special agents made pursuant hereto shall be open to public inspection, and parties interested in the good faith of the entries attacked shall be entitled to a copy of any report affecting such entry upon application.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that that is new legislation. I think it is very safe to trust this matter with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who has been cordially indorsed by both sides of the House.

Mr. LAIRD. I make the suggestion that on the information furnished by these reports of special agents the judicial rights of entrymen are affected, and consequently the reports ought to be open to inspection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair knows of no law which authorizes the action proposed by the amendment. The Chair therefore thinks the amendment is subject to the point of order, and the point is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Settlement of claims for swamp-land and swamp-land indemnity: For salaries and expenses of agents employed in adjusting claims for swamp-lands, and for indemnity for swamp-lands, $20,000: Provided, That agents and others employed under this and the appropriations for "Depredation on public timber" and "Protecting public lands," while traveling on duty, shall be allowed per diem, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day, and for actual necessary expenses for transportation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make a motion to amend this paragraph. It is very seldom that I submit a motion to increase the amount of an appropriation, but I think that the Committee on Appropriations, in view of the condition of this branch of the service, ought to permit a slight increase in the amount. It is very important to the swamp-land States, as well as to the General Land Office, that the selection of swamp lands shall be completed at as early a day as possible.

Mr. RYAN. Does not your proposition exceed the estimates?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not looked at the estimates, but I presume not.

Mr. RANDALL. The annual appropriation for this purpose has been for many years the amount fixed in this bill, and that has also been the amount of the estimate for many years.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, if that is the estimate, I shall not press my amendment; but at the same time I am satisfied from my knowledge of this matter, with which I have become familiar of late, that the Commissioner of the General Land Office makes a mistake. I think that the examination of these swamp lands ought to be concluded at the earliest possible moment for many reasons; but inasmuch as the Commissioner has not suggested any larger sum than is appropriated here, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I have heard to-day in the discussion of a previous proposed amendment, and frequently at other times in the House, statements concerning the granting of public lands to corporations, which I wish to correct.

It has been assumed that the Republicans initiated the policy of such grants, and that the Democrats initiated the policy of forfeiting such grants so far as they were unearned. Both these assumptions are unfounded. The Democratic party, between 1851 and 1860, before the Republicans came into power, granted to railroad corporations, as I now remember, some 42,000,000 acres of the public domain.

The Republicans in the Forty-seventh Congress, through their Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill relating to the grant to the Ontonagon and Brulé River Railroad under an act of Congress passed in 1856, it being one of the most objectionable of all the grants. I reported the bill myself from that committee. I presented it to the House under the suspension of the rules, and it failed, members on both sides of the House voting against it.

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I do not yield. Five minutes do not afford me more than sufficient time to say what I desire to say.

I think my statement correct, and according to my recollection, though I may be mistaken, that was the beginning of the attempt to forfeit land grants. I remember no earlier case. The principle on which forfeitures of land grants might and should be made was fixed by the Forty-seventh Congress, which was Republican.

The fact is that granting lands to aid railroads was at no time a party measure, nor has the forfeiture of such grants since become a party measure.

We see now that such grants were carried too far, and that they were unwise, as well as vicious in principle.

I say that in view of the circumstances the indiscriminate condemnation of those grants is an indiscriminate condemnation of all parties. When the occasion arose for the people to see that a change of policy was necessary, men of all parties went forward jointly to redeem, as far as possible, and restore to the public domain the lands which, having been granted for railroad purposes, were subject to forfeiture. No political capital should be claimed in this matter on either side; for surely none justly belongs to either party. The Democratic party gave away 40,000,000 acres of the public land in the beginning—the best of all the lands we have ever had.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say a few words by way of reply in part to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR]. If I remember rightly, all the lands granted for the purposes referred to prior to the advent of the Republican party to the political control of the country did not exceed 30,000,000 acres, and all of that land, I think, with scarcely any exception, was granted to the States.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Not a single acre was ever granted to any corporation by the Democratic party.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me——

Mr. RANDALL. I can not yield now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania declines to yield.

Mr. RANDALL. In respect to those grants made before the advent of the Republican party to power, the responsibility for the objects to which the land was devoted was with the States, not with the Federal Government or any branch of it. I wish to say further, that when the Democratic party came into power in the Forty-fourth Congress there ceased to be any land grants to corporations.

Mr. RYAN. I want to ask——

Mr. RANDALL. I can not yield. During the period of Republican ascendency there was granted to a single corporation, the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, 50,000,000 acres of the public lands—20,000,000 acres more than had been granted in all directions prior to the advent of the Republican party to power. I desire to say, to the honor of those in control on the Democratic side of this House, that after that party came into power in the Forty-fourth Congress not an acre of the public domain was ever given to any corporation whatever. We completely reversed the policy which had prevailed under the rule of our political opponents; we gave no land to corporations, but did all that we could to dedicate every available acre of the public domain to the use of actual settlers for homesteads. This is the truth of history; it can not be controverted. On this record the Democratic party can fairly stand and demand the approval of the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, the richest land grant ever made by Congress was a land grant nearly 600 miles long through the State of Illinois, through the richest portion of all the public domain. This grant, which was made to the State of Illinois for the purpose of constructing railways, was through a country every portion of which contained settlers, a section of country where private interests were already constructing railroads, a section of country bounded on the south and west by navigable rivers covered with steamers; a section of country through the center of which passed a navigable river covered with steamers and connected with the Great Lakes by a canal; and on the northern border of this section of country were the Great Lakes. That was Democratic land-grant on which was made the reputation of one of the greatest Democrats who ever lived, Stephen A. Douglas.

When you talk about the number of acres embraced in land grants, it is to be remembered that there is a difference between acres in a settled country worth twenty, thirty, or forty dollars an acre, and acres in the desert which without a public grant to encourage settlement would not be settled for five hundred years. These land grants which penetrated the far West made possible the settlement of that Western country. Beyond the pathway of the pioneer, beyond river navigation, beyond the possibility of settlement without public encouragement, beyond the possibility of the construction of railroads by private enterprise, these later land grants pushed the construction of railways and built up homes for the people and empires as a part of this Union. This was a wise policy. It connected the two great oceans which bound our country. It has made of Dakota a magnificent Territory of 600,000 people. It built up the State of Kansas, the State of Nebraska, the State of Colorado.

By and by lands became more valuable, because settlement had made it possible for private enterprise to build other railroads. The time came to change the policy of the Government and to reclaim whatever portion of these land grants had been abandoned or had not been earned according to the terms of the charters. Largely your reclamations were reclamations of old grants made prior to 1860—grants long ago abandoned so far as concerned the purposes for which the grants had been made.

Let us treat this thing honestly and fairly. In this House there has been on either side scarcely a lisp of opposition to the forfeiture of these land grants. Such measures of forfeiture have in general gone through without opposition from anybody, because the land grants have been abandoned. So far as these reclamations in general were concerned, they might have been made in a single joint resolution without discussion. The one down in Louisiana, granted in the far-off days of Democratic control, has always met with Democratic opposition, and is still unforfeited, without a shovelful of dirt having ever been turned along the whole line of that grant.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, it is strictly true, as said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], that under Democratic administrations and Democratic Congresses not one single acre of the public domain has been voted directly to corporations. Not one single acre. The only grants ever made by a Democratic Congress or signed by a Democratic President were grants to States for internal improvements or for educational purposes.

The grant my colleague speaks of to the State of Illinois, which became the property of the Illinois Central Railroad, is the best illustration of the manner in which the two different parties have made grants of the public domain. What was the condition on which was based the grant to the State of Illinois for the benefit of the Illinois Central Railroad? It was provided in the grant that that corporation should forever pay into the State treasury 7 per cent. of its gross earnings.

Mr. ROWELL rose, but the Chairman's gavel rapping him to order prevented his being heard.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Do not interrupt me now. I desire to make this assertion here now that the State of Illinois is free from bonded debt, and if that State was administered by an economic Democratic administration the 7 per cent. of the gross earnings of the Illinois Central Railroad which goes annually into the State treasury would pay every dollar of the ordinary expenses of the State government. Yet the people of the State of Illinois, under extravagant Republican administration, without a dollar of State debt, are paying 53 cents on the $100 of taxable assessment for State taxes, which is twice the sum paid in some States burdened with enormous State debts.

Mr. ROWELL rose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will not be interrupted. I wish to call special attention to the fact that lands voted by the Democratic Congress prior to the war to the State of Illinois, and indirectly to the Illinois Central Railroad Company, were given on the condition that the railroad company, so long as the charter exists, is compelled to pay into the State treasury 7 per cent. of its gross earnings. If the Republican Congresses had imposed the same conditions on these Pacific railroads when the immense grants were made to them, they would have been compelled to pay a sufficient sum to free the country from the national debt; that is, if they had been compelled, as a compensation for the lands, to pay 7 per cent. into the Treasury of their gross earnings, as was required by a Democratic Congress before the Illinois Central Railroad Company could enjoy its grant.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I withdraw the formal amendment to strike out the last word and now move to strike out the last two words.

The remark of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] that the Illinois Central Railroad Company had to pay 7 per cent. of its hard earnings is good. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I said "gross earnings." [Laughter.]

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. No, the gentleman said "hard earnings." There are some members of the Democratic party who can crawl into or out of a small hole, but they can not crawl out of the distinction between the grants to States and the grants to railroad companies. The grants in 1856 simply made the State the agent, it being a naked trustee, and had no more duties than were exacted of naked trustees with title in other cases, and was bound to convey the lands to any railroad company claiming under the grant. There was no condition of internal State improvements. There was no condition of education.

I am speaking of the nature of most of the grants, and particularly of those made in 1856, when the States became naked trustees and were bound to give the lands to any corporation on its proving that so many miles of railroad had been completed. They did in that way indirectly what others did directly, but in effect it was a grant to corporations by Congress, and intended to be so, and there is no distinction between one and the other.

Again, it has been stated over and over again that the Democratic party has done all that has been done in the matter ever since. With a Republican Senate joining in every act of legislation the Democratic House seems to claim the whole credit. I have stated before, as I say now, an honest man should not undertake to make any political capital for party purposes in regard to original grants or the forfeiture of those grants. I believe an honest man, on reflection, will not attempt it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, it is very seldom that I refer to a subject on this floor from a partisan standpoint; but I feel, I think, justified in suggesting to gentlemen on the other side of the House that they misapprehend even recent history in regard to the land-grants and the relation of each of the two great parties to them.

The Democratic party obtained in the election of 1874 control of the Forty-fourth Congress and for the first time in many years this House was under Democratic rule. That election occurred, so to speak, on the heels of one of the great land grants made by the Republican party, the Texas Pacific. Now what occurred? The very moment the Democrats took control of this Hall I believe the very first resolution submitted was one declaring that that policy of land grants should cease; and my friends will bear another fact in mind, that that proposition had been submitted twice before, and was defeated in a Republican Congress on a yea-and-nay vote; and more singular still, in view of what has been said during the course of the debate this afternoon, on both the former occasions to which I have referred the vote was in a large degree partisan. It was not, however, when the subject was voted upon at the opening of the Forty-fourth Congress.

What is the history of this matter? Prior to 1861 19,000,000 acres of land had been granted, the largest grant being 3,500,000 acres in one body; the grants running up in the aggregate to the neighborhood of 180,000,000 acres between 1861 and 1873. The first step, then, to meet this was the declaration on the part of this House in the opening of the Forty-fourth Congress that that policy should cease. During the Forty-seventh Congress every land grant had expired, the last on the 4th of July, 1882. Pending that expiration bills were prepared and ready for introduction to declare a forfeiture of the entire unearned lands, and in addition thereto to declare the forfeiture of the Northern Pacific land grant specifically.

Every effort to bring one of these measures before the House from the termination of these grants in the Forty-seventh Congress up to the expiration of that Congress absolutely failed, and one of the most interesting contentions that I have ever witnessed on this floor was the attempt to get a vote in some shape or form upon the report submitted with regard to the forfeiture of the Northern Pacific land grant, then amounting to something over 27,000,000 acres, and subject to forfeiture from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean. But every effort to secure even a vote upon it, or upon any incidental question relating to it, was voted down and defeated by our friends upon the other side of the House and by arbitrary rulings of the Speaker.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And amongst them was the gentleman from Ohio himself.

Mr. HOLMAN. What was the next step? The very moment that the Democratic party assumed control of this House, the very first measure passed, the very first resolution adopted after the reassembling of Congress on the 21st day of January, 1884, was to declare the sense of this House that all these grants which had not then been earned should be declared forfeited. The subject was taken from the Judiciary Committee, and also from the Pacific Railroad Committee, and, concentrating all these measures in the one committee of the House so as to give efficiency to its action, the House authorized that Committee on the Public Lands to take control of the matter, with the privilege of reporting at any time, and at the same time giving to its bills a priority to those of all the other committees and all other measures except appropriation bills and measures relating to the finances.

These are the facts, Mr. Chairman, which will be borne out by the investigation of the history of our land legislation. I must insist that the most striking commentary is found in the fact that this side of the House could not obtain, notwithstanding every effort made to secure action upon the forfeiture of some of these grants during the Forty-seventh Congress, a moment for the consideration of forfeiture bills while from the very opening of the Forty-eighth Congress they were given priority of consideration, and as a result of that 50,000,000 acres have been restored to the public domain.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will assume the pro forma amendment of the gentleman to be withdrawn in the absence of objection.

Mr. ROWELL. I renew it.

Mr. Chairman, it is an admitted fact that in this country the Democratic party has claimed as a cardinal doctrine until these modern times opposition to internal improvements. Their practices have always been, as usual, in opposition to their professions, and they have done about as much in granting away the public domain as they could do while in power, because they reached out just as fast as settlements reached, while the Republican party reached beyond. That is the only difference.

But I want to call the attention of my friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] to some little mistakes that he makes. The Democratic party controlled the State of Illinois from 1819 to 1856, and had engaged in a system of public improvements that absolutely bankrupted the young State and drove emigration around it. When our party came into power in 1856—and thank God they have held executive power from that day to this—they found the State loaded down with debt. To-day it owes not a dollar. To-day it has institutions for the care of its insane, deaf and dumb asylums, blind asylums, feeble-minded children asylums, soldiers' homes, and soldiers' orphans' homes, and not a dollar of debt. Twice in recent history it was our misfortune to get a Haines Democratic Legislature, and each time they transferred a million of dollars of indebtedness to a Republican successor to be provided for.

And now my colleague speaks of that levy of 53 cents on the hundred dollars to support all these magnificent institutions, forgetting that property is assessed at only about 25 cents on the hundred dollars, forgetting that we support our public schools in part by State taxation, making the levy according to property and distributing the sum collected over the State according to population, instead of by local taxation; forgetting that in all its history Illinois has never had but one disgrace in the shape of a thief in a State office, and that was the embezzler who for the last time held the place of governor by the grace of the Democratic party. My colleague speaks of the 7 per cent. of the gross earnings of the Illinois Central Railway paid to the State in lieu of all taxes. That is by virtue of an act of the Legislature of Illinois in the first place, and by virtue of a constitution made in 1870 in the second place. Congress had nothing to do with it, nothing in the world. Illinois is not a very good example to refer to for the failure of Republican legislation. No State, East or West, North or South, has so proud a record in its financial management; so proud a record in its care for its unfortunates; so proud a record in its care for its soldiers and soldiers' orphans; so proud a record in all the financial management of the State; so small a burden of taxation throughout the State. Go where you please and where else can you find an average taxation on $8,000 worth of land at $26 a year? Where else can you find it, including State, municipal, and all kinds of taxes? That in my own district, except in some towns burdened with local debts, is a fair average amount on 160 acres worth $8,000. Let any Democratic State show such a record.

Mr. MCADOO was recognized.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment, to make a suggestion?

Mr. MCADOO. I can not yield, as I have only five minutes.

Mr. Chairman, we challenge a contrast between the policy of the Democratic party and that of its political opponent on the question of the public lands. There is no prouder and brighter page in the history of this great political organization than its defense of the public domain. There is no blacker page in the history of the United States and of the Republican party than the way it has managed the lands of the people. The Democratic party has been for the people, the Republican party against them. It has often been said by our political opponents that although they gave away a great deal of the public domain to railroads, these enormous grants of land helped to develop the West, and as the result of the gifts to these companies civilization has followed the pathway of the locomotive; towns and cities have sprung up on the desert prairie, and the hum and bustle of multitudes has broken upon savage solitudes. Mr. Chairman, there never was a greater outrage against the people of this country than the granting of lands to railroads. The same results could have been had without giving away a single acre.

It would have been infinitely better for the future history of our people; for the railroads themselves if they are honest corporations; for the honesty which should characterize the administration of a republican government, if the money in bulk had been given to the railroads instead of the people's land. The system of giving lands to the railroads was iniquitous in this, that there was no way of estimating the exact amount that the railroad was getting. It was said we were giving them grants of land in the desert which they were to redeem themselves. Under a forced, unnatural, and utterly uncalled-for system of forcing settlements on these lands we have made the managers of these great companies enormously and dangerously rich. The great gulf which separates them from the masses of their poorer and yet harder worked countrymen is a dangerous menace to popular government. There was no necessity to force emigration to these public lands. They are being settled all too rapidly for the landless millions of our people. Money grants would have built the railroads if any grant was necessary; land grants are crimes against the country.

Instead, as I have said, of giving them a desert to redeem, the enormous emigration which is pouring in on our shores, with the natural increase of our people, this land became almost fabulous in the aggregate of its value after the railroad was built.

Mr. Chairman, in the brief time allowed me I want to say a few words in answer to the eloquence which has been poured out here in denunciation of what is called the spy system inaugurated under General Sparks. General Sparks himself needs no vindication. If there ever was an aggressively honest man in a public office, if there ever was an upright, fearless, unselfish man determined to do his whole duty to the people of the United States against monstrous combinations of capitalists and railroads, against land-sharks, land-thieves, and land-grabbers, cattle rings and alien freebooters, that man was William Andrew Jackson Sparks, an honest man and a sterling Democrat.

A great deal has been said as to these spies. I am as much opposed to espionage of Government over the private affairs of citizens as any man on this floor. But it was made necessary by the abuse of this system of loosely constructed land laws that the Government should place a guardianship over the public domain. In 1886 the North American Review, one of the leading periodicals of our country, invited over Mr. Thomas P. Gill, a member of the British Parliament, who had seen the wrongs of a bad land system in Ireland, and asked him at the expense of that great publication to go out to the West and to give the impartial observations of an intelligent foreigner as to what he thought of the management of our public domain and as to the growth of landlordism in America.

I have before me in a bound volume of the Review the statement of this intelligent and impartial gentleman. I will beg leave to incorporate it in my remarks if time will not permit me to read it. He says he never saw such abuses, such wholesale stealing; that there is not known in history any parallel for such land-grabbing, men getting land through dummy entries, frauds, and perjuries, and defrauding the people of the United States of the land which is the life-blood of the country; all this under the direction of loan agents and frontier land-sharps. No man on this floor attacks the honest settlers in the West. There is no man on this floor who does not venerate and admire those rugged, honest, typical Americans who go out into the frontier and fight the Indian and the wild beast; who have contended against storm and desert and all the loneliness and hardship of frontier life, and who have redeemed the prairies and made the West great and prosperous. And when gentlemen who believe as I do stand on this floor to vindicate Mr. Sparks and the policy of the Democratic party in guarding the public domain, it is unjust to us to accuse us of reviling or belittling the honest settlers of the West. We are the friends of the honest settlers, and Mr. Sparks in his administration was their true and genuine friend, and I bespeak that his successor, whom I well and favorably know as a former member of this body, will follow in his footsteps.

The portion of the article referred to by Mr. MCADOO is as follows. It is to be found in the February number of the North American Review for 1886:

No one can travel in the border States, where there yet remains some public land to be disposed of, and inquire among the land offices there without feeling that by paltry and occult methods the United States is being defrauded of nearly as much of its domain as by the depredations of railroad corporations and the extravagance of Texan legislators. In Dakota and Minnesota I have seen men farming land and paying half the crop as rent to quasi-landlords who actually had no title whatever to the holdings. They had filed timber-culture entries, by which, on payment of a fee of $14 and signing an agreement to plant 10 acres of trees within four years' time, they were allowed to use 160 acres of prairie land, to which their title would be perfected when the agreement was fulfilled. The entryman, under the timber-culture act, is not compelled to plant any trees until the third year from date of entry, when if he likes he may file a relinquishment of his claim, and the land is again open for entry. (Act of May 14, 1880, section 1.)

Thus a man without the faintest intention of planting a tree or doing a stroke of work can get possession of 160 acres of land, let it to a tenant, and pocket a heavy rental—half the fruits of another's toil—for three years! The most astonishing thing about this is that such a man can find a tenant. Others file timber-culture entries solely with a view to holding the land out of market until the growth of the community around it puts up its value. At the end of the third year the entryman will agree with another for a sum of money to make a written relinquishment so that the other may file a new entry on the spot. The second speculator will repeat the process, only charging a heavier consideration to the next entryman when the time comes for his relinquishment. So the process goes on without a tree being planted on the land, and the honest settler is kept hopelessly out of it. This sort of thing is carried on by wholesale; and on a larger scale still are frauds perpetrated under the desert and timber land acts, which enable capitalists in combination, by means of dummy entrymen, to appropriate miles of territory. The dummy entryman is also used by capitalists on an immense scale under the homestead and pre-emption laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

The pro forma amendment was rejected.

Mr. FUNSTON. I renew the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It can not be renewed.

Mr. FUNSTON. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the amendment.

Mr. FUNSTON. Then I move to strike out the last two words. [Laughter.] I fully agree, sir, with the gentlemen on this floor who have spoken as to the injustice and unfairness of taking the public domain and turning it over to the railroads of the country, or to any other corporations. I am fully in accord with gentlemen who have expressed their disapprobation of the Government pursuing that course.

Mr. SPRINGER. I congratulate you.

Mr. FUNSTON. Maybe you will not when I get done. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I desire the floor for a few moments only.

This debate on the public lands item of this bill has been led by the other side of this House into the old and hackneyed charge that the Republican party has robbed the people of the public domain and given it away to railroad and other corporations, and that the Democratic party has reclaimed it to the public. Both of these assertions are exaggerated and false in the impressions which they convey. That the Republican party has granted lands for railroad purposes no one denies, but such of those lands as have been restored to the Government have been restored under laws which were enacted by the Republican party at the time the grants were made; in other words, the lands have fallen back to the Government because the corporations have not complied with conditions exacted by the Republican party.

I am, and I believe the Republicans are, opposed to further grants to railroads. I believe the principle to be wrong; but I stand here to assert that the whole system is a child of the Democratic party, conceived by them, carried out by them, and chargeable to them, notwithstanding the assertion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] that the Democratic party had not granted an acre to railroads.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I said "directly to railroads."

Mr. FUNSTON. I hold in my hand a United States record, called the Public Domain, in which it appears that before the Republican party came into power the Democratic party gave away to railroads and other corporations from sixteen to twenty million acres of the public lands. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] says they did not give it directly. What is the difference whether they gave it directly or indirectly, so they gave it?

But the public document from which I get this information says it was "land grants for railroads," and the gentleman can not hide his party behind the subterfuge that the lands were granted to the States for railroad purposes. In doing this his party was directly responsible for the act and should have the manhood to admit it and stand by it. So were nearly all the grants made by the Republican party made to the States for railroad purposes, and the Republican party also might try to hide itself if it were coward enough to attempt to do so. And now, gentlemen, if you desire to make this a political question, if you will turn to this public document you will find that under President Pierce's administration of four years there were granted to railroads 19,678,000 acres, while under President Grant's administration of eight years there were granted 19,231,000, not half as much according to time as was granted under President Pierce. Mr. Chairman, the Republican party is ready to go to the people on the public-lands question on the records. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I now desire to limit this debate. We have indulged in national politics long enough, I think, and I desire to draw the attention of the committee back to the paragraph under consideration.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether it is not highly important that we should know who has been voting these land grants? [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I recommend the gentleman to read the record.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I want to occupy only a minute.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I am willing to have the limit fixed so as to allow five or ten minutes more for debate.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I am in favor of the shortest possible time, provided I may be permitted to occupy it. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. Say ten minutes, five minutes on each side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments be limited to ten minutes, five minutes on each side. Is there objection?

Mr. LAIRD. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing to make it twenty minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have no objection to that, provided I can have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that debate on the pending paragraph and amendments be limited to twenty minutes?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, all I desire to do is to call the attention of the House to a few simple historic facts which can not be disputed, because they are matters of record. The attempt to cover the whole public-land question would require, of course, a vast deal more of time than five minutes, but I can suggest a few things pertinent to the discussion now in hand.

It is a well-known fact, Mr. Chairman, that all the public domain acquired since the great Northwestern cession was acquired under Democratic administration—not as an accident, but as part of the deliberate policy of that party—often, too, against turbulent opposition. The Louisiana purchase, the Florida purchase, the land acquired from Mexico under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and the Gadsden purchase, aggregating 1,810,123 square miles, or 1,158,478,720 acres, were the acquirement of the Democratic party—its gift to the nation. Out of this magnificent territory fourteen of the sovereign States of this Republic and nine great Territories, now the fair infant children of the Republic, fast growing into the full development of statehood, have been created. This great possession was under the management and control of Democratic administrations for nearly three-fourths of that part of our national history from the organization of the Republic to the ascendency of the Republican party to power in 1861. During all that period, covering some eighty years, only 31,601,346.58 acres of land were granted by all parties and all administrations, but not one acre of that directly to any sort of corporation. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON] says it was given to States and other corporations.

Mr. FUNSTON. For railroad purposes.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. It was a gift to the States to be used by them in the development of their internal improvements.

Mr. FUNSTON. But the record says "railroads."

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. For railroads, wagon-roads, canals, and various other purposes. Only 31,000,000 acres were granted during eighty years, and only about 20,000,000 acres under Democratic administration.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I can not yield.

Now, sir, in 1861 the Democratic party turned this grand domain over into the possession of the Republican party.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LAIRD obtained the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] may be permitted to continue his remarks for five minutes.

Mr. MCSHANE. If I can be recognized, I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this paragraph has been limited, and the time can only be extended by unanimous consent. Is there consent that the gentleman from Missouri be allowed an extension of five minutes?

Mr. PARKER. With a like extension of time on this side.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will not object if I can have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman from Missouri be allowed five minutes, and that an equal time be given to the other side?

Mr. DAVIS. I am compelled to object unless an equal time be given to our side.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, objection is made.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Chairman, I listened with attention to the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], and I was interested particularly in one remark of that gentleman. He commented upon the policy of the Democratic party with reference to the bestowal of the public domain upon the States as a medium of its distribution to corporations. The State of Illinois is to be congratulated in that regard, as is the gentleman himself, so far as he may have been a factor in the adoption of that policy.

I observed the remark of the gentleman, that had the same policy marked the bestowal of the grant upon the Pacific railways which marked the bestowal of the grant upon the State of Illinois for the benefit of the Illinois Central Railroad, then by a deduction from the gross earnings of the Pacific railways the national debt would have been paid.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I spoke of all the Pacific railroads, not only the Union Pacific, but the Northern Pacific, the Central Pacific, and the Southern Pacific.

Mr. LAIRD. I understand, and I wish to confine myself to so much of the gentleman's remark as applied to the original Pacific roads. I want to hold the gentleman up to his record, if the remarks of a member of Congress can be said to be his record, and I wish to ask him, as a test upon the proposition involved in his criticism of the policy of the Republican party concerning the bestowal of the grant upon the Pacific roads, whether he will vote "ay" upon the passage of a bill which proposes to defer to eternity the payment of the money which such roads now owe to the United States? When the Democratic measure proposing to postpone to eternity the payment of that debt comes up for passage will the gentleman vote for it? Saying nothing of the national debt, letting that go, as the gentleman did not suggest it in time, what do you say to having them pay their own debts?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does the gentleman want an answer now?

Mr. LAIRD. The Democratic party has been, in its own estimation, particularly happy in its guardianship of the public domain of this country, and of one of its achievements in this respect it ought to be, and doubtless is, very proud. I refer to its repeated defeat of the homestead law, a law under the operation of which the land west of the Mississippi has been reclaimed from the region of "desert" as scientifically declared, and made by the labor of the homesteaders to blossom like a rose.

And it was thus that by the passage of the homestead act, which your party opposed, that the millions upon millions of acres of land in all the great Western States settled since 1861 was saved to individuals for homes, and rescued without your legislative aid from the all-devouring syndicate and cattle and land monopoly before whom you so virtuously pale and tremble, just as you pale and tremble before Senator PAYNE and Secretary Whitney of the Standard Oil combine.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to answer the gentleman from Nebraska, if he is willing.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Nebraska yield?

Mr. LAIRD. No, sir.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman ought not to ask a question if he is unwilling to have it answered.

Mr. LAIRD. All right; I did not understand you. Answer it now.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I answer the gentleman that I know of no such bill as he has described; but I am ready to stand here and vote for a bill to compel the Union Pacific Railway Company to pay all its indebtedness to the Government.

Mr. LAIRD. But when? In time, as justice demands, or in eternity, as the Outhwaite bill proposes?

The Democratic party has a bill pending before this House to practically give to the Union Pacific Railway Company $150,000,000, which the company owes to the Government of the United States, although the property of that company as a matter of stock is worth upon the stock market of New York sixty-six or sixty-seven million dollars over and above the indebtedness and liabilities of the corporation, as is shown by the Wall street stock quotations.

I will ask the gentleman, since he has referred to it, whether it will receive his support? I am unable to say how soon it will be passed, but I hope gentlemen will stand up to the Democratic policy in this respect which he prescribes for the Republican party.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it will not pass.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Chairman, in answer to what has been said on the other side of this Chamber I desire to have read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Forty-ninth Congress an extract from a speech I delivered June 14, 1886, which will show when, how, and in what quantity the grants to railroad corporations were made.

The Clerk read as follows:

The following table will show by what administration made and the extent of these grants, and how much has been patented to the companies:

	Acres.
During President Fillmore's administration there were grants to the States in trust for the railroads aggregating	8,198,593.73
Of which there have been patented	7,372,883.85
During President Pierce's administration there were grants to the States in trust for the railroads aggregating	19,678,179.79
Of which there have been patented	14,886,396.47
During President Lincoln's administration there were grants directly to railroad companies aggregating	74,336,891.61
Of which there have been patented	17,164,270.87
During President Johnson's administration there were grants directly to railroad companies aggregating	34,601,297.77
Of which there have been patented	5,020,107.20
During President Grant's administration there were grants directly to railroad companies aggregating	19,251,121.69
Of which there have been patented	1,206,689.09
The total grants	155,504,994.59
The total patented	45,647,347.48

At this late day I will not undertake to pass upon its wisdom. Many of the best and ablest leaders of public thought of those times, including Hon. Stephen A. Douglas and Lewis Cass, favored the policy; but whether right or wrong we will all agree that it should now be abandoned. The time has come for us to take our bearings and see where we are drifting. Our population is increasing with wonderful rapidity. The landless and homeless are to be found all around us, while our public domain is being absorbed by railroad corporations, cattle and foreign syndicates. The grand object to be accomplished by such a policy was to secure an early completion of the road through and the development of the great Western States and Territories, to people them and unite their commerce with that of the Eastern and Middle States. The policy did not accomplish this result. It might well be doubted if the policy materially aided in what has been done.

Eighty grants, covering 155,504,994 acres, have been made to companies that have altogether constructed less than 20,000 miles of road, while during the same time over 100,000 miles have been constructed by other companies without the aid of land grants, and not a few in the undeveloped West were built far in advance of and before the completion of those aided by large and valuable grants. In many cases the construction of the land-grant roads appear to have been purposely delayed until the country through which the routes were projected had been settled to a sufficient extent to justify the building without aid. Under the law and practice of the Interior Department in permitting the lands to be withdrawn as soon as maps were filed the railroads lost nothing by such delay. They paid no taxes, and the land was all the time increasing in value. It was a profitable policy for them. They have been allowed to build wherever and whenever they desired, either within or without the limit, and often allowed to change the route to suit their desires.

There are many railroads uncompleted to-day to aid which land grants were made nearly twenty-five years ago, and when the time fixed in the granting act for completion has long since expired, and yet the lands are still withdrawn from sale and settlement and the legal title in the company, with no power in the executive department to restore them to the public domain.

Mr. MCRAE. That table I think shows all the grants made to railroads, exclusive of indemnity withdrawals.

Mr. HOLMAN. It does not include the Atlantic and Pacific.

Mr. MCRAE. It includes that grant as well as all others to railroads or to States for railroads, as well as the amount earned and patented up to that time. I think the table is correct. It has never been questioned that I know of, and it was published two years ago.

While it shows by what administrations the grants were made, and how little of the grants made by the Republicans was earned in time, still, Mr. Chairman, the most important question for us now to consider is how to recover so much as was not legally earned. Instead of asking whether the grants should have been made or not, let us ask how much has been earned, and, if not earned, whether the Government should not enter and take the granted estate. If the Democratic party initiated the policy of aiding the railroads, it has also initiated the policy of demanding that the terms of the grants should be complied with. The Democratic party stands pledged and ready to forfeit all not earned in time. That is the question to which we call the attention of our Republican friends. I call upon them now to show what they have done to recover the unearned lands so recklessly granted by their party. I charge that party with favoring the railroads as against the settlers in this fight for forfeitures, not all the members, but particularly the Senate, which is under the control of Republicans. I point with pride to the record of our party and the efforts of leading members.

Mr. HOLMAN, of Indiana, a Democrat, now the able chairman of the House Committee on the Public Lands, on the 18th day of January, A. D. 1869, when the Republican party had full control of all the Departments of the Government, offered the following resolution in the House:

Resolved, That grants of the public lands to corporations ought to be discontinued, and the whole of such lands ought to be held as a sacred trust to secure homesteads to actual settlers, and for no other purpose whatever.

A Republican, Mr. H. D. Washburn, with the House about two-thirds Republican, moved to table the resolution, and the motion was agreed to by just about that proportion. The vote was 110 yeas and 55 nays, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who was a member of the Fortieth Congress, says he only remembers three Democrats who voted to table. With only a handful of Democrats in Congress, the leaders of that grand old party of the people that had acquired so much of our public domain undertook to stop such grants, and, if possible, to recover some of the lands that had been recklessly given to moneyless corporations for speculative purposes, and they were met by the Republicans, then in power, by a vote to table, which in effect said to the country that the lands ought not to be held for settlers, but for corporations as well, and continued to make grants.

In connection with this resolution I desire to call attention to the platforms of the Democratic party of 1884 and 1888 upon this subject:

We believe that the public land ought, as far as possible, to be kept as homesteads for actual settlers; that all unearned lands heretofore improvidently granted to railroad corporations by the action of the Republican party should be restored to the public domain, and that no more grants of land shall be made to corporations, or be allowed to fall into the ownership of alien absentees.—National Democratic Platform, 1884.

It (the Democratic party) has reversed the improvident and unwise policy of the Republican party touching the public domain, and has reclaimed from corporations and syndicates, alien and domestic, and restored to the people nearly 100,000,000 of acres of valuable land to be sacredly held as homesteads for our citizens.—National Democratic Platform, 1888.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us see what has been done to redeem these promises.

The Forty-eighth Congress passed bills to forfeit the following-named land-grants to railroad corporations, all of which bills were initiated in and passed by a Democratic House in accordance with the policy of that party, namely:

	Acres.
Oregon Central	810,880
Texas Pacific	18,560,000
Iron Mountain, of Missouri	300,000
Total area by acts Forty-eighth Congress	19,610,880

The Forty-ninth Congress, which began with the Cleveland Administration, enacted laws forfeiting the following-named land grants to railroad corporations, initiated and insisted upon by the House, namely:

	Acres.
Atlantic and Pacific, estimated at	23,871,360
The Mobile and New Orleans and other Southern railroads, the grants being to States, estimated at	7,000,000
Total area restored by Forty-ninth Congress	30,871,360

Mr. Chairman, I want to call special attention to what the executive department of the present Administration is doing to recover so much of the public domain as had been fraudulently withdrawn by or disposed of under the Republican administrations. I ask the Clerk to read the following table and statement which I have prepared from data furnished me by the present able and courteous Commissioner of the General Land Office. It will show the quantity recommended for recovery.

The Clerk read as follows:

	Acres.
Lands within railroad grants recommended for recovery:
Recovery of land recommended and pending for review of Secretary	12,300.00
Recovery of land recommended and pending on appeal before the Secretary	1,500,000.00
Suits recommended for the recovery of land	818,687.18
Railroad forfeitures under bills now before Congress, as reported from the House Committee on the Public Lands	53,735,562.00
Private land claims:
Recommendations to Congress to reject claims heretofore favorably reported	4,732,480.15
Resurveys ordered reducing areas of claims	629,500.00
Suits recommended to vacate patents	635,255.00
Lands in Oregon granted by Congress to that State for military wagon-roads recommended for recovery	2,368,320.00
Total recommended for recovery by the Administration and the Public Lands Committee of the House	64,530,104.33

Mr. McRAE. When we add all of these items together we have a splendid record and showing. The claim made in the late Saint Louis platform, large as it appears, is nearly three millions less than the amount actually restored. Here are the items:

	Acres.
Area forfeited by Forty-eighth Congress	19,610,880
Areal orfeited by Forty-ninth Congress	30,871,360
Area restored without legislation by action of Department	52,437,373
Total actually restored	102,929,613
Add to this the total quantity recommended for recovery and forfeiture by the Administration and the Public Lands Committee of the House	64,530,104
And we have a grand total of	177,459,717

If the Democratic party made a mistake before the war in making a few grants to the States in trust, it has more than made it good by recovering many more millions granted to corporations by the Republican party since the war.

The following is a list of grants that the Committee on the Public Lands seek to forfeit:

Name of railroad.	Estimated number of acres granted for that portion of road completed after expiration of grant.	Estimated number of acres granted for that portion of road now uncompleted.
Gulf and Ship Island		652,800.00
Coosa and Tennessee		140,160.00
Coosa and Chattooga		144,000.00
Mobile and Girard		536,064.00
Selma, Rome and Dalton	168,921.20	89,932.80
Atlantic, Gulf and West India Transit	272,524.80	393,475.20
Pensacola and Georgia	679,680.00
Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas	153,600.00	211,200.00
Jackson, Lansing and Saginaw and Northern Central Michigan, formerly Amboy, Lansing and Traverse Bay	176,256.00
Marquette, Houghton and Ontonagon		294,400.00
Ontonagon and Brulé River	76,800.00	211,200.00
Sioux City and St. Paul		171,200.00
La Crosse and Milwaukee	149,760.00
North Wisconsin, now Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha	1,446,400.60
Wisconsin Central	57,600.00	406,880.00
St. Vincent extension, St. Paul and Pacific, now St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba	1,113,600.00
Western Railroad, formerly Brainerd branch of St. Paul and Pacific	243,712.00
Southern Minnesota Railway Extension	832,115.00
Hastings and Dakota	819,140.00
Northern Pacific Railroad	29,851,101.00	7,056,649.00
California and Oregon Railroad Company		1,740,800.00
Oregon and California Railroad Company	576,000.00	1,510,400.00
Southern Pacific Railroad Company	3,072,000.00	1,075,200.00

By adding together the totals of the two columns of this list we get the estimated amount of the lands that will be restored by the House bills, 53,733,562 acres. The Senate bills will only restore 14,544,352 acres, and that of lands of little value as agricultural lands. If I could have my own way, I would go even farther than the majority of the committee have gone and forfeit the whole of every grant where the road was not completed in the time fixed in the granting act. My views upon this point are fully expressed in the separate views submitted by my colleague [Mr. STONE] and myself to the report on the general forfeiture bill reported as a substitute for Senate bill 1436. I make the following extract from it. We then said:

We have favored and advocated, and still do, all the exceptions contained in the substitute, as to right of way, lands for depots, machine shops, etc., and for lands appropriated for town sites, and all exceptions in favor of actual settlers, and of bona fide purchasers for value. We say we favor all that. We would freely give to the company whatever lands are reasonably necessary to the convenient operation of its road.

We would not disturb titles and create confusion where towns or cities have been built, nor would we disturb or distress actual settlers or persons who have in good faith purchased lands from the company for a valuable consideration. Whatever defect there may be in such titles we would remove by an act of confirmation. The reasons for such a course, we assume, are too manifest to require elaboration.

If the company is protected in its right of way; if town sites are left undisturbed, because excepted from the forfeiture; if honest actual settlers and bona fide purchasers for value are protected from harm by having their titles confirmed; if all equities, and all questions of this character, are eliminated from the legislation proposed, then there is nothing left but a naked issue between the Government of the United States, representing the people, on the one hand, and the railroad companies on the other. It is a simple issue between the grantor and the grantee, with all intervening rights protected.

We have, then, three propositions:

1. The Senate bill to forfeit lands where no road has been constructed.

2. The House committee's substitute to forfeit all lands across which no road had been constructed at the expiration of the period limited for the completion of the whole road.

3. The amendment to the substitute, which proposes to forfeit the entire grant where there has been a failure of compliance with the terms and conditions of the grant.

The reasons for accepting the substitute in preference to the Senate bill are set forth with great clearness and force in the report of the committee made by Judge HOLMAN. The Senate bill is a mere subterfuge. It amounts to nothing. It proposes to restore to the public only the depleted tail-ends of the vast grants made by Congress to railroad companies—the discarded remnants abandoned and thrown aside by the companies because they were esteemed worthless, or because they were not considered sufficiently valuable to justify the expense of "earning" them. That bill proposes graciously to give the roads all they claim, and to take back what, as a rule, they do not want. It is a very accommodating measure from a very accommodating, albeit a very exalted, source.

The substitute is a beneficent and meritorious legislative proposition. It means something. If it should become a law, it would be a measure upon which the country would have occasion to congratulate itself. But for all that we insist it does not go far enough. Take the Southern Pacific again as an example. What did this company do? Within the time limited for the construction of the road, the company built its line for a distance of 50 miles through a magnificent country on the west side of the Coast Range of mountains, and then leaped clear across the mountains and built another section of 182 miles through a fertile region on the east side of the range.

Thus it endeavored to cover and secure the most valuable lands in the grant. Since 1878 it has extended its line to the Colorado River so as to form its eastern connections with the Atlantic and Pacific. The Senate bill, if it should become a law, would forfeit only the rough mountain lands, across which no road has been constructed, and which are of little or no value. The substitute would cover the same lands, and also the lands lying along the 242 miles constructed since 1878; but the lands adjacent to the 242 miles are of little value compared to those lying along the 232 miles constructed prior to 1878. The 232 miles cover the cream of the grant. The road will get the best end of the bargain under either the Senate bill or the substitute.

Now, if the company did not comply with the conditions of this grant—a grant which it was infamous to have made in the first place—if the title to the lands have not passed irrevocably to the company; if the Government has the legal right to reclaim these lands, then why not do so? Why give to the company all that is of real value and say to a justly outraged public opinion that it must be content to take the meaner share? Mark you, no innocent resident on any of these lands, no innocent purchaser of any of these lands, is in peril here.

It is a question between the original parties to the transaction—the Government which made, and the corporation which accepted, the grant. No other person and no other interest is involved. If it be conceded that Congress has the legal right or power to reclaim these lands and restore them to the public,

I can find no satisfactory excuse for failing to do so. If the corporations receiving the grants have any equities to urge in their own behalf, they have neglected their opportunities to do so, though they may expect to have it done for them upon the floors of the House and Senate. In the committee-room they have combated the forfeitures upon purely legal grounds. They claim the lands as a matter of legal right, and deny the power of Congress to disturb them. And it is purely a question of law.

We claim that the grants were made upon such conditions as vests in the Government the right to re-enter after the breach thereof. We shall not discuss that question here. In the Forty-ninth Congress, first session, it was discussed at much length in a report made on a bill forfeiting the lands granted to the Southern Pacific (Report 706). We refer those who may feel an interest in the matter to that report, and to similar reports made during the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses by Messrs. COBB, Henley, PAYSON, and others; all of which can be found in the House document-room.

It may not be inappropriate to say that nearly all the older members of the House Committee on the Public Lands have uniformly maintained, both in debate and in reports made by them, that Congress has the right and power to declare a forfeiture of these grants where there is a clear breach of the conditions of the grant. We know of none who deny that Congress has the same right to forfeit the lands covered by the road constructed "in time" that it has to forfeit the lands covered by road constructed "out of time."

The question as to how far the forfeiture should extend has been treated as one of legislative policy, looking to practical results, rather than as one of right. There is very little diversity of opinion in the House committee as to the legal phases of this question, and there is a strong sentiment prevailing in the membership of that committee in favor of forfeitures; but there is a wide divergence of opinion as to the wisest and best policy to be pursued.

For ourselves we insist as a matter of law, as a matter of equity and good conscience, as well as of public right, that there should be no half-way measures of compromise in this business, and hence we feel it our duty, as members of the committee having these matters in charge, to advise the House to declare an entire forfeiture, and if this legislation should fail again, as it has failed in the past, let the responsibility rest with those who obstruct or prevent it.

When the Democratic House offers a bill forfeiting all the grants not earned in time, involving over 50,000,000 acres of valuable lands, it is met by a proposition from the Senate to forfeit only about one-fifth of what we ought to have. I call upon my Democratic friends and gentlemen on the other side who agree with us to stay here until a vote can be had on these propositions, so that we may see who are in favor of forfeiting and who are not. Let us see whether the Senate or House will yield in this great contest between the wicked, faithless land-grant railroads and the landless settlers of our glorious Republic. I challenge our friends on the other side of the House to the test.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, it tries one's faith in human nature to witness the agility with which the average demagogue will climb into some high position and from thence cry aloud about the sins of some other fellow. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, I know it was thought at one time by members of all parties to be good policy to donate lands in aid of railroad enterprises. At one time both of the great parties advocated that policy in their respective party platforms. At the time the grants were made to the Union and Central Pacific Railroads it will be found men of the two parties agreed in voting for the measure. Why, I once heard a distinguished gentleman who occupied a leading position on the other side of the House, and who to-day is high in the councils of the Democratic party, defend upon this floor his vote in behalf of that measure on what seemed to him sound reasons and patriotic purposes.

And I am not free to say, Mr. Chairman, had I been a representative of the people at that time these reasons would not have appeared sound also to me. As year after year has rolled on we have come to see that this thing has been carried to excess. I have occupied a position in this House during three successive sessions. At each one of these sessions, whenever any bill was brought forward to reclaim any of these land grants, I have, and my recollection is that every gentleman on this side of the House has cast his vote in favor of the passage of each one of those bills.

There is a great deal too much election rot in this whole business, in my judgment. Our views of national expediency have changed with changing years and changing circumstances, and what may be regarded as extravagant profligacy in 1888 may have been honestly looked upon as statesmanship in 1860 and 1861, and it will not do to pass judgment on the action of those gentlemen from every party who voted for those measures because the experience of twenty years afterwards has proved to us they then went too far in carrying out the policy of making land grants to railroads.

Another word. I believe that the gentleman who has been spoken about here, the late Commissioner of the General Land Office, is a man of as pure purposes and honest intentions as any man who ever filled the position. If he erred at all it was an error in judgment in not being able to distinguish between the actual settler and the scoundrel who was robbing the Government by taking unlawful possession of the public lands. But I believe, I repeat, that his motives were pure and good, and that his way, blind though it was at times, stumbling as it unquestionably was on occasions, was an honest way, and that he was doing the Government of the United States upon the whole a good service. And, Mr. Chairman, I rejoiced when I read in the newspapers of the day that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and others had gone to the President of the United States and asked him to retain that official in his position. But, sir, he made a fatal mistake for a public official. He struck a railroad company with the same steady devotion to principle that he had applied in the cases of individuals, and from that moment we find that his fate was decreed; and it will not do for gentlemen upon the other side to say that the king can do no wrong. The king is king; and if Grover Cleveland has not influence enough with his own Administration to retain a subordinate like Mr. Sparks in power it is time for him to abdicate and allow some one to run the Administration who would have at least that much influence with it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Reproducing plats of surveys: To enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to continue to reproduce worn and defaced official plats of surveys on file, and other plats constituting a part of the records of said office, and also to furnish local land offices with the same, $2,500.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I move to strike out the last word; and I desire now to complete the statement I was making when objection was interposed to my proceeding a short time ago.

I said, sir, that during the control of the House by the Democratic party and Democratic Administration only about 20,000,000 acres of the public lands were granted to the States, and none to corporations, for the purpose of carrying forward and developing their internal works. When the Republican party came into power in 1861 and took control of the public domain, in one year, 1862, while it was yet upon its first legs, before it was fairly and firmly established, in that one year it granted to railroad corporations directly 23,504,001.61 acres.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Granted to what corporations?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I can not give the gentleman the names of the corporations.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Well, in the Pacific lines?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Yes, sir; principally to the Pacific lines.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Because I desired to defend that provision.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Between 1862 and 1874, during a period of eleven years, the Republican party granted direct to railroad corporations 129,629,261.54 acres of the public lands. Not only so, Mr. Chairman, but they supplemented this princely donation with the loan, or rather the gift, of the bonds of the Government, by guarantying their payment, to the amount of $64,623,512, aggregating now, with principal and interest combined, $122,482,606.32. The gentleman from Nebraska reproached the Democratic party now represented in this House for bringing in a bill from a committee for the adjustment of this indebtedness. The gentleman had better have reproached his own party for having created the debt and permitted it to accumulate as it has accumulated.

Mr. Chairman, from the day that the Democratic party came into this House after the election of 1874, and took possession, not one solitary acre of the public lands has ever been diverted from the uses for which it was originally intended—for the homes of the actual settlers of this country. And not only so, sir, but they have inaugurated a reform in that respect, and inaugurated a movement to reclaim and recover, or at least to restore it to the public use, as far as could possibly be done in accordance with the grants. Of all these granted lands over 50,000,000 of acres have already been reclaimed by bills which originated in Democratic Houses, and many millions more would have been reclaimed except for the obstructive processes of the upper branch of this legislative body. Not only that, but the Interior Department have reclaimed 28,000,000 of acres that had been taken by fraudulent entries other than those granted to railroad companies, aggregating a reclamation of nearly 80,000,000 of acres.

Why, the gentleman spoke of a bill forfeiting the land grants, and wanted to know why we did not provide so and so. Last Congress we passed through the House a bill forfeiting the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and the Senate, Mr. Chairman, refused to concur in that bill to the extent of the forfeiture of one solitary acre, except where no road had been completed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to occupy the attention of the committee for more than a couple of minutes. I think the gentleman from Missouri makes a mistake whenever he makes a party question of this forfeiture of land grants, not only because uncalled for but because the facts are against his party.

Mr. SPRINGER. What facts?

Mr. PETERS. Whenever that party or any member of the party desires to claim the honor of the reclamation of the lands granted by the Government, that have been forfeited because the terms of the grants have not been complied with, then he falsifies history or is ignorant of the record.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the record?

Mr. PETERS. I assert, Mr. Chairman, and I assert it without the fear of successful contradiction, that every single bill that has been drawn and that has passed through this House has been introduced by a Republican on this side of the House; that every bill that has been passed has been either a bill introduced by a Republican, or a bill introduced by a Republican has been made the groundwork of the legislation that finally passed the House. I could with the same propriety say it is the Republican party that has inaugurated the proceedings to reclaim this land to the public domain; because, as I said, every single bill that has become a law or every bill introduced which was made the groundwork of any law that passed this House was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. My friend will understand that the statement which he now makes is contradicted emphatically. I contradict it; I contradict it with full knowledge, because I have served for two Congresses upon the Committee on Public Lands, and know whereof I speak.

Mr. PETERS. I have not time, Mr. Chairman, to present the record, but simply appeal to the record. The record will bear me out in what I say. I challenge an examination of the record at the gentleman's leisure. I state I have information from a positive source that there never has been a bill passed by this House forfeiting any of the land grants that was either not introduced by a Republican or such a bill made the basis upon which the legislation was framed.

Now, I say I could with some consistency claim all this credit for the Republican party, but the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] as well as other members of this House, knows that members upon this side of the House with whom I have stood have always voted to forfeit every unearned land grant that came before this House. I have always stood up and argued in favor of it. I might state further, as I stated several weeks ago, that the strongest opposition that came to the passage of some of these laws came from the Democratic side of the House. But I do not charge that up to the Democratic party. I wish to be fair. I wish to be treated fairly in this matter. I wish to have my party treated fairly in this matter. I do not want to claim for it anything that does not belong to it, but I do want to claim for it all it is justly entitled to. I shall resist any claim that I think should not be made, any claim on behalf of the Democratic party which is erroneously made.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. There is one simple statement I wish to make for the benefit of my friend from Kansas [Mr. PETERS]. I know to whom he refers—the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], who, up to this time at least, has been a consistent advocate of the forfeiture of public lands, but from some cause or other which I suppose he will be able to explain he has joined the forces of the enemy and has deserted the Democratic party in its effort to restore these lands to the public domain.

Mr. PETERS. I hope the gentleman will make his charge when the gentleman from Illinois is present. He is not present.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I do not make any charge. I am simply stating the facts.

Mr. RYAN. It would be better to state that fact when the gentleman is present.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. See whether it is correct. The Senate passed a general forfeiture bill which forfeits 5,627,436 acres of land. The Democratic Committee of this House on the Public Lands have reported a substitute which forfeits 54,323,996 acres of land. The gentleman from California who interrupted me [Mr. MCKENNA], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], and one other, the Republican members of the committee, have filed a minority report in which they insist upon the passage of the Senate bill which covers only 5,000,000 acres.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to challenge the correctness of a remark made by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] if he will give me his attention. He said that all the parties in times past had been in favor of these grants to railroad corporations. I make the assertion that in the pure days of the Republican party, before they obtained power and were brought face to face with the temptations incident to power, they were not in favor of anything of that kind. I read the eleventh and twelfth planks in the platform of the Free-Soil party of 1852, made by the grand old men who made the Republican party:

11. That all men have a natural right to a portion of the soil; that as the use of the soil is indispensable to life, the right of all men to the soil is as sacred as their right to life itself.

12. That the public lands of the United States belong to the people and should not be sold to individuals nor granted to corporations, but should be held as a sacred trust for the benefit of the people, and should be granted in limited quantities free of cost to landless settlers.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the right kind of doctrine.

Mr. WEAVER. That, sir, was the platform of 1852, upon which John P. Hale and George W. Julian ran for President and Vice-President of the United States. George W. Julian is to-day, in his vigorous old age, still working to carry out the principles of the platform he ran upon in 1852.

A MEMBER. He is not in the Republican party.

Mr. WEAVER. As soon as the Republican party got into power it turned around and granted the public domain to corporations and opened to private speculators also, in violation of the principle announced in the platform I have quoted. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] says he defends the grants to the Pacific railroads; of course he does, and his party has taken that position before the country for years, and very recently, by selecting Mr. Thurston, of Nebraska, a Pacific Railroad attorney, with a record that will not bear investigation, as temporary chairman of its convention. Now, if they will just nominate Depew and Thurston, their truly representative men, they can sweep the country, perhaps. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Chairman, these land grants were a mistake, to draw it mildly—and we may as well all admit it now; it was a great wrong to grant a single acre of the public domain to corporations. The correct policy——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WEAVER. I ask unanimous consent that I may have two minutes more.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I will not object if the gentleman will say a few words now about Estee, who has been made permanent chairman of the convention.

Mr. WEAVER. Oh, that was an afterthought. You found you had got your foot into it, and you tried to get it out by putting Estee in the chair. Your sorrow was not toward Heaven, but toward yourself. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for two minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. WEAVER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I say we may as well admit, because that is the sentiment of the people of the country, that there should never have been an acre of the public domain granted to a railroad corporation beyond what was necessary for the construction of their road and depots. Every acre of the public lands should have been held for homes for the people, under a well-guarded homestead law. That was the proper way to deal with the public domain; but instead of that it was thrown open to ruthless speculators, who have speculated in it until the poor people of this country to-day have to fight for standing room. I despise to look upon the dreadful record of the past. It presents a picture dreadful to contemplate, and it smacks of everything on earth except statesmanship and integrity. Where are our 60,000,000 of people and their countless posterity to find homes?

In the name of God, I ask, where will they find rest and shelter? Children born upon this continent fifty years from now will have no right to live upon it unless they obtain the consent of those who will have preoccupied it. The very gift of God to all his children has been squandered, and we are acting as though the earth belonged to this generation, and as though posterity had no interest whatever in it. [Applause.] Shame on such a policy.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I was out when the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] was talking, but I understand that he said something about Mr. Thurston. I do not happen to have the pleasure of the acquaintance of Mr. Thurston, or to know anything about his private affairs, but there was a convention held a week or two previous to the one that is now in session, and in that convention a distinguished gentleman offered, as a sort of appendix to the platform, a resolution approving the revenue measure now pending in the House of Representatives.

That distinguished gentleman happens to be a member of this House——

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, we have heard all that before.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It will not hurt you to hear it again. The distinguished gentleman who offered that resolution happens, I say, to be a member of this House, and in his autobiography in the Congressional Directory I find the following:

Subsequently became largely interested in the manufacture of iron and the mining of coal, as well as in the construction and operation of railroads, either as president or director of various lines, aggregating over 22,000 miles of completed road, the greatest number of miles of railroad, probably, which any one individual was ever an officer or director of.

I commend this record to the thoughtful and serious consideration of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; but that distinguished gentleman never ran away from a commission that was investigating his roads and went "fishing" in Canada or in the wilds of Wisconsin, in order to keep from testifying.

Mr. BUCHANAN. As the gentleman is so well informed on these subjects, will he tell me whether it is true that the distinguished gentleman whose record I have read is a director in the Canadian Pacific Railroad?

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I am very well satisfied, sir, that the gentlemen who have spoken upon the other side have no intention to cast aspersions upon their predecessors in office, and yet they have boldly charged that the land grants to the Pacific railroads were made by the Republican party. I submit that at the time those grants were made party lines were not drawn upon them, and on reference to the record I find that on the 8th of April, 1862, when the bill was under consideration granting what was then believed to be about 35,000,000 of acres to the Union Pacific Railway Company, 14 Democrats voted in favor of it, and only 25 Democrats voted against it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. How many Republicans?

Mr. ATKINSON. There were 79 votes in its favor. Deducting 14 from that number would leave 65.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. How many Republicans voted against it?

Mr. ATKINSON. Twenty-five Democrats voted against it. Forty-nine was the aggregate vote against it; so that 24 Republicans and 25 Democrats, and no more, voted against it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. How many Republicans voted for it?

Mr. ATKINSON. I have told you. The aggregate vote was 79, and there were 14 Democrats who voted for the bill. I call attention to the further fact that when that bill came up in the Senate 8 Democrats voted in favor of it and only 2 against it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. How many Republicans in the Senate voted for it and how many against it?

Mr. ATKINSON. There were not so many Democrats in the Senate in 1862 as there are now. The gentleman may remember that some of them were hedged behind a wall of bayonets south of the Potomac, and therefore they had no opportunity to give an expression to their sentiments upon this subject.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, will the gentleman tell how many Republicans voted for it?

Mr. ATKINSON. I decline to yield to the gentleman unless I can have further time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman dare not tell us how many Republicans there were who voted for it.

Mr. ATKINSON. Extend my time and I will tell you without hesitation. I have nothing to conceal.

I wish to call the attention of the House to the vote upon the land grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. This vote was taken on the 31st of May, 1864, a period when Democrats were less numerous in this House than they are now. By reference to that vote I find that 24 Democrats voted in favor of that land grant and only 30 Democrats against it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. ATKINSON. Not now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will furnish the names of the Democrats who voted for that grant.

Mr. ATKINSON. Yes, sir; I will mention their names.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ATKINSON. I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] moves to strike out the pending paragraph.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now that the gentleman has secured an extension of time, I hope he will state how many Republicans voted for the Union Pacific land grant.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. ATKINSON. I will in a moment. I wish first to reply to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will give us the names of the Democrats who voted in favor of the grant to which he has just referred.

Mr. ATKINSON. I wish to call the attention of gentlemen on the other side to the names of some of the Democrats who voted in favor of this Northern Pacific grant. Among others I find the names of Mr. James C. Allen, Mr. Augustus C. Baldwin, Mr. Alexander H. Coffroth, and, without reading the entire roll, I will conclude by citing the name of a gentleman now conspicuous in public life, and who, I believe, is ready to defend his vote on this question—DANIEL W. VOORHEES, of Indiana. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. And Thomas A. Hendricks.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the gentleman has read about all the names of Democrats that he can find.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. How did Mr. Hendricks vote?

Mr. HOLMAN. He was not here.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I am inquiring how he voted on the Northern Pacific grant. I say he voted for that grant, the largest land subsidy ever voted in any one bill, and he made a speech in favor of it.

Mr. ATKINSON. I call the attention of the House to the fact that these were not Republican measures; that there was a larger proportion of Democrats voted for them than of Republicans.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read a resolution which was submitted to this House on the 18th day of January, 1869, the vote upon which discloses, I think, the attitude of the two parties in regard to the repeal of the land grants better than any other proposition which has been referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That grants of the public lands to corporations ought to be discontinued; and the whole of such lands ought to be held as a sacred trust to secure homesteads to actual settlers, and for no other purpose whatever.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, in those few words this whole question is as well presented as it could be. There can be no misunderstanding of that declaration, which is that land grants ought to cease, and that the public lands ought to be reserved for the benefit of actual settlers only. Gentlemen will be surprised to see how the vote stands on that resolution.

A MEMBER. What year was that?

Mr. HOLMAN. In 1869—five years before the Democrats obtained control of this House. Within a very short time after this resolution, as gentlemen will find by looking at the records—I called the attention of one of my colleagues to this matter not long since—this side of the House brought forward a proposition to grant land to soldiers of the late war, without requiring settlement on the same—the principle on which the soldiers in all former wars had obtained grants of land. I hope gentlemen who are claiming that they have favored the policy of securing these lands to the people will examine the vote on this bill, which passed, to be sure, in a Republican House, but was promptly rejected in the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What was the vote on the resolution to which the gentleman has referred?

Mr. HOLMAN. Upon the submission of that resolution declaring that "grants of the public lands ought to be discontinued, and the whole of such lands ought to be held as a sacred trust to secure homesteads to actual settlers, and for no other purpose whatever," Mr. H. D. Washburn, a Republican member from the State of Indiana, and a very excellent man, moved to lay the resolution on the table. Of the Republican votes in favor of that motion I will simply call attention to the following: WILLIAM B. ALLISON, Nathaniel P. Banks, John A. Bingham, SHELBY M. CULLOM, Columbus Delano, James A. Garfield, Samuel Hooper, WILLIAM D. KELLEY, CHARLES O'NEILL, Luke P. Poland, Robert C. Schenck. I mention these as distinguished Representatives of the Republican party. The Democratic vote in those days was not very strong, and gentlemen will remember that the effects of this policy had not then been fully felt by the country, and until they had been felt it could scarcely be expected that this House would very decidedly change its attitude on this question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What was the vote for the resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. One hundred and ten to fifty-five.

Mr. WEAVER. How many Democrats?

Mr. HOLMAN. I only recognized three, hastily running over the list. There may be others.

The proposition I wished to call attention to is that this was in the midst of the land-grant policy. After this the Texas Pacific was passed, granting 14,500,000 acres.

The Democratic party came in, and there were no more grants of land for any such purpose. There it ceased. Not an acre has been granted from that day to this. That act authorized 14,500,000 acres. That expired in 1882.

That was the point I wished to call the attention of the House to, that as soon as the Democrats came into power they instantly introduced a bill declaring the forfeiture of the remaining unearned land grants. During the Forty-seventh Congress no vote was obtained except in reference to a little road in Michigan, known as the Bruló grant. It was the deliberate purpose—I do not say that of gentlemen on the floor—but the record will show there was a deliberate purpose this House should not have the opportunity to vote in reference to forfeiture of these land grants. And it was not until the next Congress, when the House adopted a new rule, that we were able to present and vote on propositions looking to the forfeiture of these unearned land grants.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let me inquire of the gentleman from Indiana whether any law was ever passed in a Republican House looking to the forfeiture of any one of these land grants?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, I think there was not. I voted against all these grants, and therefore have no explanation to make.

Mr. ATKINSON. Had the time for the completion of these roads expired before the end of the Forty-seventh Congress?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The grant to the Northern Pacific expired in 1879, some three or four years before the end of that Congress.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ATKINSON'S amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Transcripts of records and plats: For furnishing transcripts of records and plats and paying therefor, $12,500, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MCKENNA. I move to strike out that paragraph, and I will say candidly that it is for the purpose of enabling me to reply to some remarks made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] while the amendment moved by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] was under consideration.

I think the gentleman's partisan enthusiasm has led him into expressions his cooler judgment would not approve. He made accusations against Mr. PAYSON, of Illinois, in regard to his [Mr. PAYSON'S] position on these land-grant forfeiture bills which in cooler moments he would not have made. If he had reflected one minute he would have found that Mr. PAYSON, of Illinois, does not in any action taken in this Congress or in committee militate against the positions he occupied in this House in previous Congresses.

Sir, I have nothing to do with which party was responsible or which party was not responsible for the railroad land grants. We have come to a point somewhat beyond that, and instead of looking back to inquire into the responsibility for the past, it more concerns us to consider what should be done now—to consider the positions of parties now.

But passing even that, what is Judge PAYSON'S position to-day on this question? Mr. Chairman, several bills have been reported to this House from the Committee on the Public Lands with reference to land grant forfeitures, one of which was reported by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE], forfeiting the Southern Pacific grant; another by the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE], forfeiting the Northern Pacific grant; and still another, a general forfeiture bill, reported by the distinguished chairman of the committee, Judge HOLMAN.

Mr. PAYSON concurred in the bill reported by the gentleman from Missouri; Mr. PAYSON concurred in the bill reported by the gentleman from Arkansas, and Mr. PAYSON did not dissent from the bill reported by the gentleman from Indiana, the distinguished chairman of the committee, but Mr. PAYSON does urge that in view of the fact, Mr. Chairman, that it is impossible, conceded to be impossible, to pass a bill at this session of Congress forfeiting lands lying opposite and contiguous to completed portions of road, as well as forfeiting lands lying opposite and contiguous to the line of road uncompleted——

Mr. HOLMAN. Why impossible?

Mr. MCKENNA. Impossible by reason of the decisions of the Supreme Court declaring the conditions in the granting acts to be conditions subsequent, not conditions precedent. Impossible because these decisions have steadily advanced, and strengthened as they have advanced, to almost positive and absolute decision that Congress has no power to declare a forfeiture of lands lying opposite completed road, although not completed within the time designated in the act. At any rate, respectable legal opinion asserts the decisions of the Supreme Court must be so construed. But, sir, I shall not stop to discuss the legal propositions involved. I state the fact of the decisions and the fact of the opinion of them as possible obstacles to an extreme course. Another fact and obstacle is the opposition of the Senate to forfeiting lands lying opposite completed road.

Mr. HOLMAN. I was told by a Senator but yesterday that he thought the general forfeiture bill would pass the Senate.

Mr. MCKENNA. I hope the gentleman will not occupy my time, as I have but very little, and I want to explain the position of Mr. PAYSON because he is absent. I do not care anything about the political discussion of the subject whatever.

I have heard a debate similar to that which has occurred to-day three times—as aimless and as purposeless as that to-day. I heard in the Forty-ninth Congress, as the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] said he did, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, Mr. Morrison, rebuke the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and his party for trying to make political capital out of the Pacific Railroad land grants for the Democratic party, declaring that they were necessary; that they were the development and issue of the patriotic sentiment of the country in its desire to unite the East and the West and to quicken communication between them.

But, as I have said, I have nothing to do with the political aspects of the question. But I have something to do with the correction of misstatements on the floor of the House, whether they be intentional or unintentional, be they coolly and deliberately made, as I do not think they were in this case, or whether impulsively made, and I am satisfied the gentleman will not adhere to them when the facts are stated to him.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. Now, Mr. Chairman, can we not have a vote on this question.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri, rose.

Mr. MCKENNA. I just want a minute or two more.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MCKENNA. I do not know; only a few minutes.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I will yield to the gentleman two minutes of my time.

Mr. MCKENNA. I will state the position so fairly that I do not think the gentleman will object. I may not get through in the short time allotted to me, but I will endeavor to do so.

Now, sir, to direct myself to the purpose for which I rose, namely, to put Judge PAYSON in a correct attitude before the House and possibly myself. I wish to say that there is not a word uttered by my distinguished friend, Judge PAYSON, or the position taken by him, that militates against his former record that he has made in favor of the forfeiture of these land grants; but he supplements his record by submitting a report candidly reviewing the legal situation and the legislative situation of this subject, and declaring that, in his judgment, as a business proposition, if you mean business, we must concur with the Senate as far as the Senate will concur with the House, and then pass the other bills besides. But let us make sure of that which we can. That is his position, and that is the whole of it; and when the gentleman from Missouri says he [Mr. PAYSON] has deserted the ground he formerly occupied he uses a word of obloquy which is unjust, and in the assertion he makes an accusation which I am satisfied on reflection he will withdraw, because I do not think he could have meant it in an offensive sense, but only in a Pickwickian sense.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I certainly desire to say that I would not make one remark intentionally offensive to the gentleman from Illinois, Judge PAYSON, a gentleman for whom I entertain the kindest feelings and the highest regard; a good man, a good citizen, and a good Representative. What I said was provoked by a remark of the gentleman from Kansas, who stated that all efforts made with a view to forfeit the land grants had originated with the gentleman from Illinois, and that he was really the power that had been pressing them forward, and that it was a Republican measure. I simply desired to say, in response to that, nothing that would be a reflection upon him or offensive to Judge PAYSON or any other gentleman upon this floor; and if I have said anything that can be so construed, which certainly was not my intention, I wish to withdraw it.

What I meant to say was that the Republican Senate had passed a bill forfeiting only such lands as lie adjacent to that portion of the routes of these railroads where no road has been constructed, aggregating a little over 5,000,000 acres of land, all told. The Democratic committee of this House reported a substitute, now pending, to that bill, forfeiting all lands lying coterminous with the roads constructed outside of the limitation fixed by the statute for the construction of the whole road. To that report Judge PAYSON, my friend from California, who has just taken his seat [Mr. MCKENNA] and one other filed a minority report, in which they seek to prevail upon this House to adopt the Senate view and pass the bill forfeiting 5,000,000 acres and virtually confirming all other lands to the railroads.

Mr. MCKENNA. You do not want to misrepresent. You are unwittingly doing so. We are simply saying that as a practical business proposition, in view of what we can do, let us pass that one bill and we will pass the others afterwards.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Is it not true that your minority report, now to be found in the document-room of this House, does advise this House to pass the Senate bill?

Mr. MCKENNA. Certainly it does.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. If you pass the Senate bill, which forfeits only 5,000,000 acres of land, that is an end of the whole business; and I say it is practically an abandonment of the position which gentlemen have occupied here.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. ATKINSON. I renew the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in the course of my remarks a few moments ago I had occasion to say that this policy of granting land for the construction of a railway to the Pacific was non-partisan in its character; that Democrats and Republicans both favored it. I now desire to lay before the House extracts from the platforms of the respective political parties in 1860. The Democratic (Douglas) platform adopted at the convention held in Baltimore June 18, 1860, had this declaration:

Resolved, That one of the necessities of the age, in a military, commercial, and postal point of view, is speedy communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States; and the Democratic party pledge such constitutional Government aid as will insure the construction of a railroad to the Pacific coast at the earliest practicable period.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no land grant there.

Mr. ATKINSON. They pledge constitutional Government aid. They had previously given Government aid in the way of land grants for the construction of canals and for the construction of railroads; these grants of land were masked under a thin trust, but they amounted to the same thing.

Mr. JACKSON. Expressly for railroads.

Mr. ATKINSON. The Democratic (Breckinridge) platform declared:

Whereas one of the greatest necessities of the age in a political, commercial, postal, and military point of view is a speedy communication between the Pacific and Atlantic coasts: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Democratic party do hereby pledge themselves to use every means in their power to secure the passage of some bill to the extent of the constitutional authority of Congress for the construction of a railroad from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean at the earliest practicable moment.

Those are the deliverances of the Democratic parties, each calling itself the Democratic party. The Republican platform of the same year declares:

That a railroad to the Pacific Ocean is imperatively demanded by the interests of the whole country, that the Federal Government ought to render immediate and efficient aid in its construction; and that as a preliminary thereto a daily overland mail should be promptly established.

Here then we have a consensus of opinion, a union of policy among all the then existing political parties. When these bills were introduced into Congress political lines were not drawn, but Democrats and Republicans alike voted for and against them. I believe it was a wise policy; that those men made no mistake when they did this thing. It was a grant only of alternate sections of land to the railroad companies along the line of the railroads. What was reserved to the Government was increased in value twenty or thirty fold. More than that, it rendered all of the vast region west of the Missouri accessible to settlement. More than that still, it cemented the Union of the States, uniting the Pacific with the Atlantic by an iron bond which will be indissoluble forever.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that the Union Pacific Railroad grant stands upon an entirely different footing from any other ever made by Congress. It was made in the midst of a great conflict, and the importance of easy and rapid communication between the Pacific States and the Atlantic States was known to all men and recognized by all. At the then time I did not myself vote for that bill, for the simple reason that, in my judgment, imperatively necessary as was the construction of the road, the grant in bonds for that purpose was ample, and the grant of 27,000,000 acres of land was never justifiable or excusable.

The grant in money was known at the time to be sufficient. It was known then to those who understood the subject as well as it was known in 1864, when the real act was passed authorizing the construction of the Union Pacific Railroad. By that time it was known to all men, because several successive surveys had been made, that the grant of $64,000,000 in bonds was ample, and that in view of that fact a bonus of 27,000,000 acres of land was without justification or excuse. And, sir, it affords me a great deal of pleasure to recall the fact that foremost among the men who most strenuously opposed that measure, on account of the land grant and on the ground of the palpable injustice done to the Government in giving the corporation mortgage an inside position as against the Government mortgage, Hon. E. B. Washburne, then a Representative from the State of Illinois, was most conspicuous. Basing his opposition on the two grounds I have stated, he led the opposition in this House when the measure was finally forced through at midnight. Those two measures must be considered together. When the last bill passed, that of 1864, the law under which the Union Pacific Railroad was constructed, while Mr. Washburne led the opposition, Thaddeus Stevens led those in favor of its passage. It passed at the hour of midnight, and nearly the entire negative vote was cast by the representatives of the Democratic party here. I must state that fact, while at the same time I mention with great satisfaction the fact that Mr. Washburne—the most valuable member of this House I have ever known—was the most strenuous and active and able in trying to defeat the measure upon the grounds I have mentioned.

Mr. ATKINSON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether he now asserts that those land grants were Republican legislation?

Mr. HOLMAN. I must say that, taking into consideration all that had occurred prior to 1861 and all that had occurred afterwards, as a matter of fact, it was a Republican policy.

Mr. ATKINSON. Was not the policy of the Democratic party upon this subject outlined in their platform of 1860?

Mr. HOLMAN. But that had no reference to a land grant.

Mr. ATKINSON. It speaks of constitutional aid.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, even in 1860 if a proposition had been made before the Democratic convention, or even before the Republican convention, to appropriate public lands to a great railroad corporation it could not have been carried. The influence of the movement of 1852 of the free-soilers was then fresh in the country, the first movement of the Free-Soil party at Pittsburgh, in favor of a policy securing the whole of the public lands for homesteads.

Mr. ATKINSON. The Democratic party pledged itself to give such constitutional aid as would insure the construction of the railroad.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly, but that did not imply a grant of land.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Did it imply a grant of money?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it did imply a grant of money or credit.

Mr. ATKINSON. Is there any difference constitutionally between a grant of land and a grant of money?

Mr. HOLMAN. We are not discussing the question of constitutional power. Both parties were committed to that. The Whigs made such grants; the Democrats have done it, and the Republicans have done it; but the two old parties did it only in limited degree, not with a regular and definite system. The largest grant made by either of them was only three and one-half million acres, the grant to Illinois.

Mr. ATKINSON. Then the difference was only in degree?

Mr. HOLMAN. The difference was in the degree in this, that with the two old parties it was not a policy, while it became the policy of the Republican party from the beginning of its power and continued until the party declined and the Democrats controlled the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment be closed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. ATKINSON. I withdraw that amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SURVEYING THE PUBLIC LANDS.

For surveys and resurveys of public lands, $100,000, at rates not exceeding $9 per lineal mile for standard and meander lines, $7 for township, and $5 for section lines: Provided, That in expending this appropriation preference shall be given in favor of surveying land occupied, or to be occupied, in whole or in part, by actual settlers. And of the sum hereby appropriated not exceeding $20,000, may be expended for the examination of surveys in the field, to test the accuracy of the work, and to prevent payment for fraudulent and imperfect surveys returned by deputy surveyors; and for inspecting mineral deposits, coal fields, and timber districts, and for making such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to offer an amendment to perfect this paragraph.

Mr. HERMANN. I wish to make a point of order upon the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon will state his point of order.

Mr. HERMANN. I submit to the Chair that this paragraph is a change of existing law, and therefore in violation of the rules of the House. In support of this proposition I call the attention of the Chair to sections 2404 and 2405 of the Revised Statutes, which read as follows:

SEC. 2404. The Commissioner of the General Land Office may authorize, in his discretion, public lands in Oregon, densely covered with forests or thick undergrowth, to be surveyed at augmented rates, not exceeding $18 per mile for standard parallels, $15 for townships, and $12 for section lines.

SEC. 2405. The Commissioner of the General Land Office, in his discretion, may hereafter authorize public lands in California and in Washington Territory, densely covered with forest or thick undergrowth, to be surveyed at augmented rates, not exceeding $18 per linear mile for standard parallels, $16 for townships, and $14 for section lines.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman state the date of the law to which he has referred?

Mr. HERMANN. The first of the sections I have just read was enacted July 15, 1870, and the second June 10, 1872; they are both embraced in the Revised Statutes, edition of 1878.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my proposition is that the rates proposed to be allowed in the paragraph read by the Clerk for surveys of the public lands are in effect a restriction upon the rates already allowed by existing law as embraced in the two sections which I have just read from the Revised Statutes. I do not think it necessary to occupy time in arguing this question, but submit it for the decision of the Chair upon the provisions of law which I have cited.

Mr. RANDALL. The act to which the gentleman has referred in reference to rates of payment for surveys was, if I remember rightly, passed in 1871. I think from the time of the Forty-seventh Congress there have been continuously allowed by law different rates, the same rates provided for in the pending clause of the bill. This clause is in the nature of a limitation upon the expenditure of money, and is, I submit, in order. I think we have had rulings to this effect.

Mr. BLOUNT. And did not the appropriation bill which originally provided for the present rates repeal any conflicting laws on the same subject?

Mr. HERMANN. I can find no change of statutory law in reference to this particular provision. I wish to say in addition that in other appropriation bills reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania himself, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the rates allowed have been in accordance with the statutory law, except in the Forty-ninth Congress, and now in this Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. I may have been wrong in my statement as to the action of the Forty-seventh Congress. But at any rate the clause in this bill is a limitation upon the expenditure of the money appropriated, and, according to rulings heretofore made, is in order.

Mr. HERMANN. The gentleman will permit me to say it is not only that, but it is a restriction as to the rates provided by law, and which shall be paid by the public land office for surveys in certain portions of the country, my own State in particular.

Mr. RANDALL. It has always been held that where there was a statute, for instance, fixing a salary, if Congress did not appropriate the full amount there would exist a claim against the Government, unless there should be incorporated in the bill some such phrase as "in full compensation;" but where any such language has been incorporated it has always been recognized as a limitation. The language in this paragraph is in fact a limitation on this appropriation, providing that it shall not be expended by the payment of higher rates than those fixed in the paragraph.

Mr. HERMANN. Does not that in itself constitute a change of existing law?

Mr. RYAN. I wish to say to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] that this bill fails to make any appropriation for the class of surveys to which the provisions of law read by him refer. Therefore, in my judgment, the paragraph is not subject to the point of order. The gentleman's remedy is to offer an amendment to appropriate money for that class of surveys.

Mr. HERMANN. Under the statute law, it is provided that as to standard and meander lines the price paid shall not exceed $18 per mile, while under the terms of the pending paragraph the rate of payment is limited to $9. Surely the bill makes a very radical change in the existing law. The language of the bill is:

For surveys and resurveys of public lands $100,000, at rates not exceeding $9 per lineal mile for standard and meander lines, $7 for township, and $5 for section lines.

The provision of the Statutes at Large is that—

The Commissioner of the General Land Office may authorize in his discretion public lands in Oregon, densely covered with forests or thick undergrowth, to be surveyed at augmented rates not exceeding $18 per mile, etc.

It is therefore plain that the provision of the bill is a restriction upon the payment of the rates allowed by existing law, and hence a change. Therefore I submit that the clause is out of order as violative of the rule.

Mr. RANDALL. The language in this bill is the same as that in the bill of last year applying to the current fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman affirm that the language in the two cases is identical?

Mr. RANDALL. It is, word for word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HERMANN. Then I desire, as my only remedy, to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon will withhold his amendment until an amendment sent to the desk by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has been read and acted on.

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. RANDALL, as follows:

In line 7, page 48, strike out the word "land" and insert "townships," and in the same line strike out the words "or to be occupied."

Mr. RANDALL'S amendment was adopted.

Mr. HERMANN. I offer the following amendment to the paragraph under consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "lines," in line 5, insert "except that as to mountainous lands or lands covered with dense timber or underbrush the rate shall not exceed $13 for standard and meander lines, $9 for township, and $7 for section lines."

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think we want to survey that kind of land at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not that amendment subject to a point of order?

Mr. HERMANN. I ask to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will state his point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that amendment changes existing law. I ask it may be read again.

Mr. HERMANN. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to withdraw his point of order until I can be heard on the proposition itself.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will withhold my point of order so the gentleman from Oregon may be heard.

Mr. HERMANN. In the few remarks, Mr. Chairman, which I desire to submit on the pending proposition, I wish especially to appeal to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I submit to him and to the gentlemen who honor me with their attention that so far as Oregon, Nevada, Washington Territory, and I may say so far as all the Pacific Slope is concerned west of the summit of the Rocky Mountains, very few lands will be surveyed hereafter under the limited appropriation provided for in this paragraph. That is certain, and for the simple reason that it can not be done, and the evidence is before the House, conclusively showing that owing to the character of the country now remaining unsurveyed, the land being largely mountainous, with heavy undergrowth of brush, it is impossible to get surveys extended at the limited rates provided in the present bill. Surveyors-general of the States of Oregon, California, Nevada, and of the Territories on the Pacific coast have at different times during the past few years urgently appealed to the Department for a change of rates. They show that competent surveyors will not take contracts for surveys on this class of lands at existing rates. In support of the position taken by them, and as a further argument for my amendment, I desire to read to the committee from the recent report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office on this subject:

The estimates of the surveyors-general submitted with their annual reports amount to $518,640. My estimate of a little more than one-half of this sum may properlybe increa sed in the discretion of Congress, but should not be reduced. Nearly all the easily surveyable lands were surveyed or returned as surveyed in former yearsunde r larger rates of compensation than now prevail, leaving the difficult and expens ve lands unsurveyed. It is not possible to survey mountainous lands at existing rates. Yet such lands, within railroad land-grant limits at least, must be surveyed under positive law. An attempt made to expend the appropriation of the last fiscal year chiefly in Montana, within the limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad, failed for want of bidders for the contract at the rates provided by law. Much of this class of work will have to be done by special contract or at per diem rates, in which some augmentation in the scale of prices is unavoidable.

To meet this emergency I have recommended the restoration of augmented rates for heavily timbered or mountainous lands, limited, however, to $13 per mile for standard and meander lines, $11 for township, and $7 for section lines. The Revised Statute rates are: For Oregon, $18, $15, and $12, and for California and Washington, $18 and $14 (sections 2404 and 2405, Revised Statutes). I have also recommended that the provisions of section 2411 now applicable to Oregon and California, authorizing compensation for surveys in discretionary cases by the day instead of by the mile, be made general.

I desire to read still further from this report what is urged by the Commissioner in reference to the State of Oregon:

About two-thirds of the area of Oregon have been surveyed. Further surveys are needed to keep up with the progress of settlement. In many instances the lands settled upon are in small valleys, where the greater part of the land is mountainous and unfit for cultivation, or else containing more or less timber. Some of these lands are rough country, covered with dense undergrowth, so that no competent surveyor will attempt to make the surveys at the rates allowed by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HERMANN. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of reading to the House the communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a petition from all the district land officers in Oregon, asking appropriations for extending the surveys of public lands in Oregon for the fiscal year 1889, and for an increase in rates as to mountainous and timber-covered lands.

The Clerk read as follows:

Letter from the Secretary of the Interior transmitting a petition from the district land officers in Oregon asking appropriations for extending the surveys of public lands in Oregon for the fiscal year 1889.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 22, 1888.

SIR: In compliance with a request of the Actining Commissioner of the General Land Office, I transmit herewith a copy of a petition of the district land officers in the State of Oregon relative to the necessity for a liberal appropriation for extending the public surveys in the said State during the ensuing fiscal year.

Very respectfully, WM. F. VILAS, Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

[Here the hammer fell.]

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

We, the undersigned, district officers of the General Land Office, respectfully represent that the demands for surveys of public lands in the State of Oregon are urgent, and daily becoming more imperative because of the insufficient appropriations for the current and past fiscal years; that the maximum rate per mile now allowed by law for surveying is inadequate for such service in this district on account of the dense undergrowth that covers a large part of the surveyable lands in the State. Nearly all the petitions asking for surveys come from localities where the lands are more or less mountainous, or covered with timber or dense undergrowth, making surveying difficult and expensive, and unless the rates for this class of work are very materially increased competent surveyors can not be found to execute the surveys that are actually necessary in the interest of settlers.

For the relief of the settlers and in the interest of this State w e do most respectfully ask your favorable consideration, to the end that (as recommended by the honorable Commissioner General Land Office in his last annual report) ample appropriation may be made for the surveying service for the ensuing fiscal year, and the rates therefor be fixed high enough to provide for honest surveys by reliable surveyors, so that settlers can not be called upon to contribute, directly or indirectly, towards the expense of such surveys; and we, your petitioners, will ever pray.

DOUGLAS W. TAYLOR,
United States Surveyor-General for Oregon.
W. T. BURNEY,
Register, United States Land Office, Oregon City, Oregon.
B. F. BURCH,
Receiver, United States Land Office, Oregon City, Oregon.
CHAS. W. JOHNSTON,

A. C. JONES,
Receiver, United States Land Office, Roseburgh, Oregon.
W. M. TOWNSEND,
Receiver, United States Land Office, Lakeview, Oregon.
A. F. SNELLING,

J. T. OUTHOUSE,
Receiver, United States Land Office, La Grande, Oregon.

Mr. RANDALL. This is an appeal for higher pay to certain surveyors, and does not involve any real wants of the actual settlers; as in fact for that portion of the land proposed to be surveyed there is not much demand at any rate, or very little demand from persons wishing to acquire actual settlement. I hope there will be no change in the law.

Mr. HERMANN. I appeal once more to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that he permit this amount to be increased; it is totally inadequate. I can assure him it is necessary. The increase is demanded by the great emigration which is now setting in from all parts of the Union and seeking homes even in the remotest places—in the small valleys, along the foot-hills, on the narrow creek bottoms, and even on the steep mountain sides, for in the western portion of the Coast Range even the declivities of the highest hills are susceptible of cultivation, and especially in dairy grasses which the humid atmosphere keeps verdant in the dryest seasons.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that in California the demand for the survey of public lands is very urgent for the reason that it has been found that the lands on the mountain slopes now covered by brush and timber are the most valuable lands that we have for vineyards and fruit-growing purposes, being lands lying on the lower or foot hills of the mountains. This demand has been expressed to the Commissioner of the General Land Office by the people interested in taking up these lands, and he has conveyed the request to Congress in the report which has been read from by the gentleman from Oregon, and I desire to call attention to that part of the report which refers to California.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office says:

The greater part of unsurveyed land in California that is now regarded as surveyable is considered very valuable, consisting of brush-hills producing the best vines and choicest fruits, and great demand exists for surveys of such lands. The surveyor-general urges that higher rates for surveys be allowed in order to prevent fraud and collusion induced by the surveyors relying upon interested parties for assistance when the meager rates for surveys are insufficient.

Now, the surveyor-general of California, in his report to the Commissioner of the General Land Office (and in a supplemental report) calls attention to the necessity for increased appropriations for these surveys. He says:

I respectfully urge in the interest of the many settlers, of those contemplating settlement but who are deterred from so doing on account of trouble in obtaining titles, and in the interest of good government that I may be allowed to survey such lands during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, as are settled upon and are surveyable.

The great immigration into California during the past twelve months and the prospect of a still greater number of people coming hither this year to make this State their homes would seem to be sufficient inducement for the Department to order such surveys of the unsurveyed public lands as are surveyable.

Mr. Chairman, as stated before, all the lands that are now surveyable are lands which will require more labor, more service, and larger expenditures than the surveys heretofore made. I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon. It is necessary to obtain proper surveys of the public lands in California.

Mr. TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I rise to confirm the statements just made by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN], the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], and the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office touching the inadequacy of the present prices allowed for public surveys in the mountainous and timbered regions. I am advised by the surveyor-general of Montana that if the present prices obtain we can not expect any considerable amount of the land grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad in Montana to be surveyed. The people of Montana have a direct interest in this amendment. I had intended to offer it myself.

The Forty-ninth Congress passed a law whereby we could tax the lands of that company as rapidly as surveyed, whether the company had the patents to the lands or not. In other words, it provided in effect that a failure on the part of the railroad company to pay the costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying the lands as provided by the charter should not operate to defeat the collection of taxes thereon by the Territory. We are vitally interested in this amendment. I ought to have said in advance that out of the $50,000 appropriated for public surveys last year Montana received $20,000 in the apportionment, every cent of which went back into the Treasury, because no contracts could be let at present prices.

The Northern Pacific Railroad Company grant in Montana amounts to 20,000,000 acres of land. Under present law they pay upon about 5,000,000 acres, that amount, I believe, having been surveyed and certified to it under the grant, leaving about 15,000,000 acres unsurveyed and upon which no taxes are paid. These lands are worth all the way from 50 cents to $30 an acre. Bonds for deeds have been given by the company in many instances, and the lands are cultivated and improved by the purchaser. The company, its property, and employés are entitled to and receive the protection of our laws. The tramps, malefactors, and lawbreakers following in its trail are made charges upon our counties, and we demand that it shall pay its just proportion of the public burdens; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania says it is time enough to provide for this when the company pays the 10 cents an acre for surveying the lands.

Mr. RANDALL. Whenever that road will agree to pay for the surveys of the land which the Government gave them, then I am perfectly willing to appropriate the amount of money necessary to survey them, but not before.

Mr. TOOLE. That, sir, is the point that the bill referred to as having passed the Forty-ninth Congress designed to cover. The company claim that their grant was in præsenti; that they have a perfect equitable title, and that nothing but the naked legal title, the mere evidence of the grant was in the Government. Holding to this theory it is plain that the railroad company would never pay the cost of surveys and take out patents; certainly not as long as they could evade the payment of taxes—hence the necessity of the law of the Forty-ninth Congress, the proposed amendment, and an adequate appropriation.

If there are gentlemen here who still cling to the hope of forfeiting the grant of the Northern Pacific, I want to say that the taxation of the grant by the Territories in no wise commits the Government against the forfeiture. Section 3 of the act authorizing taxation upon the surveyed land expressly reserves the right to forfeit.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, pass this amendment, it will insure the survey and taxation of these lands, it will add $10,000,000 at once to our assessable valuation. We need it to build school-houses, colleges, and public institutions. The munificent dowry of public lands given us by the Federal Government is of no avail until we become a State.

For four years we have been appealing for constitutional government, for the benefits of statehood, and a closer connection with the American Union. We have appealed in vain. If we are to be kept out of the Union longer, give us all proper facilities to collect all the revenue to which we are justly entitled. With an ample appropriation to survey all our lands, and a fair price paid for the surveys, we will have money enough from surplus revenue to provide ourselves with the best educational facilities, as well as all other necessary public institutions.

It has been claimed, sir, that the land grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad was subject to forfeiture; and this House at frequent sessions has passed bills looking to that end. The act by which we propose to collect these taxes provides, in section 3—

> That this act shall not affect the right of the Government to declare or enforce a forfeiture of any land so granted, but all the rights of the United States to said lands or to any interest therein shall be and remain as if this act had not passed, except as to the lien mentioned in the first section hereof.

That gives the Government of the United States the right to buy these lands in when they are sold for taxes, in the event the railroad declines or fails to pay for them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is a simple act of justice. If this money is required to be paid out by the railroad company to the United States, so that it will not be at the expense of a single dollar for the cost of these surveys, and if the lands are ultimately forfeited to the United States, the lands are surveyed as they ought to be surveyed, so that they can go into the public market. We need them. There are 20,000,000 acres of these lands, which, if estimated at the moderate rate of 50 cents an acre, would yield to the Territory of Montana $10,000,000. We need the money to build school-houses, colleges, and seminaries of learning. Under Congressional enactment a munificent dowry of public land has been awarded to us for school purposes, but we do not get the land until we shall have been admitted into the Union, so that so far as that dowry is concerned it is of no benefit to us now. We have made repeated calls for constitutional government and for admission into the Union. Our calls have been in vain. We ask now simply that the land in the Territory of Montana that is claimed, dominated, and controlled by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company shall be made to respond to its just proportion of the public burden exactly as every citizen is made to respond.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Have you offered an amendment touching that?

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment which is offered now is to raise the rate of payment for the survey, and the gentleman from Montana [Mr. TOOLE] advocates it on the ground that he wants to induce the surveyors to go forward and survey all of the Northern Pacific land grant, so that the Territory of Montana shall be enabled to assess that property and secure the payment of taxes by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company into the Territorial treasury.

Mr. HERMANN. I think the gentleman from Montana omitted to state that in all sections inside of that line settled upon by actual settlers they are interested in this survey equally with the railroad.

Mr. TOOLE. Bonds have been given in the case of individuals.

Mr. RANDALL. That applies to the Territory of Montana; but it is not wisdom on the part of the United States to enforce that mode of survey at that increased rate. The price we do pay is adequate to the requirements of homesteaders. In this connection let me say that the committee have doubled the amount for the survey, so that the whole of that reservation in Northern Montana may be thrown open to settlement by survey, as provided in this act.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Permit me to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that I am inclined to think perhaps he does not appreciate the gravity of this matter. These lands while the property of the railroads are exempt from taxation; but in order to evade this taxation the lands are sold, a contract given, and the money paid, but no deed made; and as I understand the gentleman from that Territory [Mr. TOOLE], in order to have this specific it is necessary to have the lands surveyed, so that there can be an exact description of the land. That these lands should be taxed as soon as they are sold is a fact that must be clear to any one who examines it, and keeping the lands covered up in this way is one of the most grievous acts of injustice in the West. It amounts to holding the property of a private individual exempt from his share of taxation, because the land stands nominally in the name of the railroad company.

Mr. RANDALL. Then you would be willing to pay the exorbitant rate?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I would be willing to pay whatever is necessary in order to secure their survey, in order to make the landowners pay their share of the taxes. I would pay whatever is necessary in order to reach that end.

Mr. HERMANN. I would like to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] inform us as to the necessity for putting the limit in. Why not leave it to the discretion and judgment of the Department?

Mr. RANDALL. Because we found in the past they were paying largely in excess of what the Government should pay; and therefore not the Committee on Appropriations, but Congress, fixed these rates which we are endeavoring as members of the Committee on Appropriations to adhere to.

Mr. HERMANN. Will the gentleman indulge me for one question? If the gentleman from Pennsylvania is satisfied from all the evidence before us, and from the recommendations and appeals of the various Departments, that surveys can not be extended over the lands of my State or over other large portions of the Pacific coast at the present rates, then I ask him whether he will insist upon those rates and refuse to agree to the larger amount proposed in the amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. The entire amount of the current appropriation, $50,000, has been expended at these rates.

Mr. HERMANN. I desire to correct the gentleman. The larger portion of the amount allowed for the State of Oregon remains to the credit of that State unexpended, for the reason, as the surveyor-general informs me, that he can not get competent surveyors to perform the work at those rates.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not recollect how much was allotted to Oregon.

Mr. HERMANN. I think there was about $10,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I think not.

Mr. MORROW. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to the report of the Secretary of the Interior——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to state to the committee that I indorse every word that has been said upon this subject by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] and the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW]. I claim to be tolerably familiar with Oregon and also with California, and I know, and it is well known generally, that the lines can not be run or the surveys made there for the rates proposed in this bill. For that reason, sir, I hope the amendment will be adopted. We have between three and four million acres of lands in our State that will have to be resurveyed because of a defective or bogus survey. We find that the foothills and where the chaparral grows is the finest fruit and grain land in the State. That land is unsurveyed in several counties of my State, and it is necessary that it should be surveyed in order that settlers may know where their homesteads are.

I went to the committee and tried to point this out to the chairman, and to show him the great need there was for a liberal appropriation for these surveys, and I say now that we might as well stop the work altogether and close up the surveyor's office in California, as to attempt to make surveys there at the rates named in this bill. If this committee choose to prevent the bringing into market and into use and under taxation all these valuable lands in California, in Nevada, and in great portions of Montana and Idaho and Washington Territory, all they have to do is to adopt this bill as it stands.

There is a great immigration to the Pacific slope at this time. I trust the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is not jealous because we are getting a good deal of immigration from his State. [Laughter.] We invite them to come; we want them to come, but when they do come there and settle on a piece of land we want to have it surveyed so that they will know the metes and bounds of their property. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. TOOLE. I move to strike out the last word. I want the committee to understand that out of the $50,000 which was appropriated last session, $20,000 was awarded to the Territory of Montana, every dollar of which was covered back into the Treasury of the United States simply because there could not be found any contractor who was willing to take the contract to do the work at the maximum rate fixed by the appropriation bill. So that we did not get any service at all in the Territory last year, although we had $20,000—two-fifths of the whole amount—allotted to us. The reason I have given was stated in the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office by the surveyor-general, and I made known, or attempted to make known, the facts to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. Ten thousand dollars for Oregon, $20,000 for Montana, $10,000 of the $50,000 for a specific object stated in act leaves only $10,000 for all other points in the country.

Mr. HOLMAN. I made the point of order on this amendment that it proposed new legislation, but I wish to suggest that so far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to withdraw the point of order if it can be understood that the surveys will be confined to lands suitable for agriculture. The most expensive lands to survey are the timber lands, and I do not think they ought to be surveyed at all until we have a better land system than we have now.

I think that while such is the state of the law that parties can enter the lands almost without restriction at $2.50 an acre and without settlement, these surveys ought not to be made. If it could be agreed that the surveys shall be confined to lands adapted to agriculture, I, for one, should be inclined to favor a policy which would place at the disposal of the Commissioner of the General Land Office a larger sum of money.

Mr. HERMANN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, as I understand, proposes just such an amendment—that surveys shall be made of such lands only as are fit for actual settlement.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, that does not exactly meet my suggestion.

I wish to suggest that the paragraph might be amended so as to provide that in extending the appropriation it shall be confined to lands adapted to cultivation. In that event the discretion might be safely left as to the roads which should be paid for surveys.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to explain, if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to add after the word "settler" the following words:

And the surveys shall be confined to lands adapted to agriculture and lines of reservations.

I do not want timber lands surveyed.

Mr. RANDALL. I well remember the former law. Prior to the estimates for the fiscal year 1887 there was a provision which permitted higher payment. I think it was in amount what is provided in the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon for timber and mountainous lands. In the estimates for 1887, submitted by General Sparks, the words "mountain and timber lands at rates" thereafter dropped out of the estimates, and left the rates as fixed in this bill to be the rates for lands of all descriptions. Let me read from the law. It is as follows:

Except that the Commissioner of the General Land Office may allow for the survey of standard and meander lines through lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth, a sum not exceeding $13 per linear mile for standard lines, $11 for township, and $7 for section lines, or where for any cause not provided for by law, in Oregon or Washington Territory, he is unable to get the necessary surveys made at the rates aforesaid, he may allow a sum not exceeding $12 per linear mile for standard lines, $10 for township lines, and $6 for section lines.

Mr. HERMANN. Whatever may have been the position of the Department heretofore upon this subject so far as the Forty-ninth Congress was concerned when the first deviation was brought in the appropriation bill, yet at the present time you have before the committee an urgent appeal from the Department asking rates be restored as to mountainous and timber lands.

Mr. RANDALL. As I have stated, in the estimates of General Sparks for 1887 these dropped out. Like many other reforms of his the Land Office seems to have adopted other methods and gone in another direction.

Mr. HERMANN. That is not so, so far as Oregon is concerned, because the larger portion of the appropriation for that State still remains unexpended because it has been found impossible to get any surveyors to make surveys at the rates provided.

Mr. TOOLE. Every particle of the appropriation so far as Montana is concerned has lapsed.

Mr. HERMANN. The statement which I had read showed exactly the existing condition of facts in reference to this whole matter.

Mr. RANDALL. In the statement made by the Delegates of the Territories and by the gentleman from Oregon I am willing, so far as I am concerned individually, to give discretion to the Secretary of the Interior in this connection, provided the rates allowed shall not exceed the rates fixed under the law for the character of survey.

Mr. HERMANN. That is satisfactory.

Mr. MACDONALD. Let the gentleman from Oregon prepare his amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the pending amendment, moved by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN], be read.

Mr. HERMANN'S amendment was again read, as follows:

After the word "lines," in line 5, insert "except that as to mountainous lands or lands covered with dense timber or underbrush the rate shall not exceed $13 for standard and meander lines, $11 for township, and $7 for section lines."

Mr. RANDALL. I would rather have the language of the old law, except that I would make the Cabinet officer responsible. So it will read: That the Secretary of the Interior may allow for survey of standard and meander lines the rate provided under the old law.

Mr. HERMANN. My amendment covers that.

Mr. RANDALL. The language I have read is in the language of the old law. The language of the gentleman's amendment is the same except——

Mr. HERMANN. I propose to add the words "subject to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

The Clerk read the amendment as modified, as follows:

After the word "lines," in line 5, insert:
"Except as to mountainous lands, or lands covered with dense timber or underbrush, the rates shall not exceed $13 per mile for standard and meander lines, $11 for township, and $7 for section lines, subject to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that, in view of the debate.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to know the effect of the words "subject to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. I think the word "approval" would be better.

Mr. RANDALL. Or I will say "subject to the order of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. HOLMAN. Or "approval."

Mr. RANDALL. Well, "subject to approval." I will modify it in that manner.

Mr. RICE. I object to it as new law, and I make the point of order upon it. I ask the Clerk to read sections 2404 and 2405 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. RANDALL. There has been debate for some time on this amendment.

Mr. McCREARY. I make the point of order that the gentleman who now makes the point of order is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that the gentleman from Indiana had made a point of order originally, and indicated that he would withdraw it on certain conditions, which conditions have been considered in this colloquy.

Mr. McCREARY. I was not aware of that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say now, in view of the remarks of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations on this subject, that if the following words be added I shall be very willing to withdraw the point of order I have made. My object is to prevent surveys of timber lands at $2.50 an acre, now being so rapidly exhausted without settlement; and would ask the insertion of the words, "and shall be confined to lands adapted to agriculture."

Mr. RANDALL. What is the suggestion the gentleman makes?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will send the amendment to the desk.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania think that would carry out the purpose he has in view?

Mr. RANDALL. My wish originally in this regard, I will state, was not to pay any more money for the surveys of any land, no matter what the character of it should be. But there is a sentiment, it seems, here that makes it plain that no restriction should prevent the survey of certain lands necessary to be surveyed in some of the Territories, known as mountainous and timber lands, and I am willing to throw the responsibility for this work upon the Secretary of the Interior, in whom I have the fullest confidence.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is what I understood to be the purpose of the gentleman; but I was apprehensive that the change here did more than that.

Mr. RANDALL. If it does more than that I do not agree to it. If the gentleman thinks that any other conditions should be applied, I am willing to insert them, or withdraw consent to the amendment if it is objectionable.

Mr. BLOUNT. It seemed to me from a casual reading of the amendment that it goes beyond the scope the gentleman intended.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not beyond the rates fixed.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let it be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not ascertained as yet whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania is satisfied with the other provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification proposed by the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "settlement," in line 8 of the proviso, insert: "and shall be confined to lands adapted to agriculture and lines of resurveys."

Mr. RANDALL. Now read the paragraph as proposed to be amended, or as it will read if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveys and resurveys of public lands, $100,000, at rates not exceeding $9 per lineal mile for standard and meander lines, $7 for township, and $5 for section lines, except that as to mountainous lands, or lands covered with dense timber or underbrush the rates shall not exceed $13 per mile for standard and meander lines, $11 for township, and $7 for section lines, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, etc., That in expending this—

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to change that to make it subject to he approval of the Secretary of the Interior. I do not think the gentleman will object to that.

Mr. HERMANN. I do not object to it.

Mr. RANDALL. Or perhaps it would be better to state it in this form: "when made upon the order of the Secretary of the Interior." I shall move to add those words.

Mr. MORROW. Is it the purpose of the gentleman to graduate the pay for the surveys per mile according to the difficulty of the survey?

Mr. RANDALL. I want wherever we raise the price that the Secretary of the Interior shall be responsible for the increased pay.

Mr. MORROW. I understand the amendment to have that effect. He will order certain surveys, and then will have to pay the sum fixed by this amendment. I suppose the purpose of the amendment was to give the Secretary of the Interior authority to graduate the pay for the survey according to the difficulty, or what he thought the price should be.

Mr. HERMANN. That is the intention. If the Secretary of the Interior is satisfied that it is mountainous land, if the surveyor-general of Oregon or California calls for the survey, then it is his duty to fix the rate according to the conditions of the amendment.

Mr. MORROW. There will be two rates of survey, then; one fixed by the law, and one by the amendment, and nothing between.

Mr. HERMANN. That is correct.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the amendment be read.

The amendment as modified was again reported.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the words be added "where the survey is made."

Mr. MORROW. That is all right.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the first clause of the proviso be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That in expending this appropriation preference shall be given in favor of surveying townships occupied in whole or in part by actual settlers, and shall be confined to lands adapted to agriculture and lines of resurveys.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] if he is now content with this amendment?

Mr. HERMANN. As I understand it, it fixes the particular price which has been named for the survey of mountainous or thickly timbered land subject to the discretion of the Interior Department.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to go back and offer an amendment to the bill providing for a post-office building at Hoboken, N. J. A bill came to the House yesterday signed by the President authorizing an appropriation of $60,000 to complete the building. I ask the usual appropriation of one-half, $30,000, to purchase the site and commence the building.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman indicate the page?

Mr. McADOO. Page 4, after line 3.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say there are nine buildings in a like situation provided for in this bill, and it would be unjust to the gentleman from New Jersey and to those he represents if I prevented the Hoboken building from being added to the nine.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman withdraw his amendment until the previous amendment is completed?

Mr. McADOO. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]? If not, it will be considered as adopted.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] as modified by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. RICE] withdraw his point of order?

Mr. MORROW. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. RICE. I withdraw the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McADOO] asks unanimous consent to return to page 4 of the bill and offer the amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, after line 3, insert:

"For post-office at Hoboken, N. J.: For purchase of site and commencement of building, $30,000."

Mr. RANDALL. The limit for this building is $60,000. Under the provisions of this bill, if it becomes a law, the appropriation for the current year would be $30,000, with power to the Treasury Department to contract for the whole amount under the limit for completion of the building.

The CHAIRMAN. This paragraph can only be returned to by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I want to ask a question before consent is given. Has the bill been passed for the erection of this building?

Mr. McADOO. Yes; and signed by the President.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Then I have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. McMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, returned to the House the bill (S. 2613) to amend an act approved June 15, 1882, changing the boundaries of the fourth collection district of Virginia; said bill having been recalled from the House on the 17th of April last.

A bill (S. 3135) granting an increase of pension to Eliza J. Alexander; and A bill (S. 3183) granting a pension to James Parker.

The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House, under its previous order, took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m. The House was called to order by Mr. MCMILLIN, as Speaker pro tempore, who directed the reading of the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., June 20, 1888.

SIR: Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN is designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House this evening.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk House of Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order under which this evening's session of the House is held.

The Clerk read as follows:

WEDNESDAY, June 20, 1888.

Ordered, That the House take a recess at 5 o'clock this afternoon until 8 o'clock this evening, which evening session shall be set apart for the consideration of bills of the House and Senate providing for the erection of bridges over navigable streams, to the consideration of which no objection shall be made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that most of these bills are in Committee of the Whole, and it will be necessary either to move to go into Committee of the Whole or to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the bills.

Mr. CRISP. These bills are on the Private Calendar, and whatever course will most facilitate the business will be most agreeable to me, whether the bills be considered in Committee of the Whole or in the House as in Committee of the Whole. I ask unanimous consent that the bills for the consideration of which this evening session is held shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, unless some gentleman objects, I will ask that the reading of these bills at length be dispensed with. I will state to the House that they all contain the usual provisions, and all meet with the approval of the Secretary of War. If there is any omission of any of the provisions or safeguards they should contain, it is due to an oversight, but I do not think that will be found to be the fact. Therefore, as the bills are quite long I ask unanimous consent that they be read only by title.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Amendments reported from the Committee on Commerce to bills of the following titles were severally agreed to, and the bills as amended were respectively ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 2170) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge at or near Burlington, Iowa;

A bill (H. R. 5096) authorizing the construction of a bridge across Flint River, in the State of Georgia;

A bill (H. R. 4759) authorizing the Little Rock and Alexandria Railway Company to build certain bridges in the State of Arkansas;

A bill (H. R. 5095) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Ockmulgee River in the State of Georgia; and

A bill (H. R. 2807) authorizing the Columbia River Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Columbia River between the State of Oregon and the Territory of Washington.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the votes by which the bills were severally passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI, NEAR CLINTON, IOWA.

The next bridge bill on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. 6610) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River, at or near Clinton, Iowa, reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been reported favorably from the Committee on Commerce, but pending its consideration here the Senate have passed a similar bill, which also has been referred to the Committee on Commerce and reported favorably to the House. It is Senate bill No. 1882, and I ask that that bill be now taken up and substituted for the House bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Senate bill (S. 1882) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Clinton, Iowa, was accordingly taken up, and the amendment recommended by the Committee on Commerce was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAYES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The House bill H. R. 6610 was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE WICHITA RIVER, ARKANSAS.

The next bridge bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 322) to authorize the Southwestern, Arkansas and Indian Territory Railroad Company to build a bridge across the Wichita River in Arkansas, reported by the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE AT MEMPHIS.

The next bridge bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7871) to amend chapter 165 of the Revised Statutes of the United States authorizing the construction of a bridge at Memphis, Tenn., passed February 26, 1885.

Mr. CRISP. This is a bill which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and favorably reported to the House, to amend an outstanding charter for a bridge at Memphis, which charter was repealed by a bill that was subsequently passed. I ask that this bill be laid on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED AND LITTLE RIVERS, ARKANSAS.

The next bridge bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7676) authorizing the Kansas City, Texarkana and Gulf Railroad Company to bridge the Red and Little Rivers, in the State of Arkansas; reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill as amended was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE OVER TENNESSEE RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7899) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Lamb's Ferry, Alabama, and for other purposes.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS CANAL ENTRANCE TO DULUTH HARBOR, MINNESOTA.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5191) for the construction of a bridge across the canal entrance to the harbor at Duluth, Minn.

Mr. HAUGEN. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over informally, without losing its place on the Calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS BAY OF SUPERIOR, MINNESOTA.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5192) for the construction of a bridge across the Bay of Superior from Rice's Point to Minnesota Point, in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. HAUGEN. I object also to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, this bill also will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT FOREST CITY, DAK.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6699) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at Forest City, Dak., by the Forest City and Watertown Railway Company.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS BAYOU D'ARBONNE, LOUISIANA.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2412) authorizing the Little Rock and Alexandria Railway Company to maintain and construct a bridge across Bayou D'Arbonne, in Louisiana.

Mr. NEWTON. The Senate has passed a bill similar in substance to this; and it has been reported by the House Committee on Commerce with amendments. I ask that the Senate bill be considered in place of the House bill.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 2199) authorizing the Little Rock and Alexandria Railway Company to maintain and construct a bridge across Bayou D'Arbonne, in Louisiana.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NEWTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

House bill No. 2412 was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI AT MUSCATINE, IOWA.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6570) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Muscatine, Iowa.

Mr. HAYES. In this case, as in that last under consideration, the Senate has passed a bill similar in substance, which has been reported with amendments by the Committee on Commerce of the House. I ask that the Senate bill be considered in lieu of the House bill.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 1883) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Muscatine, Iowa.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAYES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

House bill 6570 was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER IN MONTANA.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3070) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River in Montana.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS CANEY FORK RIVER, TENNESSEE.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask unanimous consent that the House take up and consider out of its order the bill (S. 1526) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Caney Fork River, between Rock Island and Carthage, in Tennessee.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McMILLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER NEAR WINONA, DAK.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7438) granting to the Aberdeen, Bismarck and Northwestern Railway Company the right to construct and maintain a bridge across the Missouri River near Winona, Emmons County, Dakota.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3523) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, and to establish it as a post-road.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI AT OQUAWKA, ILL.

Mr. GEST. There is a bill on page 28 of the Calendar which appears to have been overlooked. It is the bill (H. R. 3524) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Oquawka, in the State of Illinois, and to establish it as a post-road.

Mr. CRISP. I suppose the reason that bill has been overlooked is that it was placed on the House Calendar, instead of being referred, as most of the other bridge bills have been, to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GEST. I know of no reason why the bill should not be taken up and passed.

Mr. CRISP. I hope the gentleman will call it up.

Mr. GEST. I ask for the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3524) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Oquawka, in the State of Illinois, and to establish it as a post-road.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GEST moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TENNESSEE RIVER BETWEEN BRIDGEPORT AND SHEFFIELD, ALA.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask unanimous consent to take up out of its regular order the bill (S. 1524) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River between Bridgeport and Sheffield, Ala., for present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the amendments recommended by the committee adopted, and the bill as amended ordered to a third reading, and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. MCMILLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE COLUMBIA RIVER.

Mr. HERMANN. I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill (S. 23) to authorize Dalles City to construct a bridge across the Columbia River in the State of Oregon and Territory of Washington.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. HERMANN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI, WABASHA, MINN.

The next bridge bill considered was the bill (H. R. 7749) to authorize the building of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Wabasha, Minn., with amendments by the Committee on Commerce.

The amendments recommended by the committee were adopted, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI AT SIOUX CITY.

The next bridge bill considered was the bill (H. R. 8946) authorizing the construction of a high or low wagon bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI AT NATCHEZ.

The next bridge bill considered was the bill (S. 1669) authorizing the Mississippi and Louisiana Bridge and Railroad Company, of Natchez, Miss., to construct a bridge over the Mississippi River at or near Natchez, Miss., with amendments by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment, I think, to be offered to that bill on the part of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY], the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, who is not now in his seat.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that there is an amendment now pending.

Mr. STOCKDALE. What is the committee amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to add to section 9 of the bill the words: "And equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph companies; and the United States shall have the right to use the same for telegraph purposes."

Mr. CRISP. I will ask that this bill be passed over informally for the present, not to lose its place on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI, SIOUX CITY.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the bill (H. R. 8946) which was passed a few moments ago should have been amended, and I would ask unanimous consent to go back with a view of reconsidering the vote by which the bill was passed, for the purpose of submitting an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that the vote on that bill was not reconsidered, the Chair determining to make one order apply to all of these bills instead of reconsidering each one as passed.

Mr. CRISP. The bill provides that "it shall be lawful for any person or persons to erect a bridge." We want to change that so as to provide that "it shall be lawful for the city of Sioux City, Iowa, or any person," etc.

Perhaps I had better ask to substitute the Senate bill, No. 1701, and lay the House bill on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that will be done.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CRISP. I now ask to insert, after the word "for," in the third line of the bill, the words "the city of Sioux City, Iowa, or;" so that it shall read:

That it shall be lawful for the city of Sioux City, Iowa, or any person or persons, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

The vote by which the bill (H. R. 8946) was passed being by unanimous consent reconsidered, the said bill was ordered to be laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI, PONCA, NEBR.

The next business considered was the bill (H. R. 2625) authorizing the erection of a bridge across the Missouri at Ponca, Nebr., with amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER INFORMALLY.

The bill H. R. 8492 and the bill H. R. 6440 being the next bills on the Calendar were, on request of Mr. CRISP, passed over informally, not to lose their place on the Calendar.

Mr. CRISP. My impression is that both of these bills have been passed in the House, and therefore until that matter is determined I ask that this course be taken.

BRIDGE ACROSS COOSA RIVER, ETC.

The next business considered was the bill (H. R. 9086) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Coosa River, or bridges across the Oostanaula and Etowah Rivers, at or near Rome, Ga., with amendments.

The amendments of the committee were agreed to.

Mr. CRISP. There are one or two other amendments which should be made to this bill.

I move to strike out in section 2 the words beginning at the end of line 4—

That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-road, and the same is hereby declared to be a post-road.

These words appear to be duplicated in the bill.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. CRISP. There is a further amendment in the next line. The word "also" should be stricken out; and in the third section, at the end of line 9, the word "or" should be "at;" so that it will read:

All matters at issue, etc.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS HALIFAX RIVER AT DAYTONA, FLA.

The next bill considered was the bill (H. R. 8354) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a pile bridge over the Halifax River at Daytona, Volusia County, Florida.

The amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE OVER MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT OR NEAR NATCHEZ, MISS.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Speaker, Mr. CLARDY is present now. I ask that we return to Senate bill 1669, which was passed over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1669) authorizing the Mississippi and Louisiana Bridge and Railroad Company of Natchez, Miss., to construct a bridge over the Mississippi River at or near Natchez, Miss., with amendments.

The amendments proposed by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. CLARDY. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. Before approving the plans for said bridge the Secretary of War shall order three engineer officers from the Engineer Bureau to be detailed to the duty of examining by actual inspection the locality where said bridge is to be built, to report what shall be the length of the main-channel span and the other spans: Provided, That the main-channel span shall in no event be less than 700 feet in length or the other spans less than 650 feet each in length, and if the report of said officers shall be approved by the Secretary of War, the spans of said bridge shall be of the length so required. The lowest part of the superstructure of said bridge shall be at least 75 feet above extreme high-water mark as understood at the point of location, and the bridge shall be at right angles to, and its piers parallel with, the current of the river. No bridge shall be erected or maintained under the authority of this act which shall at any time substantially or materially obstruct the free navigation of said river; and if any bridge erected under such authority shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, obstruct such navigation, he is hereby authorized to cause such change or alteration of said bridge to be made as will effectually obviate such obstruction; and all such alterations shall be made and all such obstructions removed at the expense of the owner or owners of said bridge, and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction to the free navigation of said river caused or alleged to be caused by said bridge, the case may be brought in the circuit court of the United States within whose jurisdiction any portion of said obstruction or bridge may be located: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers or to exempt this bridge from the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY] is to strike out section 3 and insert in lieu thereof what has been read by the Clerk.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STOCKDALE. The original bill provides for 600 foot span in the case of the two shore spans and 700-foot span in the current. This amendment provides for a span of 650 feet. I move to amend so as to make the shore spans 600 feet and the span in the current 700 feet.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE] that the original section 3 has been stricken out.

Mr. CLARDY. I can not assent to that amendment. The board appointed to determine the length of spans and the height of the bridge have reported in favor of 700 feet instead of 650 on the shore spans and 1,000 feet on the middle span.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I will withdraw the amendment.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE COLUMBIA RIVER, ETC.

The next bridge bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 560) to authorize the Columbia River Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River between the State of Oregon and the Territory of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road.

Mr. HERMANN. I ask for the consideration of that Senate bill.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Commerce was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The House bill (H. R. 2807) for the same purpose having been previously passed, the action of the House in passing the bill was reconsidered, and the bill was laid on the table.

By Mr. MCCULLOGH: Of P. P. H. Sherbondy and 66 others, citizens of Mendon, Pa.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 21, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 6th instant, a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, inclosing a report made by R. L. Owen, United States Indian agent for the Union agency, relating to the claims of Indians of the Creek tribe for reimbursement of expenses of travel and for a year's support when those Indians were emigrated to the Indian country west of the Mississippi River, and other papers in regard to that subject; which, on motion of Mr. MORGAN, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

COURT OF CLAIMS REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and of law of that court in the matter of the French spoliation claim of the schooner Mary; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PATENT-OFFICE APPOINTMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the United States Civil Service Commission, transmitting, in response to a resolution of April 24, 1888, a list of appointments to the Patent Office; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. PLATT. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn until Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the passage of Senate bill 2851, proposing certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PAYNE presented a petition of citizens of Summit County, Ohio, praying for certain amendments of the interstate-commerce law; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PASCO. On the 18th instant an amendment was offered by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN], intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, the effect of which seems to be to consolidate the internal-revenue districts of Georgia and Florida. I was not consulted in reference to that matter and I do not know its full purport, but the import of the amendment has evolved some opposition in my own State at two points, Key West and Jacksonville, where there are large manufacturing interests of cigars. Petitions have reached me by telegraph objecting to the proposed consolidation. I ask leave to present the petitions and to have them referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that a copy of the petitions be referred to the Committee on Finance, that being the reference which was given to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia. One is from the Board of Trade of Jacksonville, Fla., and the other from the Board of Trade of Key West, Fla.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petitions will be received and referred, as suggested by the Senator from Florida, to the Committee on Appropriations, and a copy to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 9610) to authorize the Birmingham, Selma and New Orleans Railroad Company to build a bridge across the Tombigbee River, in Alabama; and

A bill (H. R. 7776) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River in the county of Monona, in the State of Iowa, and in the county of Burt, State of Nebraska, and to make the same a post-route.

Mr. VEST. I report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill. I move that it be printed and lie on the table until that bill reaches the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2337) for the relief of Maria N. Abbey, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Maria N. Abbey, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted a report thereon, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 422) for the relief of William Gray, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2813) for the relief of Joseph G. Swank, reported adversely and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 3196) for the relief of Joseph G. Swank; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DOLPH. By direction of the Committee on Commerce I report, with amendments, the bill (S. 707) providing for the purchase of a site and the construction of a wharf in Astoria, Oregon, for the use of the Light-House Department, and I ask that it may receive present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill reported by him. It will be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLAIR. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will withdraw the objection.

Mr. BLAIR. I propose to make a motion, and I do not wish to give way for any general business. However, I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the bill again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The Chief Clerk again read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLAIR. Is there any necessity for the immediate passage of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not understand upon what principle the objection is made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BLAIR. I propose to make a motion as soon as the formal business is concluded.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2778) making an appropriation for the purchase of a site and the construction of a light-house on the headlands near the mouth of the Umpqua River, in the State of Oregon, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 9649) granting a pension to Milton Merwin;
A bill (H. R. 2495) for the relief of Ruth Clark;
A bill (H. R. 6434) granting a pension to F. G. Mittag;
A bill (H. R. 6273) for the relief of Hiram Chilson;
A bill (H. R. 8930) for the relief of J. H. Corn; and
A bill (H. R. 231) to increase the pension of Edmund Ashworth.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2529) making an appropriation for the establishment of a light or lights and other aids to navigation to guide into St. Andrew's Bay, Florida, reported it adversely.

Mr. PASCO. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 3197) granting a pension to Abbie L. Ham; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3198) granting a pension to Mary Murphy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TURPIE introduced a bill (S. 3199) to donate to the State Soldiers and Sailors' Monument Commission of Indiana one hundred pieces of captured or condemned cannon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 3200) granting a pension to Scott S. Hawn; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3201) granting a pension to Elizabeth Wilson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 3202) to increase the pension now paid to Mrs. D. P. Woodbury; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VANCE introduced a bill (S. 3203) for the relief of Rufus Lowe and C. M. Loftin; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENTS TO CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. REAGAN. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act.

I will mention also that a copy of the action of the Court of Claims accompanies the proposed amendment.

I move that the amendment, with the accompanying papers, be printed and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MARGARET A. FITHIAN.

Mr. GORMAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Margaret A. Fithian, the sum of $210.35, for damages sustained by her and expenses of medical attendance caused by her being run into by one of the Senate mail-wagons, on the 7th day of September, 1885.

AWARDS UNDER MEXICAN TREATY.

Mr. MORGAN. Yesterday I made a report from the Committee on Foreign Relations upon the bill (S. 994) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868," and intended to ask the Senate to-day to hear some remarks upon it, but I conclude that it is not in accordance with the rules of the Senate, and I therefore ask that the bill go upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will that preclude a calling up of the bill at any time, if I should desire to submit remarks upon it? I did not hear the request of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that the bill may go upon the Calendar. I decline to speak upon it this morning.

Mr. VOORHEES. What is the purpose of the Senator, then, in regard to speaking upon it?

Mr. MORGAN. Whenever I can get the bill before the Senate for consideration I propose to discuss it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill being on the Calendar, it is subject to motion, and is at the disposal of a majority of the Senate at any time.

Mr. MORGAN. I will ask unanimous consent, while I am up, that the bill be made a special order for this day a week at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the bill (S. 994) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868," be made the special order for this day a week at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not object if the Senator will make his motion subject to appropriation bills.

Mr. MORGAN. Always, of course.

Mr. FRYE. Including the bill making appropriations for rivers and harbors?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. DOLPH. How will that order affect the special orders already made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The preceding special orders will take their assignment in the priority of time, if not at that time concluded.

Mr. MORGAN. Has consent been given to the order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been so ordered.

JOHN HANCOCK.

Mr. HARRIS. Some weeks ago the bill (H. R. 1071) granting a pension to John Hancock was adversely reported and indefinitely postponed. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed may be reconsidered and the bill with the adverse report placed upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. If there is no pressing legislative business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

CENTENARY OF RATIFICATION OF CONSTITUTION BY NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, it will be remembered by the Senate that the convention which framed our Constitution made provision that upon its ratification by nine States it should become operative as among the States by which it should thus have been ratified.

One hundred years ago to-day the State of New Hampshire, in convention assembled, at the capital of the State, ratified the Constitution, and thus consolidated the States into the American nation. It seems that our convention had assembled in the month of February before, and after discussing the subject somewhat had adjourned until the 21st day of June, 1788.

Mr. Bancroft says:

> While the long winter of New Hampshire intercepted the labors of husbandry, the fireside of the freeholders in its hundreds of townships became the scene for discussing the merits of the Federal Constitution with the delegates of their choice and with one another. Their convention reassembled in June. Four days served them to discuss the Constitution, to prepare and recommend twelve articles of amendment, and, by 57 voices against 46, to ratify the Constitution.

> As the glad tidings flew through the land the heart of its people thrilled with joy that at last the tree of union was firmly planted. Never may its trunk be riven by the lightning, nor its branches crash each other in the maddening storm, nor its beauty wither, nor its roots decay.

In the capital of our State appropriate ceremonies are now in progress for the celebration of this great event, and I believe that as the second centennial of our constitutional epoch approaches this day will be observed by unanimous consent as the one most appropriate for such memorial exercises.

Mr. President, in commemoration of this great event, the greatest of all the victories of peace, and in honor of my native State, which I have the privilege of representing in part upon this floor, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 25, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 21, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

VALUE OF OLD COPPER COINS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Director of the Mint, of appropriation to cover the difference between the nominal value of the stock of old copper cents, and their value as metallic copper, on hand in the mint at Philadelphia; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SCHOONER MARY AND GEORGE G. SILL ET AL. VS. UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting conclusions of fact and law in the spoliation case of the schooner Mary and George G. Sill et al., claimants, vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PUBLIC LANDS, LOUISIANA.

Mr. ROBERTSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10585) to withdraw the public lands of the United States in the State of Louisiana from sale at ordinary private entry and to restrict disposal thereof under the general statutes to homestead settlers only; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, WICHITA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1451) for the completion of the public building at Wichita, Kans.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent to non-concur in the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the conference asked thereon.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the conferees during the course of the day.

MARY DICKINSON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8779) granting a pension to Mary Dickinson.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read, and there being no objection it was concurred in.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REFERENCE OF BILLS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House Senate bills, which were severally read twice and referred as follows, namely:

The bill (S. 2613) to amend an act approved June 15, 1882, changing the boundaries of the fourth collection district of Virginia—to the Committee on Commerce.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. ROMEIS, until the 26th instant, on account of sickness in his family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. WILLIAMS to withdraw the papers in the case of Ralph O. Twitchell.

BILL LAID UPON THE TABLE.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. 8492) authorizing the construction of bridges over Northeast River, Black River, and Cape Fear River, in the State of North Carolina, should be laid upon the table, the House having passed at its session yesterday evening a Senate bill of the same title; and if there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills under the special order.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that several gentlemen have applied for recognition to make reports from committees——

Mr. RANDALL. That can be done after dispensing with the morning hour. I will make that motion now.

Mr. DIBBLE. I think the special order comes immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well, then, I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. DIBBLE. I have no objection to gentlemen filing reports.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, gentlemen can hand their reports to the Clerk's desk at any time during the day.

There was no objection.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

MARY ISABELLA R. CLEMENTS.

Mr. HUTTON, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2549) for the relief of Mary Isabella R. Clements; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. BETSY LOCKWOOD.

Mr. BLISS, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10244) granting a pension to Mrs. Betsy Lockwood; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL L. M. PROCTOR.

Mr. BLISS also, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9491) for the relief of Samuel L. M. Proctor; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. MARIA HULSE.

Mr. BLISS also, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9911) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria Hulse; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. FANNIE A. BOYD.

Mr. BLISS also, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9963) to increase the pension of Mrs. Fannie A. Boyd, widow of Capt. O. B. Boyd; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LEWIS DAVIS.

Mr. BLISS also, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back with the amendments of the Senate the bill (S. 5903) for the relief of Lewis Davis, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANDREW T. M'REYNOLDS.

Mr. BLISS also, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1935) for the relief of Andrew T. McReynolds; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MOBILE RIVER COMMISSION.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10464) to authorize the United States engineer in charge of Mobile Harbor to act as a member of the Mobile River Commission; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MOUNT CARMEL DEVELOPMENT COMPANY.

Mr. JONES also, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4496) to authorize and empower the Mount Carmel Development Company to draw water from the Wabash River, or its tributaries, in the county of Wabash and State of Illinois; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, NASHUA, N. H.

Mr. SOWDEN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably with amendment the bill (S. 385) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Nashua, in the State of New Hampshire; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, WATERBURY, CONN.

Mr. SOWDEN also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably with amendment the bill (S. 2319) for the erection of a public building at Waterbury, Conn.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES H. SMITH.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (S. 68) for the relief of James H. Smith, late postmaster at Memphis, Tenn.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM A. BEVENS.

Mr. SIMMONS also, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (S. 317) for the relief of William A. Bevens; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES E. WALKER.

Mr. SIMMONS also, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (S. 773) for the relief of James E. Walker; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

W. W. WELCH.

Mr. SHAW, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably with amendment the bill (H. R. 2557) for the relief of W. W. Welch; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EDWARD BRADEN AND JOB W. ANGUS.

Mr. SHAW also, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (S. 145) for the relief of Edward Braden and Job W. Angus; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELIZA J. ALEXANDER.

Mr. DE LANO, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably with amendment the bill (H. R. 10350) granting an increase of pension to Eliza J. Alexander; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES H. CAMPBELL.

Mr. HOOKER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5846) to restore Charles H. Campbell to the rank of captain in the Army; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DIBBLE. I now renew the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the special order.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to raise the question of consideration, the only way to do it being, I believe, to vote down the motion.

The SPEAKER. That is the only way.

Mr. BLOUNT. I presume the object of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is to reach the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. That is my purpose.

Mr. DIBBLE. I understand the gentleman from Arkansas wants to submit a report. I will yield to him temporarily.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the regular order.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report for consideration.

The SPEAKER. There is a motion pending before the House. Unless the report is a conference report it can not take another motion from the floor.

Mr. McRAE. But the gentleman who made the motion will now yield.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER put the question on the motion of Mr. DIBBLE that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House to consider bills in relation to public buildings and was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 35.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] asks for tellers, and as no quorum has voted tellers will be ordered. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY].

While the House was dividing the following took place:

Mr. RANDALL. I think the importance of this question requires the yeas and nays. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if the yeas and nays disclose the fact that there is no quorum the result will be to suspend business for the day.

Mr. RANDALL. The members who want to go on with the appropriation bills ought to take the responsibility, and I believe they will. I want the privilege of putting myself and those who vote with me on record in regard to this matter.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman ought to consider that when the yeas and nays are called, if no quorum is developed in the House, we will be in a worse condition than we are now.

Mr. RANDALL. That is all right. We can not help that.

Mr. BURROWS. Can it not be agreed that the bills in relation to public buildings shall be taken up to-morrow or immediately after we have finished with the sundry civil bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. When this order was made it was understood it was not to interfere with appropriation bills or revenue bills. The gentleman from Michigan will bear that in mind.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, after conferring with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I ask unanimous consent to postpone the special order until Saturday.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to know if the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] thereby desires to have it implied that the House will be bound to take up the bills for public buildings at that time if the naval appropriation bill or any other appropriation bill shall be ready for consideration?

Mr. DIBBLE. My intention is to have the matter remain in its present state in that respect.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask permission to say that while the Committee on Public Lands have felt it to be their duty not to seek to interfere with the passage of the appropriation bills, as against all other measures that committee would insist that the general land bill, the homestead bill, shall be taken up and acted upon at the earliest possible moment. Except as against appropriation bills I think the committee ought to insist that that bill shall be disposed of. After a struggle of three months that committee has had altogether one hour and a half for the consideration of the most important bill in many respects that is pending in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] asks unanimous consent to postpone the special order until next Saturday morning. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider appropriation bills.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can make the report, but it can not be considered now unless the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is withdrawn.

Mr. BELMONT. I understand the gentleman will withdraw his motion.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand it is simply a request for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know how much time it will take.

Mr. BELMONT. It will take but a moment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs recommend a non-concurrence in the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House 6833 making appropriation for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year 1889, and ask for a conference thereon.

Mr. BELMONT. The Senate has not yet asked for a conference.

Mr. HOLMAN. Would it not be well to read the amendments?

Mr. BELMONT. There are but few amendments, nor are they of much importance. There are certain changes recommended in the diplomatic service, raising the rank of certain ministers resident to that of envoys and ministers plenipotentiary. In regard to the consular service there are but few changes, principally in the Mexican consulates, involving in amount not more than $1,000. There is a Senate proposition for a scientific commission to visit and report upon the commercial resources of the Upper Congo Basin, with an appropriation for this purpose amounting to $25,000. The committee, on consideration of these amendments, has requested that the House nonconcur and ask for a conference.

Mr. HOLMAN. If these amendments are to be opposed in good faith and not as a matter of form, I shall not insist upon their being read. If the report is made by my friend from New York with a view of opposing the adoption of the Senate amendments, I have no objection.

Mr. BELMONT. I think I may say on behalf of the committee that it is opposed to the amendment in regard to the Congo appropriation. The difficulty is there is no provision for placing the supervision of the proposed expenditure in the State Department, or in fact in any other Department. As to the increase in rank of ministers resident to ministers plenipotentiary, there is no increase proposed in salaries.

Mr. HOLMAN. That follows.

Mr. BELMONT. Pardon me; it does not follow, and I think the conferees should be left free to confer and to consider the importance and usefulness of such amendments.

Mr. McCREARY. I hope my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will make no opposition to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT]. The Congo amendment is the most important one, because it proposes to appropriate $25,000. I think the Committee on Foreign Affairs is opposed to that; I know I am myself. The other item is not large in amount, and I believe that the committee of conference to which it may be referred will give it the consideration it deserves.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope there will be no misunderstanding with regard to what shall be the report of the conferees. You are not providing for a conference at all when you appoint a committee to confer and then direct them what to do. It is the duty of the committee to confer with the Senate conferees for the purpose of reaching a conclusion.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is all right, but my friend must remember that it is proposed to take these amendments without consideration in the House, and of course they never will be considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] asks unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in, and that a conference be requested. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as managers of the conference on the part of the House the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT], the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROCKWELL].

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8089) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, together with the amendments of the Senate thereto, having considered the same, beg leave to report as follows:

They recommend concurrence in the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 11, 12, 88, 89, 90, 91, 96, 97, 98, 108, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 165, 166, 182, and 184.

They recommend non-concurrence in the amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 92, 93, 94, 95, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 161, 162, 163, 164, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 183, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, and 192.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman presenting this report that this list of the numbers of the amendments furnishes no information to the House. I do not know what the gentleman's motion is, but I think we ought to have some explanation of the effect of the report.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The motion is to adopt the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. The reading of that paper of course furnishes no information to the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it proposed in this report to concur in the amendment of the Senate reducing the appropriation for the Homœopathic Hospital?

Mr. CLEMENTS. We do not recommend concurrence in that amendment. We want it to go to the committee of conference.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is all right. I hope we shall insist on the action of the House in regard to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that the gentleman from Georgia state the effect of the report.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The principal amendment in which concurrence is asked is the appropriation of $15,000, to enable the District authorities to assess the real estate of the city and District next year. The permanent law requires that that shall be done every three years, and next year is the year in which it should be done. The matter was not submitted to the House committee originally, but the amendment is a proper one, and it is the only amendment which carries any considerable increase of appropriation, the amount being $15,000. Another amendment is for a fire-proof stairway in the Lincoln School building, and there are other small items. The aggregate increase, however, I think will not exceed $15,000.

Mr. BURROWS. Is this a conference report?

The SPEAKER. It is not a conference report. It is a report from the Committee on Appropriations recommending non-concurrence in certain Senate amendments and asking a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The report does not ask for a conference. It is simply a report recommending non-concurrence in certain amendments.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of general appropriation bills; and pending that motion I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. MACDONALD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MACDONALD. Can I ask for a division of the question?

The SPEAKER. There is only one question at a time. The first question is upon limiting debate.

Mr. RICE. I move to amend so as to make the time twenty minutes.

The amendment was rejected.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL, limiting debate on the pending paragraph and amendments to ten minutes, was then agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The pending paragraph was the following:

For surveys and resurveys of public lands, $100,000, at rates not exceeding $9 per lineal mile for standard and meander lines, $7 for township, and $5 for section lines: Provided, That in expending this appropriation preference shall be given in favor of surveying land occupied, or to be occupied, in whole or in part, by actual settlers. And of the sum hereby appropriated not exceeding $20,000 may be expended for the examination of surveys in the field, to test the accuracy of the work, and to prevent payment for fraudulent and imperfect surveys returned by deputy surveyors; and for inspecting mineral deposits, coal-fields, and timber districts, and for making such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States.

Mr. RICE. I move to amend by striking out in the first line of the paragraph just read the word "one" and inserting "two;" so as to make the appropriation for surveys and resurveys of public lands $200,000.

This paragraph as reported proposes to appropriate $100,000 for public surveys, of which $20,000 is authorized to be deducted "for the examination of surveys in the field, to test the accuracy of the work," etc. Now, there are five States and eight Territories, excluding Alaska, among which this appropriation of $80,000 must be divided. This would allow to each of these vast Territories and Western States something over $6,000 a piece for public surveys. So meager an appropriation as this would be perfectly useless; there might as well be none. In 1880 $300,000 was appropriated for this purpose. In 1881 and 1882 the appropriation was the same; in 1883, $400,000; in 1884, $125,000; in 1885, $350,000; in 1887 and 1888, $50,000 for each year. The small amount appropriated in these recent years has proved a mere bagatelle, and its expenditure has practically amounted to nothing. The surveyor-general of Washington Territory alone has asked for $225,000 for surveys in that Territory, embracing 150 townships; and he states that this amount will be absolutely necessary, the land being occupied by actual settlers. Upon many portions of the public lands there are settlers who have resided there for twenty years without having obtained a title; and they can not obtain their titles for want of surveys.

These meager appropriations for surveys do great injustice to the settlers. The public faith is pledged to the survey of their lands. The Government should stand behind them and back them up in their honest efforts to acquire homes and to perfect the titles to their property. This is the interest of the individuals themselves and of the communities in which they reside, so that taxes may be levied and that they may be enabled to proceed with the building of school-houses, the construction of highways, etc., that the settlers who have made their homes there may enjoy the advantages of civilization.

I call the attention of the committee to the act of March 3, 1887, to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes. Section 1 of that act makes it mandatory upon the Secretary of the Interior to adjust these land grants. I ask the Clerk to read that section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to immediately adjust, in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court, each of the railroad land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads and heretofore unadjusted.

Mr. RICE. There are probably 50,000,000 acres of lands which require to be surveyed immediately under this act, which has now been in force for more than one year. In addition to this, Congress has passed acts contemplating the survey of the Indian reservations, embracing about 38,000,000 acres; and how are they to be surveyed?

I do not wish to see the Secretary of the Interior handicapped in the performance of his duty to execute these laws. The laws make it mandatory upon him to make these surveys; yet Congress will not give him the money with which to do it. The requirement of law that these surveys shall be made stands as a dead letter so long as the Congress refuses to vote the necessary appropriations. The Secretary of the Interior asks for $360,000, which I think a very low estimate.

A MEMBER. How much does your amendment propose to give?

Mr. RICE. This bill proposes to appropriate $80,000, and I ask that it be increased to $200,000.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. About one-half of what the Secretary of the Interior asks.

Mr. RICE. Yes, sir. I wish it were possible to obtain from Congress an appropriation for the whole amount asked by the Secretary of the Interior, but when I can not get what is reasonable I am willing to take what I can get.

I will state in addition that the surveyor of my own State, Minnesota, is insisting upon $30,000 for surveys in that State. There are 8,000,000 acres of Indian reservations there that should be surveyed immediately under the mandatory laws of Congress. The meager sum which this bill proposes to appropriate, and even the amount asked in my amendment, will be but a "flea-bite" when it comes to be distributed among the various States and Territories.

In conclusion, I call the attention of the House to the following communications from the surveyor-general, deputy surveyor-general, and United States marshal of Washington Territory:

UNITED STATES SURVEYOR-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington Territory, Olympia, May 29, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: I have before me your letter of the 10th and 15th instants. The statement of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, that $450,000 will cover all needs for public surveys in the United States, is a surprise to me, for I left Washington in January fully impressed with the belief that he was to make a revised estimate recommending a considerable increase over that amount. My estimate of $125,000 for Washington Territory, which was made from applications then in hand is, I am now convinced, far less than is needed. Evidence has accumulated of the necessity for surveys in many townships not then considered, and I believe that at least half of the amount estimated by the Commissioner for the entire United States could be used with advantage in this surveying district alone.

If any member of the committee should still think there should be a uniform rate for surveys, I can simply say to him that here about 2 miles is a good day's work for a surveyor, whereas in many sections of the country they can cover from 12 to 15 miles a day. If, as I have said in previous communications, the contract system is adhered to, the augmented rates provided for in section 2405, Revised Statutes, should be restored; but I am fully satisfied that better service can be secured by paying a per diem.

I inclose a letter from United States Marshal Hamilton in regard to the necessity for extending the public surveys in Washington Territory, and copy of a letter from a reliable practical surveyor in regard to the cost of making them.

You ask for my views in regard to the maximum to be paid assistants to deputy surveyors, the expenses of furnishing surveyor's instruments, implements, utensils, etc. My idea is that after establishing a maximum price to be paid deputy surveyors for work while in the field, and for the time necessary to prepare their notes after the field-work is completed, all other items of expense should be regulated by the Commissioner of the General Land Office or by the surveyors-general, subject to the approval of the Commissioner. This is the way it is done with examiners of surveys who are sent out from Washington, and it seems to me is the best and most practical way.

Labor, supplies, and transportation are much higher in some localities than in others. In some parts of the country the supplies and all baggage of a surveying party can be hauled in wagons or carried on pack-horses, while in this country everything is packed on the backs of men, and this of course necessitates the hiring of additional force.

It would be impracticable to limit the expenses per day of a surveying party in this country under a salaried basis to the requirements of an open country, just as it is to limit it per mile under the contract system. Some discretion should be allowed somebody, but if it is desired to establish maximum rates for everything I would suggest the following:

Deputy surveyor, per day	$10.00
Two chain carriers, each $2.25	4.50
Two axmen, each $2.25	4.50
One cook	2.25
Transportation in the field, either wagon and team or "packers"	5.00
Provisions for 7 men per day, at 50 cents each	3.50
Total expense of a surveying party in the field, per day	29.75

Pay should be allowed the men from the time they leave the place where the party is organized, and their expenses should be paid to and from the place of beginning.

After the completion of his work the deputy should have his expenses paid from the field to the surveyor-general's office, where he should be required to write up his official notes from original data taken in the field. No provisions should be made for the purchase of surveying instruments, as every practical surveyor is supposed to be provided with an outfit of his own.

The cost of cooking utensils, etc., should be regulated by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I hope something can be done for the relief of the many worthy settlers in this country who are suffering great inconvenience on account of not being able to perfect titles to their lands.

I am reliably informed that no surveys have been made for several years past, except at a heavy expense to the settler, and from a recent letter from the Commissioner on the subject I infer that, in future, even this poor privilege will be denied them.

Yours, truly, J. CABELL BRECKINRIDGE.

Hon. EDMUND RICE,
Washington, D. C.

DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON TERRITORY,
OFFICE OF UNITED STATES MARSHAL,
Seattle, Wash., February 15, 1888.

SIR: I ask permission to say a word about the appropriation for extension of public surveys in this Territory.

In the discharge of my official duties I am obliged to travel all over this Territory, and have had occasion to converse with settlers throughout the Territory. From my conversation with them, and from observations made by me, I find a great many people living upon unsurveyed public lands who are anxiously awaiting for surveys, which, in my judgment, ought to be made in the interest of honest settlers.

I am therefore led to believe that there will be needed for the purposes of such extension the sum of at least $250,000 or $300,000.

Very respectfully, T. J. HAMILTON.

Hon. CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

OLYMPIA, WASH., May 23, 1888.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiry as to the time occupied in the survey of an average township, in what is commonly called the timber belt west of the Cascade Mountains, I would respectfully submit the following statement, after some eighteen or twenty years' service as a deputy United States surveyor:

A deputy surveyor with one party in the field is doing good work when he averages 1½ miles per day. In the most favorable localities he may average 2 miles, but in many of the most choice agricultural belts his average will be reduced to 1 mile per day.

Our best agricultural are the most difficult lands to survey, they being river and creek bottom lands. These lands, in addition to the thick growth of timber, are always covered with an almost impenetrable undergrowth, generally consisting of vine, maple, willow, rose brush, gooseberry, and briers.

After the above statement, the question will naturally arise, how can the lands described be surveyed, even for the augmented rates of $14 and $15 per mile? In reply I would say many of them can not, and the only way the majority of them have been surveyed for years past is by the settlers in the townships rendering such assistance to the deputy as was necessary in order to enable him to make the desired surveys.

Very respectfully, D. S. B. HENRY,
Deputy United States Surveyor.

Hon. J. C. BRECKINRIDGE,
Surveyor-General Washington Territory, Olympia, Wash.

The moneys derived from the public lands for the year 1887 amounted to $12,289,008.37, and out of this amount the insignificant sum of $80,000 is applied by this bill for public surveys.

Gentlemen on this floor who oppose this amendment on yesterday paid very high encomiums upon the integrity, ability, and wisdom of the late Commissioner of the General Land Office. If they are sincere in this, as I doubt not they are, they would be more consistent if they would vote for his recommendations. Here are some of them:

MINNESOTA.

There remains in this State one hundred and eighty unsurveyed townships of public lands and one hundred and seventy-five townships of Indian reservations. The development of fraudulent returns of swamp lands in surveys heretofore made render a thorough examination of such lands in this State a matter of importance to the Government and to settlers.

MONTANA.

The progress in office work on agricultural surveys was small, owing to the totally insufficient appropriation for clerk-hire for 1887. During the year 1885 contracts were let amounting to $23,320 for surveys of public lands. None of the work was returned during the year ending 1886, but in 1887 several deputies made returns, the principal portion of which remains unexamined for want of clerical force to do the work. The surveyor-general declines to make any recommendation as to further surveys in his district, believing it necessary that provision be made for the office work on surveys already contracted for before entering upon additional surveys.

Important surveys in this Territory, needed the past year for use in suits in the courts involving a pecuniary interest to the Government of upwards of a million dollars, could not be contracted for at the rates allowed by the present appropriation acts of Congress.

Here is what the Secretary of the Interior says:

PUBLIC SURVEYS.

I renew the suggestion in my last annual report in favor of the enactment of a law making false and fraudulent returns of public surveys a penal offense, and providing also penalties for the willful destruction or removal of surveying monuments. Special attention is called to the recommendation of the Commissioner for the appropriation of $300,000 for executing public surveys. I concur in this recommendation.

The appropriations for 1884 were $425,000, whilst those for 1887 and 1888 were respectively only $50,000. This is a very serious matter. It would be less disastrous to the interests of the people to abolish the present mode of administering the public surveys and remit the whole subject to the States or dispose of it in some other way if the Executive is not afforded the means of properly administering this branch of the public service. Our plan of surveying the public land is a most admirable one, and its correct administration lies at the very foundation of our established land system. But if the public surveys are not conducted with honesty and exactness, they are a snare and delusion to all who obtain title under them.

The Commissioner shows that where surveys have been made in many instances it is impossible to throw open the surveyed land because of the want of means to cause the surveys to be verified in the field or to have the necessary office work done. In addition, he shows that large bodies of valuable land are unsurveyed and no means available for the purpose of surveying them. Public interests demand that those lands be placed in such a condition that settlers may be able to acquire title to them. If it be true that one of the great objects in view is to facilitate the acquisition of homes by the homeless and industrious, the impolicy of retarding the surveys of the public lands is the more apparent; and when we reflect that the public land system is not a burden upon the taxpayers of the country, but the source of a large and unneeded income to the Treasury, the policy which hampers this administration is the more unaccountable. Frequently cases come before the Department where, after years of residence and improvement, the settler dies without having been able to secure title to the land, leaving that which ought to be the home of his helpless family to fall into the possession of others, and all because, in the absence of a survey, there is no means of securing title.

Another evil of these insufficient appropriations lies in the fact that several of the railroads to which land grants have been made pass for a considerable extent through unsurveyed public lands. In the granting acts to these companies is a clause directing the Executive to cause the land to be surveyed along the line of the road, so that the lands to which it may be entitled shall be made over to the company as fast as the road is constructed. But the Executive has been unable to comply with these directions because Congress has not thought proper to furnish the means to make the necessary surveys, and there was no other source from which it could come.

It is impossible for a settler to tell or even guess in an unsurveyed wilderness the even section from the odd, and he is as likely to make his settlement and his home upon the one as upon the other. When the survey is made, if that settler is found located within the primary limits of a grant upon an odd section, or any portion of one, he loses the land, because it is granted to the company. The same trouble would occur within the indemnity limits so long as the withdrawal thereof stood, for then under the law the rights of subsequent settlers were subordinate to those of the companies. Now, under the recent action of this Department in revoking the indemnity withdrawals, whilst the actual settlers will be safe in locating upon unclaimed lands within those limits, the companies most probably will be considerably curtailed in the amount of lands from which they may select indemnity for losses within the granted limits, which losses can not be ascertained until the surveys separate the odd from the even sections.

In view, therefore, of the general interests of the public, those of the settlers and of the railroad companies, and with an especial view to the speedy adjustment of the various land grants in obedience to the mandate of Congress, the appropriation for these surveys should be fully adequate to the results contemplated.

In this connection attention is called to the significant statement found on page 22 of the report of the Commissioner. Attention is also called to the fact that because of the want of funds to make necessary surveys in Montana the Government sustained a loss in that Territory last year estimated by the Commissioner at over $1,000,000. (See page 14 of his report.)

Special attention is also called to the several reports of the governors of the Territories, all of which are burdened with complaints of the want of public surveys within their respective jurisdictions.

I have above indorsed the recommendation of the Commissioner for $300,000, but I beg to urge the appropriation of $200,000 not asked for by him, to be specially devoted to the survey of lands within the granted and indemnity limits of the different land-grant railroads. There are lands along the lines of all three of the great routes to the Pacific which are unsurveyed. The roads are completed. The country through which these roads pass has been mostly settled by an industrious population who are unable to obtain title to the unsurveyed lands, whether the same belong to the Government or to the railroad company. So long as these lands remain unsurveyed it is impossible to adjust the land grants, to ascertain what are the losses of the corporations within the primary limits, and to what indemnity lands they are entitled. Great confusion and many hardships have resulted for the want of the necessary appropriations for the survey of the lands along the lines of said roads.

It is manifest that it was the intention of Congress in making the grants that the survey should keep pace with the construction of the roads, making it practicable to adjust the grants as the roads progress. It is now urged that Congress afford a remedy for these long-standing evils by appropriating the sum asked, to be devoted specially to the survey of the land referred to.

DEPOSITS FOR SURVEYS.

A further experience of the pernicious practices that have obtained under the system of deposits for surveys confirms me in my former recommendation for the repeal of those laws, which I here renew.

PRIVATE GRANTS.

Another subject which, I would respectfully suggest, demands immediate legislation is the matter of private grants claimed to be derived from the Spanish or Mexican Government. This legislation, in my opinion, should be directed to two points: (1) to providing for a trial and final determination of such claims, subject only to appeal to the Supreme Court; (2) an act of limitation barring the presentation of new claims of this character within a stated period.

By section 8 of the act of July 22, 1864 (10 Stats., 308), it is made the duty of the surveyor-general of New Mexico to "ascertain the origin, nature, character, and extent of all claims to lands under the laws, usages, and customs of Spain and Mexico." He is to make report of all such claims, with his decision as to the validity or the invalidity of the same, which report shall be laid before Congress for action, and until final action of Congress on such claims all lands covered thereby shall be reserved from sale or other disposal by the Government. Under the provisions of this law from time to time since its passage many claims have been made and acted upon, whilst a number are yet pending before Congress unacted upon. The extent and number of the unconfirmed claims can not be accurately stated, as such claims are being continually made, and those heretofore presented seem to grow enormously in area with each passing year in the issuance of patents thereon. At the present time it is approximately estimated that the amount of public land actually reserved from entry and settlement because of such claims is a little short of 6,000,000 acres. Most of this land has been thus reserved for many years, used, enjoyed, or transferred and sold as freely by the pretended claimants as though their title had been fully confirmed.

These reports bristle all over with wise recommendations for adequate appropriations to enable them to administer the affairs of the public domain in accordance with law and the traditional policy of the Republic for more than one hundred years.

The system now is in a wretched condition. It would be better to turn over all the public lands to the States and Territories in which they are situated than to continue it as at present.

The domestic and foreign immigration for settlement upon these lands is now larger than ever, yet they can not know whether after making homes thereon they will, this year or twenty years hence, be able to obtain a title to them. Very poor encouragement indeed to the actual settler, for whom so much sympathy is due and so freely expressed upon this floor, which dies apparently inside these walls.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. In 1886 the appropriation for this purpose was $300,000, of which there was expended during the year only $176,000. The next year, 1887, $50,000 was appropriated, of which $25,408.23 was expended, leaving a balance of $24,591.77. The estimated unpaid expenses for that year were $12,532.77, showing about $12,000 covered into the Treasury. The Committee on Appropriations in this bill, doubling the appropriation of last year, propose to give $100,000. It is true that in the body of the estimates the Secretary of the Interior does mention the sum of $300,000, but in carrying out the gross estimates the estimate is stated at $250,000.

I do not want to make another appeal to the House, as I had to do yesterday, touching the increase of the expenditure of the Government I want to say an additional word. In the increase from $50,000 to $100,000 we have made special stipulations it shall be used for survey by townships wholly or in part for actual settlers who may desire to occupy the public lands for cultivation.

In addition we had in view the opening of the Piegan reservation, in Northern Montana. The committee has doubled what was given last year. It is not well to go beyond the amount recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

In this amendment Nevada is one of the States provided for. That State received, exclusive of the $50,000, $30,000 for last year.

I can appreciate the position of the gentleman from Minnesota, his people are urging him; and I am quite sure he will not do more than is prompted by a sense of duty. I may say that the Committee on Appropriations at both ends of the committee favor, so far as I know, this amount. I hope, therefore, the amendment will be voted down, and that $100,000, which is double the amount given for several years, will be allowed to remain.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. MACDONALD. I ask the debate on this subject be extended.

Mr. RANDALL. I must object.

Mr. MACDONALD. I know very well this is an important subject, and the House ought to fully understand it before members are called upon to vote on it.

Mr. RANDALL. We have heard sufficiently to understand the amendment and to be able to vote on it.

Mr. MACDONALD. We have a right to be heard fully on the matter, and we ought not to be choked off in this way.

The question recurred on Mr. RICE'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 28, noes 45.

Mr. MACDONALD. No quorum.

The Chair appointed Mr. FORNEY and Mr. MACDONALD as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 24, noes 74.

Mr. MACDONALD. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the amount be increased to $150,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Debate is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. TOWNSHEND'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. McSHANE. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized to transfer to the secretary of state of the States of Nebraska and Iowa, or to such officers as may be entitled to receive them, the field-notes, maps, records, and other papers appertaining to land surveys in said States which are now stored in the district land office at Lincoln, Nebr.; and the office of surveyor-general for the district of Nebraska and Iowa is hereby abolished: Provided, That the aforesaid field-notes, maps, records, and other papers pertaining to the State of Nebraska shall not be delivered to the proper authorities until said State shall have provided by law for the safe-keeping of the same as public records, and for the allowance of free access to field-notes, maps, records, and other papers by the authorities of the United States, as provided by section 2221 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the State of Iowa having heretofore enacted the requisite legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand there is no further use for this office, and hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. McSHANE. Mr. Chairman, in offering this amendment abolishing the office of surveyor-general for Iowa and Nebraska I desire to make the statement that this office was practically abolished by Congress refusing any appropriation for the expense of that office in the Forty-ninth Congress.

The object of this amendment is to legally abolish the office, so that the General Land Office may have control over the same and may complete the surveys where the contracts for surveys have not been carried out.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HERMANN. By direction of the Committee on the Public Lands I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "work," in line 11, page 48, insert "including in this, if found necessary by the Secretary of the Interior, the resurvey of township 33 south, of range 4 west of Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon."

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending paragraph.

Mr. HERMANN. I merely desire to make a word of explanation. This amendment is recommended by the Committee on the Public Lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. I ask by unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, as debate has been exhausted on the pending proposition, that I may be permitted to publish in the RECORD some remarks on this question.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

For survey of confirmed private land claims in New Mexico, at rates prescribed by law, $3,000.

[Mr. JACKSON withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. RANDALL. I hope we will have a vote on this proposition.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asserted that a marked contrast could be drawn between the policy of the Republican party, when in power, making grants of public lands, and the policy of the Democratic party in the same connection. I state to him that the Democratic party when in power never gave away to a railroad corporation one single acre of land. It did make a grant to the State of Illinois of several million acres of lands, but it was done upon the express condition that if these lands were given to a railroad company that it should be upon the consideration that the railroad company should forever pay into the State treasury of the State of Illinois 7 per cent. of its gross earnings. And I say here now, sir, that the lands granted to the State of Illinois under the Democratic administration were the best sold lands this Government ever disposed of in its history. The Illinois Central Railroad Company will find, after it has finished its payments for these lands, if it ever is released from that obligation, that it has paid thousands of dollars for every acre they received under that grant.

It was that wise provision inserted in the bill by the great Democratic leader, Stephen A. Douglass, which enabled the bankrupt State of Illinois to pay off its State debt, and which, under an honest administration of affairs in Illinois, would enable that State to pay all the ordinary expenses of the State government. But, Mr. Chairman, I rise more particularly for the purpose of calling attention to the amusing position occupied by the gentleman from Ohio yesterday, when he said that the Democratic party had not initiated the movement to forfeit or repeal grants made to railroad corporations. Why, sir, I dare any man to put his finger upon a single motion made or vote that was cast in a Republican Congress prior to the time the Democrats came into power here, in 1874, in favor of forfeiting or repealing a grant to a railroad corporation. Grants to railroad corporations of public lands did not cease until a Democratic majority appeared in this House in 1874.

The only Republican Congress that has found power here since 1874, was the Forty-seventh Congress, elected in 1882 and presided over by Mr. Keifer. What was done then? As a member of the Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from Ohio sitting on that committee, the Democratic portion of the committee, with the help of but one Republican [Mr. PAYSON], sought sedulously and industriously to secure the forfeiture of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad. Under the terms of the grant, it had expired in 1879, some three or four years previously, and was forfeitable. We sought to forfeit the grant by legislative enactment. What was the result? A bill to that effect, which had been referred to the committee, was practically suppressed. The Republican majority refused to report the bill. They did report a resolution back to this House declaring it was not in the power of Congress to forfeit that grant, and when we offered an adverse report to that resolution and sought to put members upon record upon that proposition, the right to bring in a minority report was denied on a point of order, and every effort to obtain an expression of the House on the subject was suppressed. They absolutely stifled any action on the bill.

Now contrast the action of the Republican House of the Forty-seventh Congress and that of the next, the Forty-eighth Congress, which was Democratic and which passed bills forfeiting many grants of lands to railroad corporations. It is amusing to hear members say the Republican party has ever attempted to forfeit one acre of public land when it has been in power here. It is ridiculous and absurd to charge that the Democratic party in Congress and the Executive Departments have not forfeited and restored to the public domain 80,000,000 acres since they came into power. The most stupendous lie I have heard this year emanated to-day from the Republican convention at Chicago in a plank in its platform, declaring that the Democratic party has never restored an acre of land to the public domain.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph be closed.

Mr. JACKSON. I object unless I can have five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman only asks for five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. We had a day of general debate yesterday. I do not want to have it reinaugurated to-day. There will be plenty of time for this kind of discussion before we adjourn.

Mr. JACKSON. I had no time yesterday.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering appropriation bills; and pending that motion I move that all debate upon the paragraph under consideration be closed in one-half minute.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, is an amendment in order?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. JACKSON. I move to amend by inserting "ten minutes" in place of "one-half minute."

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER put the question on the original motion. Before the result was announced the following took place:

Mr. JACKSON. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 12.

Mr. JACKSON. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum being made the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MCSHANE].

Mr. BURROWS. I hope that point will not be insisted upon.

Mr. JACKSON. I do not wish to obstruct business.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON] has occupied five minutes and has had the privilege of extending his remarks. I think that is all he ought to have and all he can reasonably ask.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will take their places.

Mr. JACKSON. I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House thereupon resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole. The debate upon the pending paragraph and amendments is limited to one-half minute.

Mr. RICE. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the paragraph the following words:

"For the survey of Indian reservations, required by law to be done under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $50,000; and for a survey of the lands mentioned in the act of March 3, 1887, entitled 'An act to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads, and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes,' $50,000."

Mr. RANDALL. We have passed the paragraph which relates to surveys and have gone to another paragraph. This amendment is not germane.

Mr. RICE. The paragraph under consideration relates to surveys.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not germane to the paragraph.

Mr. RICE. I think it is germane to the paragraph. I want a vote on it; that is all.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I contend that this amendment is germane to the paragraph. The paragraph is one making provision for surveys.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not. We have passed that survey paragraph and are on a paragraph in relation to confirming private land claims in New Mexico.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. For surveying private land claims. This paragraph makes provision for surveys.

Mr. RANDALL. But the difference is that the paragraph which we have passed makes appropriation for public surveys, while this is for private land claims.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. You might as well say that one is for the survey of mountain lands and the other for the survey of valley lands. Both paragraphs provide for the survey of public lands.

Mr. RANDALL. Private land claims are not public lands.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. It does not make any difference. This paragraph provides for surveying these lands.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this amendment would properly be in order at the end of the paragraph in relation to the surveys of public lands, which has been passed; and the point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For topographic surveys in various portions of the United States, including the pay of temporary employés in field and in office, the cost of all instruments, apparatus, and materials, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith, $199,000.

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out "$199,000," in lines 10 and 11, page 50, and insert "$270,000."

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered to bring the appropriation up to the amount of the estimate for this service. In the Book of Estimates I find that $270,000 is the amount estimated as necessary for topographic surveys in the United States. This bill as presented makes appropriation for all the employés of this bureau, twelve geologists, two chemists, four geographers, three topographers; the whole of the office administrative force is appropriated for, but, sir, when it comes to an appropriation for the field-work—that work which is indispensable to the success of the bureau, and without which they can do nothing—we find that there is a deduction of $71,000 from the amount estimated. Now this deduction can not be made on the ground that the management of the bureau is inefficient, because we have the highest testimony in our records as to its efficiency. In the report of the Secretary of the Interior I find the following:

I ask special attention to the report of the Director of the Geological Survey. Apart from the achievements of the bureau as one of the great instrumentalities of the advancement of scientific research, I desire to express my admiration of its organized system for the transaction of business. In order to determine whether it was consistent with my duty to sanction the estimates of the Director for this bureau, it became necessary for me to look into the details of its practical operation. While undertaking to perform this duty I was struck with the perfect adaptation of the system to securing efficient work and rigid economy, as well as to fixing by documentary evidence the responsibility for the business transacted, and making the documentary and the actual responsibility coincident.

This is high testimony as to the efficient management of this bureau. Now, what will be the effect of reducing this appropriation? We have all the scientific officers provided for, but when it comes to making provision for field-work, that work which was estimated for by the Secretary of the Interior after carefully investigating the work of the bureau and having his admiration excited by it, when it comes to making provision for that work, the appropriation is cut down $71,000. How would this money be expended? It would be expended in field-work, not in the office here; and in making this reduction we act like a man who should construct a factory, employ a superintendent and overseers and put in all the necessary machinery, and then, though finding a demand for his products, should, for the sake of "economy," reduce the number of his workmen. Without workmen the factory would be less productive, and without adequate field-work in the Geological Survey, the amount of work that can be accomplished by the whole establishment will be diminished in that proportion. The Director of this survey, in a communication to the Committee on Appropriations, declares that—

The work of the Geological Survey is largely expert work, necessitating the employment of specialists, and there are in the colleges and universities of the land and in the great mining and metallurgical works of the country many learned and skillful experts whose labors for a week or a month can be secured at a reasonable rate and who can thus perform work for the survey at a very much less price than it would cost if permanent employés were engaged therein.

Mr. RANDALL. In 1885 the appropriation for the Geological Survey was $386,000. In 1886 the estimate was $500,000 and the appropriation $400,000. The estimate for 1887 was $550,000 and $400,000 was appropriated. The estimate for 1888 was $450,000 and $400,000 was appropriated. The estimate for 1889 is $500,000 and we give $400,000. It will be observed that $400,000 is the maximum amount that has ever been given as far as my knowledge goes, is the exact amount given three years back, and is $14,000 more than was given in 1885.

Heretofore this appropriation has been made in a lump sum, but under the last appropriation act, in accordance with an amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT], subdivisions have been made in reference to the character of work to be done under the appropriation. In this bill we have conformed to the subdivisions, as the Director has in his estimates, and the amounts given under these eight subdivisions are exactly in accordance with the Director's estimates based upon the gross appropriation which the committee were ready to recommend—$400,000. I think the House will be quite safe in adopting the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. ATKINSON. I will ask the gentleman what was the whole estimate of the Director?

Mr. RANDALL. The whole estimate was $500,000. We have given $400,000, the same amount which has been appropriated for many years; and we have obtained from him his own distribution of this amount under the eight subdivisions which the law requires shall be provided for.

Mr. ATKINSON. Has the Appropriations Committee any information to indicate that $500,000 could not be properly and economically expended for this work?

Mr. RANDALL. The committee heard Mr. Powell fully; he had the opportunity of saying all he desired to say on this subject, though I understood he wished to submit something additional in support of his original estimate of $500,000. The committee fully considered this subject.

Mr. ATKINSON. Is there any objection to an appropriation of $500,000?

Mr. RANDALL. There is, decidedly.

Mr. ATKINSON. What is the objection?

Mr. RANDALL. Four hundred thousand dollars is the sum which has been appropriated for some years, and the committee do not consider it proper as a matter of public policy to increase the amount at this time. I do not know but that I may say there was very little dissent in the committee on this point.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. ATKINSON, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 12, noes 41.

The Clerk read as follows:

For geological surveys in the various portions of the United States, including the pay of temporary employés in field and in office, the cost of all instruments, apparatus, and materials, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith, $100,000.

Mr. ATKINSON. I move to amend by inserting after "one hundred," in the paragraph just read, the words "and twenty-five;" so as to make the amount of this appropriation $125,000.

Mr. Chairman, I assume from the action of the House on the amendment previously offered by me that this amendment also will be voted down. I desire, however, to occupy the time to which I am entitled in calling the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] to the act of Congress making the land grant to the Illinois Central Railroad Company. It appears there is some misunderstanding about this matter, and I have taken the trouble to obtain the text of the original act. I find that in this act Congress grants to the State of Illinois "for the purpose of aiding in making the railroad and its branches as aforesaid every alternate section of land," etc. So that under this act of Congress the State of Illinois was a mere naked trustee, and had no right to retain a single acre of that land or to divert it to any other purpose.

Mr. ROWELL. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. ATKINSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROWELL. My colleague [Mr. TOWNSHEND] has twice repeated the statement that in the granting act by Congress there was a provision that 7 per cent. of the gross earnings of the railroad should be paid to the State of Illinois. As the gentleman has repeated that statement, I desire distinctly to contradict it; and I want this Committee of the Whole to understand that there is not and never was any such limitation in the granting act.

Mr. TOWNSHEND rose.

Mr. ATKINSON. I decline to yield further.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Was not the Democratic party in power at that time in Illinois? I affirm that the Democratic party, then in power in that State, required the railroad company to pay to the State 7 per cent. of its gross earnings.

Mr. ROWELL. But the gentleman said that Congress in the granting act made that requirement; and the statement is of the same class as the gentleman's statement this morning that the first plank of the Republican platform as reported to the Chicago convention to-day is a "stupendous lie."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I adhere to that statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] is entitled to the floor and declines to yield. His rights must be respected.

Mr. ATKINSON. I hope that this colloquy will not come out of my time.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] has anticipated a point which I was about to make. But I will call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] to the fifth section of this act, which authorizes the State of Illinois to sell parts of this land if it is not given to the railroad company, and it is required to account for the proceeds to the United States; and it is provided that if, after the expiration of ten years, the railroad should not be constructed, any land unsold by the State should revert to the United States. So here we have a land grant made in direct terms to a railroad company. This was a precedent which was followed through subsequent years; and when the Democratic platforms of 1860 referred to aid for the construction of a railroad to the Pacific, "within constitutional limits," this precedent stared in the face every man who voted for that resolution; and it was well understood, I presume, what this "constitutional aid" should be.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I ask by unanimous consent that debate on the pending paragraph be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection and it is so ordered.

Mr. ATKINSON's amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States Geological Survey:

For salaries of the scientific assistants of the Geological Survey: For five geologists, at $4,000 each;
For two geologists, at $3,000 each;
For one geologist, $2,700;
For two geologists, at $2,400;
For two geologists, at $2,000;
For one paleontologist, $4,000;
For one paleontologist, $2,000;
For one chemist, $3,000;
For one chemist, $2,000;
For one chief geographer, $2,700;
For three geographers, at $2,500 each;
For one general assistant, $3,000;
For three topographers, at $2,000 each; in all, $67,700.

For general expenses of the Geological Survey: For the Geological Survey, and the classification of the public lands, and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and the products of the national domain, and to continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States, including the pay of temporary employés in the field and office, and all other necessary expenses, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, namely: For pay of skilled laborers and various temporary employés, $15,000.

For topographic surveys in various portions of the United States, including the pay of temporary employés in field and in office, the cost of all instruments, apparatus, and materials, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith, $199,000.

Mr. MORROW. I offer the following amendment:

After line 21 insert:

"For the classification of the public lands of the United States, including pay of temporary employés in field and in office, the cost of all instruments, charts, and materials, and all other necessary expense connected therewith, $25,000."

Mr. Chairman, the Geological Survey was organized under the act of March 3, 1879, in which it was provided—

That this officer—

The Director—

shall have the direction of the Geological Survey and the classification of the public lands and examination of geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain.

In another place it provides—

For the expenses of the Geological Survey and the classification of the public lands and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, under this provision of law the Geological Survey has proceeded to perform the last requirements of the statute, but has failed to perform the first requirement, namely, the classification of the public lands of the United States.

The question naturally asked is, what is the classification of the public lands of the United States contemplated by this act? This question is answered by the first annual report of the Geological Survey, in 1880, immediately after it was organized under the law.

In this report, dated November 1, 1880, it is stated by Mr. King, the then Director, that—

Two special and distinct branches of duty are imposed on the Director of the Geological Survey: first, the classification of the public lands; and second, the examination of the geological structure and mineral resources.

In another portion of the report, Mr. King, the Director, gives his views as to the purpose of Congress in providing for the classification of the public lands as follows:

I have therefore concluded that the intention of Congress was to begin a rigid scientific classification of the lands of the national domain, not for purposes of aiding the machinery of the General Land Office by furnishing a basis of sale, but for the general information of the people of the country, and to produce a series of land maps which should show all those features upon which intelligent agriculturists, miners, engineers, and lumbermen might hereafter base their operations, and which would obviously be of the highest value for all students of the political economy and resources of the United States. Studies of this sort, entirely aside from the administration of the Land Office, can be made of the highest practical value, and to this end a careful beginning has been made.

Mr. King in making this report calls attention to the fact that he had made a careful beginning of the classification of the public lands for agricultural purposes. But the execution of the law in the work required of the Geological Survey as to classification of the public lands has not been entered upon beyond the beginning referred to by Mr. King. The Director has indicated that he would proceed to make that classification as required by the statute with the amount of $25,000 for the coming year. For that reason I have offered the pending amendment.

This matter has been discussed considerably in the West. The farmers and others interested in the public lands ask that this Geological Survey (which has already rendered such important service to the country) shall be extended so as to carry out the primary requirements of the statute and make classification of the public lands. I send up to the Clerk's desk to be read resolutions adopted by the California State Grange in the meeting last fall.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas agriculture lies at the very foundation of our national prosperity, and is justly entitled to an ample share of the fostering care of the General Government; and

Whereas in the opinion of this body it is of the highest importance that accurate and reliable information concerning the agricultural features and peculiarities of the country, and particularly of the newer States and Territories yet to be settled, should be within the reach of the intending settler and immigrant; and

Whereas the law creating the Geological Survey of the public domain of the United States provides for "the classification of the public lands and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and mineral products of the national domain," but in the actual execution of the work the first provision has thus far remained a dead letter, so far as any of the information needed by agriculturists is concerned, while the most elaborate and minute investigation of even the most recondite matters relating to the geological structure and mineral resources has received abundant attention: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the State Grange earnestly prays the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives that steps be taken and provision made to the end that the Geological Survey shall discharge the first duty intrusted to it by law, to wit, "the classification of the public lands," together with such other service to the agricultural development of the country as properly belongs to that effort.

Resolved, That copies hereof be transmitted to the honorable representatives of California in Congress, and that their approval and support of such measures as are needed to attain the result be most earnestly solicited.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. While the statute may authorize the character of survey the amendment proposes, the Geological Survey has not entered upon that work. If it chooses to enter upon it there is $400,000 as heretofore given. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations only a moment ago informed the House that this bill provided for specific appropriations for the use of the Director of the Geological Survey; but under the statement of the gentleman and the wording of the bill it is manifest that the Director of the Geological Survey would not be enabled to appropriate one dollar in the way of doing the work provided in my amendment. I am aware of the fact that the Geological Survey is doing a most valuable work in its examination of the geological structure of the public domain, and in investigating the mineral resources of the United States. Furthermore, I know that its Director is a very competent man, and eminently qualified to conduct the agricultural survey, but he now simply submits to the direction of Congress whether his work shall now include a classification of the public domain for agricultural purposes. It is therefore proper that some action should be taken in the direction of the amendment.

It is not a large appropriation and would be of the greatest benefit to the agricultural people of this country. I would like, if I had time, to read the views of one of the ablest men in this country on this subject. I refer to Professor E. W. Hilgard, of the University of California.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will allow that to be printed, and not take up the time by reading it.

Mr. MORROW. I should like to read a portion of it. It will take only a few minutes, and is important as inducing favorable action on the part of this committee.

Mr. RANDALL. The Director of the Geological Survey did not impress me with any urgency in this particular.

Mr. MORROW. I hope I will be permitted to present to the committee the reasons in support of the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well; I yield to the gentleman the rest of my time.

Mr. MORROW. Professor Hilgard, who occupies the position of professor of agriculture in the University of California, has written and delivered an interesting and able essay upon this subject, and points out some of the preliminary matters connected with this question of the Geological Survey, and the classification of the agricultural lands. He gives reasons which I think strongly support the amendment I have offered. I will read extracts from this essay, and print the whole of it. It is as follows:

AGRICULTURAL WORK BY THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

[Essay by Professor E. W. Hilgard, professor of agriculture, University of California.]

As, owing to the pressure of official duties at this season, I am unable to attend the meeting of agricultural chemists connected with experiment stations, I beg leave to submit in writing, for its consideration, a brief discussion of some points which, to the majority of those likely to be present, may not suggest themselves as forcibly as in the case of those who, like myself, have labored and are now laboring chiefly in regions in which, from whatever causes, agriculture is still passing through its first period of development. When it is considered that such regions comprise nearly all the United States lying west of the Mississippi River, the only material exceptions being the older settled portions of Missouri and Iowa and parts of adjacent States, it is not easy to overestimate the importance not only to that immense territory but to the United States at large of avoiding the mistakes made by the settlers in the older States, of placing within the reach of the actual or intending settler or immigrant a knowledge of the facts and conditions with which he has to deal in his practice, and of the best means to be employed in overcoming the numerous difficulties with which he has to contend in a terra incognita.

It has been broadly claimed, and even somewhat dogmatically contended, in the course of some of the discussions on the subject of the proper functions of the experiment stations, that their main duty and object should be to enlarge the knowledge of agricultural science, and that to act as bureaus of reference and information for the farming population is a departure from their true spirit and intent. I think we can not be too emphatic in the repudiation of any such point of view, and it must be patent to all who have followed the discussions relating to the bills for the establishment of experiment stations, whether by the States or the National Government, that a totally different view of their functions was taken by their advocates, and that on any other basis than that of effectually aiding in the solution of practical questions as they arise no such measures would have had the least chance of acceptance by the several legislative bodies. It is not, however, merely as a matter of good faith with Legislatures and tax-payers that such a course is advisable and necessary.

I contend, and am most thoroughly satisfied from a somewhat protracted experience in such work, that in no other way can we obtain such fruitful subjects of investigation in the domain of agricultural science or be so sure that what we hold to be true does not need a host of corrollaries and provisos in order to render it applicable to all cases. It is the endless multiplicity and variety of the problems presented for solution by the practical farmer that serves as the touchstone of our theories, and by continual attrition, now at this point, now at another, modifies our conceptions into a shape in which we may feel sure of their correctness.

In the presence of the multitude of suggestions and "live" problems thus continually presented to us in the newly-settled regions, the laborious search for proper subjects for investigation, that sometimes troubles our colleagues in the Old World, becomes an unknown quantity, the only danger being that the pressure of details may be so great as to drown to a certain extent the proper pursuit of a subject until it shall have been evolved into a definite form or proposition. The occurrence of such aggravation lies doubtless within the experience of many here present. It can of course be remedied only by a more adequate supply of means, such as is, or will be, afforded by the "Hatch bill" when fully carried into effect.

It should then, in my view, be distinctly understood that the experiment stations so endowed must perform the double function of a bureau of reference and information, and of a laboratory (in the widest sense of the term) where those points in agricultural science most directly interesting to the region for which it is established are investigated to their uttermost ramifications, theoretical and practical.

But that in order that these functions may be fulfilled to the best advantage, the institution should not be obliged to await the tardy and irregular action of applicants for information. It should have the means for getting possession of the actual facts of the case in advance of the settler, or at least of the time when the farmer by irrational practice shall have gotten himself into difficulties which the station will be called upon to solve for him.

The attainment of such knowledge involves, of course, the operations and results of an agricultural survey; and where such work has been done by the States (as is the case in the majority of those lying east of the Mississippi River) the work of the experiment stations will be greatly facilitated, although it is unfortunately true that in but too many cases the "geological and agricultural" surveys provided for by law have rested content with the fulfillment of the first-mentioned attribute, and have left agriculture to shift for itself as best it could.

Even where an attempt has been made to describe and investigate the agricultural features, it has too often been done in such a manner as to indicate, on the part of the director or writer, either a very slim acquaintance with the matter or an unwillingness to give to so distasteful a subject more thought and attention than was absolutely required by the letter of the law.

But for the newer States and Territories, where it is now most urgently needed, no such work has been done and none is at present in prospect. It is true that the law creating the United States Geological Survey provides for "the classification of the public lands, and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain;" and the first report of the Director of that work (1880) states that in his opinion "the intention of Congress was to begin a rigid scientific classification of the lands of the national domain * * * for the general information of the people of the country, and to produce a series of land maps which would show all these features upon which intelligent agriculturists, miners, engineers, and timbermen might hereafter base their operations. * * * And to this end a careful beginning has been made."

It is curious to note that both in the wording of the law and in the remarks of the Director, Mr. Clarence King, the agricultural side of the work is mentioned first, and to compare therewith the actual performance of the Survey during the last six years. It has done excellent work in the way of the much-needed topographical maps; it has laid down on these the geological and mineral features of the regions explored with a degree of accuracy and minuteness which has commanded the admiration of the civilized world and has aided powerfully in the development of the mining industries of the United States. But when we inquire what has been done to benefit the agricultural industry, to give to the farmer or immigrant the needed information so copiously afforded the miner, we quickly come to the conclusion that the agricultural side of the work has been left exactly in the state of "careful beginning" referred to by Director King in 1880.

It is no part of my object to discuss in detail the causes of this pointed omission. It may be said in general that in doing as it did the United States Survey followed the lead of the majority of State surveys; that its work was done in the direction in which there was the greatest active demand, so that while farmers got nothing it is also true that they asked for nothing.

The Land Office has, through its surveyors, actually collected more or less of the information wanted concerning the agricultural adaptations of the lands traversed by them. But this information is of so very general a character, and collected by men so little versed in the subject, that even if it were published in an available form it would be of little avail toward replacing agricultural surveys. The maps and pigeon-holes of the Land Office are not what is wanted either by the farmer or the experiment stations.

It has been suggested that this work be undertaken by the Department of Agriculture. But this would be a revival of the undesirable multiplicity and duplication of public surveys that was done away with by the special act of Congress consolidating all under one head. The topographical and geological work now so well carried out by the Geological Survey is absolutely essential to an intelligent discussion and description of the agricultural features. All the machinery is there, and it only needs an additional endowment and the employment of competent agricultural experts to do all that is necessary in the premises. Were the agricultural work undertaken de novo, endless and unnecessary expense would be incurred in the duplication both of work and of appliances. The functions of the Department of Agriculture and those of such a survey are so clearly distinct that it is difficult to see how any conflicts could arise, as has been feared.

But whatever may be the machinery to be provided, or the department of Government under which this work shall be carried on, it is essential that it should be inaugurated and carried forward as quickly as possible. It is needed by the resident farmer, in order to guide him in his methods of cultivation. It is needed by the immigrant, in order to give him reliable information as to where he may find a home adapted to his wants, outside of the recommendations of interested parties. It is needed by the experiment stations, in order that they may have a basis of well-ascertained facts upon which to conduct their experiments and investigations so as to result in the greatest good to the greatest number, and so as to avoid the most serious mistakes resulting from imperfect reports from persons unused to accurate observation.

Last, but not least, such work forms a most needful basis for truly practical instruction in our agricultural colleges; instruction which shall tell the student not only what he shall do in certain suppositious cases, but also what, in fact and in practice, are the conditions each will have to deal with in his own State.

Without such a basis of accurately observed facts, the experiment stations will never be able to do their best work, from unavoidable ignorance of the conditions under which agriculture exists in their respective fields of action. It is impossible for them to obtain this basis through their own exertions, within any reasonable limits of time. It should be done for them, and for the agricultural population at large as a Government work.

It will be seen, Mr. Chairman, that the omission up to the present time in the Geological Survey, spoken of by Professor Hilgard, relates to the failure on the part of Congress to provide for the classification of the public lands for agricultural purposes. He shows further that this is for the benefit of the experimental stations recently established by acts of Congress in the last year, and points out the fact that in California the experimental stations will be to a large extent useless without the agricultural survey which was originally contemplated by the act of 1879.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. When the farmer buys lands he generally knows what he is going to buy.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MORROW, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 44.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of necessary books for the Library, and the payment for the transmission of public documents through the Smithsonian exchange, $5,000; in all, $400,000.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I make this motion in order to have an opportunity to reply to the remarks made by my friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] in regard to the action of the Republican convention to-day at Chicago. He evidently feels the force of the charge made by that convention, that the Democratic party is not entitled to any credit whatever for forfeiting land grants and restoring them to the public domain.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would suggest to the gentleman that my colleague is not in his seat at present.

Mr. JACKSON. I regret that he is not; but this is the proper time to meet this early attack, and I do not want to miss the opportunity. Republicans hold themselves ready on all occasions to defend their principles and give reasons for the faith that is in them. Possibly what I am going to say will be equally applicable to any Democrat on your side. The Republican platform is an arraignment of the Democratic party before the American people.

Its charges can not be met by simple denials. It is an appeal to facts, to the law, and to the testimony.

Mr. Chairman, when the Republican convention at Chicago stated in its platform of principles, this day adopted, that the Democratic party was not entitled to credit for having restored a single acre of land to the public domain for our people, it was correct and true. It is not necessary now to speak of the disposition and purpose of the Democratic party in this matter, but I consider it sufficient to call attention to the fact that when the land-grant forfeiture bills were passed that party did not have full control of legislation, and could not have passed them if it had wanted to, and hence what is said is strictly correct.

Another thing, when that party claim that 150,000,000 acres of the public domain heretofore granted to corporations have been restored, they make a misstatement of the facts. There is no such quantity involved. Certainly not exceeding 50,000,000 acres have been restored, and it required the Republican Senate, Republican votes in the House, and a Republican Executive to do that. The Democratic party never had an opportunity to do these things, to say as little of their disposition.

To this day not a single acre of land opposite constructed road has been forfeited, no matter whether constructed in or out of time according to the granting acts. All forfeitures of lands granted by a Republican Congress have been made by reason of provisions contained in the granting acts and placed there by Republicans. Still more, the bills making these forfeitures have at least in most cases, and I believe in all, been introduced by Republicans.

It was the Democratic party, when in power before the war, that inaugurated the policy of granting lands to build railroads. They did this to build roads in the old-settled States, where the grant was a pure gift and not necessary to open up a new country.

Our Democratic friends have so little to be proud of on this whole land question that after they search through their whole record they are compelled to rest it all upon the reputation of one man, Hon. W. A. J. Sparks, late Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Day after day our attention is called to his wonderful and extraordinary honesty, until the impression is created that he was the only original honest man in the present Administration. He was at least so conspicuous an instance in that party that he is pointed out as a remarkable exception. [Laughter.] Unfortunately for Democratic orators, as soon as his reputation was firmly established the Democratic Administration kicked him out of its inclosure.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] claims some credit to his party from the fact that the lands it voted to build railroads were made as gifts to the States. He does this in the face of the fact that the State was thereby made a mere trustee, and the acts expressly stated on their face that they were for the use of railroads. Why, let me ask, is it not just as much a gift if made to a State in trust for railroad purposes as if made to the railroad direct? It is simply the roundabout way of doing the same thing.

It is as much harm to take the public lands and grant them to a State to be squandered in railroad uses as it is to grant them direct to the railroads.

But, sir, if I had time, I would like to point out some other ways the Democratic party squandered the public lands when it was in power. It would be easy to show its inconsistency in this regard. Among these I would call attention to its gifts of the swamp lands, the most stupendous frauds ever practiced in this country—millions of the best lands given away under the pretense that they were worthless.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania on my right [Mr. ATKINSON] has well shown that in the grant of lands to the State of Illinois, by reason of which the Illinois Central Railroad was built, that there was not a reservation in that act as claimed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], and is a full answer to the gentleman's remarks on that point. I have them here before me, and I might quote from other acts, some passed earlier than the Illinois act and some subsequent to it, of the same character, showing that the Democratic party when in power made many grants of public lands for building railroads, and without any reservations whatever.

I refer to the acts in relation to Alabama, to Florida, and to many other States. Grants were made for the express purpose of constructing railroads. Mr. Chairman, the Republicans may well go before the people pointing to their record upon this question. The general policy of the Republican party has always been to give the public lands to actual settlers. That has been the record of the party, a record of which it may well be proud. Its history is indissolubly associated with the grand homestead act, introduced into Congress by a Republican, the honorable gentleman who formerly presided over the deliberations of this House, Hon. Galusha A. Grow, of Pennsylvania. It is a part of the history of our country that the homestead law has given more homes to actual settlers than any other legislation we have ever had.

It is true the Republican party made grants, made gifts, if you choose to so call them, of public lands to aid in the construction of important continental railroads. They were made at a time of great peril to the country, at a time when the country needed the aid and assistance of these lines of transportation for military purposes. Some may even doubt the policy of going to the extent to which the Republican party then went; but its motives were good, its purposes were right, its purposes were to open up that vast country—a country without rivers, and that could not be settled without railroads. The policy of the Democratic party has always been wrong. It has made gifts where there was no special or urgent need of public improvements. It has made gifts to corporations to build railroads in settled communities like Illinois, Alabama, Mississippi, and Florida.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a vote on the pending paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON] withdraw his pro forma amendment?

Mr. JACKSON. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Protection and improvement of Hot Springs, Arkansas: For providing a system of reservoirs, pumps, piping, etc., and for other purposes necessary to the collection and economical distribution of the hot water, $31,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do it for the purpose of obtaining information with reference to the necessity of this appropriation. I have some information upon the subject gathered upon the spot; but I am not certain it is sufficient or accurate enough to determine my course in the matter. I understand that at the Hot Springs, Arkansas, there is a Government reservation. I understand that upon that reservation are erected a number of hotels, boarding-houses, and some private dwellings. I do not know whether the owners of the buildings erected give any recompense to the United States for the privilege they enjoy. It is a very valuable privilege to be allowed to erect buildings upon that reservation. They have the use of the hot water which has, I believe, some curative properties. Upon the face of this paragraph it seems as though it was intended the United States should expend $30,000 in collecting, gathering together, and piping this hot water which is used by the hotels and at these boarding-houses. Unless I understand that the proprietors of these institutions pay something for this privilege I am opposed to making the appropriation. The Government has there a free bath-house and also has a hospital to which may go officers of the Army whose past course of life has been such that they find it necessary in their declining years to rid themselves of disease which has accumulated and clogged their systems.

But aside from that I know of no governmental use to which that can be put. As I said at the outset, my information is not as full as I desire, and it may be inaccurate. But until informed as to whether the Government receives anything for these privileges I am opposed to making this appropriation.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. In company with the superintendent of the Hot Springs Reservation and the representative from the Congressional district, who is not now here, I passed over this reservation, or so much of it as produces hot water.

A very brief explanation will show the necessity for this appropriation. All the hot water furnished upon the reservation is from the base of what is known as the Hot Springs Mountain. I should think the distance of the water flow would be about one-quarter to one-half a mile. At the base of the mountain the hotels and baths are situated. This real estate belongs to the Government. It has been leased temporarily for the use of hotels and bath-houses to those who have erected and occupied them. For this use the Government of the United States receives rents. All the bath-houses with one or two exceptions are situated at the base of the mountain; but at the north end of what is known as Wichita avenue, the principal avenue of the city, they have in two or three instances allowed the water to be conveyed to bath-houses at or beyond the reservation.

The city has extended to the south to a very considerable extent. Hotels have been built at the south end of the reservation; but no hot water is furnished to the south part of the city at all. It is going to waste. It passes from the base of the mountains to these reservoirs and from the reservoirs to the baths; and that which is not used goes into the Hot Springs Creek, runs off and is wasted. Now, it was thought, and it seems to me a very fair proposition, that it was best to create additional reservoirs to save this waste of water, to store it at the south end of the reservation so that it might be passed off and used in the bath-houses and the hotels in the south end of the city.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Free?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. No, sir; I will come to that in a moment.

At the north end of the city they are already supplied. Along the base of the mountains they are amply supplied. At the south end of the city there is no hot-water supply at all, and this water is going to waste. Now, the United States in all instances rents the use of its reservation and the use of its water from the Hot Springs, and the purpose is to charge water-rents for the additional supply that is to be furnished by this appropriation. The object of the appropriation is to reservoir a supply of water to accommodate additional bath-houses, for which the Government is to collect rents, and the fact is that by those rents the Government will not only reimburse this outlay, but will make a profit beyond. More than that, I understand it is provided that hereafter the rents to be charged by the Government for the bath-houses and the hotels shall be increased.

From the information which I have I know that the Government can increase its income there by 100 per cent., and I understand that it intends to do so just as soon as the present leases expire. The object of this appropriation, therefore, is simply to reservoir this water and sell it; and in a year, or perhaps in a less time, the Government can reimburse itself for this entire outlay. Furthermore, it is an outrage to allow the north end of the city to monopolize the use of this hot water. A very large part of the southern portion of the city is totally unsupplied, and people who have to go to the hotels there have to take the street-cars and then walk a considerable distance to reach the baths, while at the north end the customers of the Arlington and other houses there can walk from under the roofs of the hotels into a bath-house. In my opinion there never was anything more proper than this appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. The statements of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] are so clear and conclusive, and I hope so satisfactory to the gentleman from New Jersey, that I will not detain the committee.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The physical facts I was acquainted with before. I have been there, and I know the topography of the whole region. But I would like to know under what Department of the Government this business of renting out the water is conducted?

Mr. MCRAE. Under the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I never knew before that the Government had gone into the water business. I knew that it had been in the whisky business for a long time. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, this shows that it is reforming, going from whisky to water. [Laughter.]

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] has very clearly and fully stated the situation of this matter. I simply want to add that these new bath-houses are to be supplied with water as the existing ones are, at so much a tub. I believe the charge is to be $40. Under the regulations a hotel can not have less than ten, nor more than fifty tubs. This appropriation is in the interest of economy of the water, and it is also designed to accommodate the public and the hotel people alike. I trust, therefore, that the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey will be withdrawn.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

EDUCATION IN ALASKA.

For the education of the children of school age in the Territory of Alaska, without reference to race, $25,000.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 20, 21, and 22, and insert as follows:

"For the education of the children of school age in the Territory of Alaska, without reference to race, $50,000; and for the support and education of Indian pupils of both sexes at industrial schools in Alaska, $20,000; the whole fund for education in Alaska to be under the control of the Bureau of Education, under regulations prescribed and to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I shall want more than five minutes to discuss this amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed ten minutes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, it is due to the Committee on Appropriations to say that the remarkable deficiency of the appropriation for education in Alaska is not the fault of that committee; nor, as I said the other day, is it the fault of the Committee on Indian Affairs. The situation is such now that everybody wants to appropriate $45,000, and yet nobody has tried to appropriate more than $25,000, and it is the fault of the Department of the Interior in not properly distributing its estimates.

The Secretary of the Interior recommends "in addition to the $20,000 heretofore given for the education of Indians in industrial schools in Alaska the further sum of $50,000 for the education of children of school age in the general schools without regard to race."

Mr. Chairman, that sum of $50,000 is what I am now contending for. I presume that nobody will oppose the giving of the $20,000 and the $25,000, and I simply appeal to this House, as a matter of humanity, to give the whole $50,000 instead of the $25,000 which is proposed to be allowed by this bill.

This Territory has no representative here. There is no politics in this matter. But up yonder in the land of the midnight sun are 39,000 people, 27,000 of them being Indians, 5,000 white people, and the rest Aleuts, civilized and intelligent. There are 5,000 children of school age, of whom only 1,700 are now attending school.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman allow me to repeat a statement which has been made to me, a statement which calls for a reply, if any can be had? A gentleman who has been intimately acquainted with the schools in Alaska and all the affairs of that Territory told me recently that the schools are entire failures in this respect: That the young children are allowed to go to school for the purpose of getting rid of them, but just as soon as the girls come to the age of womanhood they are taken away from the schools by their mothers and sold for purposes of prostitution. This, he informed me, is the extent of the whole business. I am not responsible for his statement, for I have no personal knowledge on the subject.

Mr. MCCOMAS. For any statements I may make I have the authority of Rev. Sheldon Jackson, the agent in charge of the schools there, and also the authority of the Commissioner of Education, who, since the passage of the last appropriation bill, went to Alaska under the order of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the way most of the money is used—in paying salaries and in going back and forth.

Mr. MCCOMAS. No, sir; not as respects the matter now under consideration. It is not the fault of the Secretary of the Interior that Alaska is pretty far from Washington. But it is the fault of this House if after the compact we have made in regard to the care of that Territory we leave those people to take care of themselves because that country is 5,000 or 6,000 miles distant.

In reply to the statement referred to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] I will say that the trouble in that country is rather with polygamy than with the system of prostitution. It is sought now to obviate that trouble by sending out there married school teachers. Missions have been established there by the Catholics, the Moravians, the Presbyterians, and possibly other denominations, and the Russian Greek Church flourishes. There is abundant proof to justify a denial of the statement of the informant of the gentleman from Ohio; and this denial should certainly be sufficient as against the information of one man who traveled in Alaska, and who perhaps obtained his information from somebody else, for the chances are that he went there in the summer time, when there was no school, and did not ascertain personally the facts.

What are the facts? Of five thousand children in that Territory who are entitled to school privileges we are now providing for but seventeen hundred. What more? When we acquired Alaska by treaty from Russia we promised that we would care for the common schools of that Territory. We sent our officers there to take possession twenty years ago, and the first request of the people was for common schools. We waited for nearly twenty years before, by the act of 1884, we began to war against immorality, before we gave them any schools at all under an organic law. This is our Territory, extending as far in one way as the distance from San Francisco to Washington and as far in the other direction as the distance from Maine to Florida; yet we have no schools in that vast Territory except in the southeastern corner. What has Russia done for that Territory? Russia to-day supports seventeen schools in that Territory by annual appropriations of her own funds. For churches and schools in Alaska the great Empire of Russia gives $60,000 this year, whereas we are giving only $45,000. I say this is not only a breach of honor and treaty compact, but a disgrace to our civilization. I appeal to this House that when Russia, an alien power, upon the ground of humanity and without any obligation in the matter, has expended $60,000 a year for education in Alaska, we should give at least $70,000 for the same object in this our own Territory.

Those people there are our people, not the people of Russia; yet Russia is spending as a matter of charity and humanity $15,000 more for schools in that Territory than this bill proposes to appropriate on behalf of the United States. In contrast with the conduct of the great autocratic power of Russia, which makes provision for the people there without any contract obligation on her part, and without any claim of citizenship or nationality on behalf of those people, we propose to ignore our obligations and to appropriate only $45,000. I ask Congress to expend in behalf of those 39,000 people the very moderate sum proposed in my amendment.

Why, sir, we have pending in this House an appropriation bill for the District of Columbia, which proposes to expend for a population of 225,000, $1,036,000. I am asking for the education of 39,000 people in Alaska only $70,000. This is the whole expenditure asked for this people situated remote from this capital. It is true that much of the money must necessarily be spent in travel, which can not be shortened.

Sir, the Territory of Alaska had a commerce in the last year of $7,000,000. She poured into the coffers of this Government during that year $325,000. That amount we took from her. She has no legislature and can raise no revenue. Having collected from her $325,000 we spent $16,000 for official salaries in that Territory. My amendment asks you only to give back to her $70,000 of her own money, which she can not appropriate and which we ought not to wring from her people, denying to them the common schools which they would provide for themselves if they had a legislature and an organized government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McCOMAS. I would like a little more time on this question. I have occupied no time on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, when we took possession of that Territory there were five schools in Sitka. Russia having kept up her seventeen schools, we have managed to increase the number of ours to fifteen. It appears that the Government has organized there a school board, consisting of the governor of the Territory, the judge of the court, and Mr. Jackson, the educational agent. This board asks for $77,000; but the Commissioner of Education, a very reliable officer, who has made a personal inspection of affairs there, says that they can get along this year with $50,000. Now, I ask the committee to look at this calculation and see how far $50,000 will go in this work. The sum of $15,000 is expended for salaries. You send out there as school-teachers men with wives, in order to avoid the danger and disgrace of polygamy and that the system of American civilization may prevail in that Territory. These mothers and fathers teach the schools and the monogamic life of the Christian home and family. They teach the language of our own country in the schools that have been established under our laws. These fifteen school-teachers have had their salaries reduced because of the scant appropriation. They have now but few school-houses. They have fifteen schools, the Commissioner reports. They want at least eleven more schools, located in as many centers of population.

Under this hot summer's sun we are far away from that land of the midnight sun, where arctic cold prevails for nine months in the year; they need good, warm school-houses. They have no access to their own revenues. If my amendment were adopted you could give them the eleven new schools which they require, and they could have eleven new teachers provided for them. This is not too much for us to do for the Territory of Alaska, which embraces 600,000 square miles of the public domain. The schools can not get along with less.

The teachers who went out there under the promise of $800 and $1,000 a year found their salaries reduced because of the smallness of the appropriation made by this House. I repeat, it is a disgrace to our country, because these people have no votes and no friends, to deny them common schools. I ask that we give them money enough to carry out the beneficent policy which has been lately inaugurated there in their behalf. It does not concern you or me, but it does concern the honor of our Government. It does concern the statesman who, taking long views, looks into the future and foresees the growth, after railways cross Behring Sea to Asia, of this great Territory of Alaska, and who would therefore make proper provision in time for the education of that community.

If the amendment be adopted as I have offered it the result will be to give one school to each settlement in the Territory of Alaska. When the Territory was in possession of Russia there were five schools for a single settlement. It will also provide one school for each Indian settlement in Alaska. And on that proposition I invoke the favorable judgment of this House as a matter of humanity. The Secretary of the Interior recommends $50,000 as a sufficient appropriation to keep these schools in a flourishing condition in Alaska. The Commissioner of Education, who went there and examined into the matter for himself, reports in favor of it. My amendment will only make the aggregate appropriation $70,000, which is only $10,000 more than the autocratic Government of Russia appropriated for a like purpose for our people.

Mr. COBB. What has become of the $20,000 appropriated in the appropriation bill?

Mr. McCOMAS. That was struck out by the Senate because the Secretary wished it appropriated by this bill.

Mr. COBB. Is it not in this bill?

Mr. McCOMAS. No, it is not in the Indian appropriation bill nor in this bill; but it is provided for here by my amendment, here where the Department desires it. Consider the rebuke of autocratic Russia when she supports for our citizens common schools which we deny them—we, the representatives of the greatest Republic on earth.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I was a member of the House at the time, and voted to pay Russia $7,500,000 as the purchase money for Alaska. In doing so, I did not, however, agree to purchase any of the methods of the Russian Government, which the Greek Church exercised in control of the education of the children in that Territory under the Russian Government.

I agree in what has been said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR], that the amount appropriated in this connection has been more or less a waste of public money. It has been largely absorbed by people going out to Alaska and coming back again.

When the gentleman cites the testimony of Sheldon Jackson in that connection I would say the House had better not take what he says without some degree of allowance. My observation of the gentleman's method warrants me in saying that much at least. If he were here I would say much more.

Mr. McCOMAS. What does the gentleman say about Mr. Dawson, who is Commissioner of Education?

Mr. RANDALL. I believe Mr. Dawson, the Commissioner of Education, is an upright gentleman. In this matter I think he is governed more by sentiment than by any belief that it is going to benefit the children in that Territory.

Mr. McCOMAS. He was there himself last summer.

Mr. RANDALL. We have always looked upon this appropriation with doubt, because a close investigation of it has convinced us it has not been properly expended, and did not reach any substantial benefit in the way of education to these children. But the House by a moderate vote disagreed with me on the last sundry civil appropriation bill and appropriated $25,000. Now we have a proposition to increase that amount to $50,000. I hope that will not be done, and I hope the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] will not press his amendment to increase the appropriation.

As to the governor of the Territory of Alaska, I should be glad if the appropriation for his salary could be put in such a shape as would compel him to remain in the Territory of Alaska and discharge the duties of his office instead of running around the halls of Congress. It would be a wise expenditure of the public money if that could be done.

I do not want to see any more money than is recommended by the committee attached to the bill in this particular; because I do not believe experience warrants it; and I agree fully with what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] on the other side said when he expressed the opinion that from information derived on what he believes to be reliable authority, and from the personal knowledge of the party from whom he received the statement, that this appropriation, and the whole of it, is a waste of the public funds of the Government.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I move to strike out the last word.

I did not intend to assume the statement involved in my question propounded to the gentleman from Maryland as being true. I said I had been informed recently by a man who was thoroughly acquainted with this country and the matter of schools out there that the facts which I suggested in my question were true. It made such an impression upon my mind that I could not avoid thinking that before any other money is expended in this direction the truth of the statement should be made known.

I will say further in this connection, what I did not say then, that the details of the information which came to my knowledge so unexpectedly and so strikingly did convince me that there was substantial truth in his statement; and if the statement be true the expenditure of this money is worse than wasted. It is simply bringing a class of people to a position where they are desirable for the purpose I have suggested, and leaving them in the hands of what are called in that country the "squaw men"—lazy white men, loafing about the mines, who, by means of a few blankets, purchase these school children, who are taken away, and lose everything they have in their prospective homes.

I do not make it as my own statement; but it comes to me from a well-informed source, a man who has spent years out there, and who knows every one of these educators; a man who has seen the very transactions of which he speaks, and hence speaks from personal knowledge of the facts.

Mr. McCOMAS. I would like to ask my friend from Ohio before he takes his seat a question, with his consent.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Certainly.

Mr. McCOMAS. In the first place, let me say that the Commissioner of Education went out there at the instance of Secretary Lamar and investigated the matter, and talks here at great length in favor of these schools. But my question is this: If there should be among a semi-civilized people a low grade of morals, am I to understand the gentleman from Ohio to say that the remedy would be to take away from the people the common schools with a view to their moral improvement?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. No; but I would begin by taking away that kind of schooling which operates only in the way I have suggested.

But there is a way of getting at it, and of giving these people complete protection in this regard at the same time; and the way to get that protection is to reorganize thoroughly—reorganize the whole system, if this system is such as has been suggested.

Mr. McCOMAS. Well, last summer—in August and October—the whole system was thoroughly organized; and there are pure men and pure women, husbands and wives, teaching out there, and gradually breaking up this polygamy and prostitution which prevails throughout the country, establishing the system on a thoroughly Christian basis, with ministers of the Presbyterian Church and other ministers of churches gathered out there, all working in the interest of charity and humanity, and bringing about good results in the civilization of this class of people.

Mr. SPRINGER. I propose a pro forma amendment for the purpose of saying a word.

I understand the gentleman from Maryland to say that under some treaty obligations we are to educate these children in Alaska.

Mr. McCOMAS. I say that under the treaty made between Russia and the United States—between Mr. Seward and the Russian minister here—promises have been made by which these people are to have all of the rights, privileges, immunities, and advantages of American citizens, and you recognize that obligation by the organic act whereby we pledge them a common-school system by the appropriation of $25,000 for the beginning of it. And not only so, Mr. Chairman, but we pledged them by acts of Congress recognizing the validity of that treaty obligation and interpreting it for ourselves by the appropriation act of 1884, whereby we provided a fund for the schools out there, besides the moral obligation which rests upon us under the terms of the treaty.

Mr. SPRINGER. The statement of the gentleman from Maryland is not quite correct, I think. It is not a quite correct statement of the action of the Government to say that we pledged anything by simply an act of legislation.

Mr. McCOMAS. I stated that we were morally obligated, and that this Government was pledged by the terms of the treaty.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understood the gentleman to say that by the treaty obligations we were required to educate the children out there.

Mr. McCOMAS. The language of the treaty which I have already quoted——

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, I will read the language of the treaty.

Mr. McCOMAS. Very well; the gentleman will find, I think, that my statement was entirely correct.

Mr. SPRINGER. The language is—

> That they shall be admitted to all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States, and shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

That refers to their political rights and protection under our form of Government.

Mr. McCOMAS. Does not that include the right which our laws confer upon any poor man of sending his children to the common schools?

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman claim that the act by which we acquired Texas, and by which we acquired control of Louisiana, or of any other portion of foreign territory upon this soil, created any obligation on our part to educate the children?

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the gentleman tell me what State or Territory does not provide a common-school system?

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, that is maintained throughout the States at their own expense.

Mr. McCOMAS. And in the Territories.

Mr. SPRINGER. This only is claimed on the ground that there are some indigent Indians and half-civilized people there that we are obliged to take care of and educate, which would not be the case if they were civilized people capable of looking after their own interests. I am opposed to an increase of appropriation. What the people of Alaska require is not the education of these half-civilized nomadic tribes or their children. They require some form of Government by which the rights of persons and of property can be secured and people can acquire title to their lands. This is what is needed in order to develop that Territory. The efforts of humanitarians in the direction of educating the youth of that Territory are all very well. I think we should leave this matter to the missionary societies. They are doing great good in their work, and are not asking any aid from the Government. Let them go on in their efforts to civilize these Indians and educate their children. I have no objection to appropriating the sum provided in this bill, $25,000. I think it is ample. I am utterly opposed to the large increase of appropriation provided for in the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, namely, $70,000.

Mr. McCOMAS. Does the gentleman understand what the increase really is?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes.

Mr. McCOMAS. How much?

Mr. SPRINGER. Seventy thousand dollars. The bill provides for $25,000.

Mr. McCOMAS. No, sir. The conceded sum is $20,000 for Indian industrial schools, and $25,000 for general education. My increase is $25,000 added to the $45,000. I want to appropriate the sum Secretary Lamar and Commissioner Dawson asked for, namely, an increase of $25,000. My friend misunderstands me. It is only an increase of $25,000. The committee would have granted the increase if it had been brought to our attention before this time.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then your increase is $25,000?

Mr. McCOMAS. That is all. The bill now provides for $45,000, and I simply add $25,000, according to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner.

Mr. SPRINGER. And also $25,000 provided in the Indian bill.

Mr. McCOMAS. The $25,000 which has been in the Indian bill for the last eight years now goes into this bill. It is an increase of from $45,000 to $70,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] withdraw his pro forma amendment?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I do.

[Mr. JACKSON withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I now ask that debate on this paragraph be closed.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to have about six minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing to——

Mr. McCOMAS. Say ten minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, I am not going to waste the public time in that way.

Mr. McCOMAS. We have wasted two days here digging up old politics.

Mr. RANDALL. Entirely without my consent.

Mr. McCOMAS. I appeal to the gentleman to allow us ten minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I want five or six minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] asked fifteen minutes for himself and got it.

Mr. McCOMAS. But other gentlemen desire to be heard on this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Then you ought to have given them a part of your time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed?

Mr. McCOMAS. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of general appropriation bills, and pending that I move that debate upon the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to one-half minute.

Mr. McCOMAS. I move to amend that by making the time ten minutes.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. McCOMAS, and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 40.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Pending the vote by tellers the following proceedings took place:

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I want only five minutes for the purpose of saying that I have known Sheldon Jackson fifteen years and know him to be an honest man.

Mr. RANDALL. I spoke of him only in his public capacity.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Well, I have known him personally and intimately, and I know him to be a man of integrity, intelligence, honesty, energy, earnestness, and as thorough a Christian as I ever knew, and I would vouch for him through and through.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know anything about his Christianity, and I have not said anything about that.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That is all I desire to say. I only wanted my statement on that point to appear in the RECORD as against that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

The tellers reported—ayes 49, noes 62.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is not agreed to.

The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of general appropriation bills.

Mr. RANDALL. And pending that I move that when the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the appropriation bill, all debate upon the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to half a minute.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to further consider the pending appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto is limited to one-half minute. If no gentleman wishes to occupy that time——

Mr. MCCOMAS. If nobody else desires to speak——

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say that the effect of the amendment——

Mr. MCCOMAS. I thought the gentleman might be willing to yield the half minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. RANDALL. I have already allowed the gentleman to lug into the RECORD a remark which was out of order, in reply to a remark of mine.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. If you object to that remark, withdraw what you have said.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; I do not desire to take back anything I have said, nor to have the gentleman withdraw anything he has said.

The effect of this amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed for debate has expired.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MCCOMAS, it was rejected; there being—ayes 32, noes 45.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter it shall be the duty of the Inter-state-Commerce Commission to include in their annual report to Congress a statement showing in detail their expenditures for each fiscal year, including the number of persons employed and the amount of compensation to each.

Mr. TOOLE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of investigating the extent to which the arid region of the United States can be redeemed by irrigation, and the segregation of the irrigable lands in such arid region, and for the selection of sites for reservoirs and other hydraulic works necessary for the storage and utilization of water for irrigation, and to make the necessary maps, including the pay of employés in field and in office, the cost of all instruments, apparatus, and materials, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith, the work to be performed by the Geological Survey, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, the sum of $250,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I make a point of order on this amendment, but I am willing to reserve it to allow the gentleman who offers the amendment [Mr. TOOLE] to be heard.

[Mr. TOOLE withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order against the amendment is well taken.

The Clerk read as follows, under the heading "Watervliet arsenal, West Troy, N. Y.:"

For two steam-boilers for running steam-engine at shops, and for heating purposes, $8,600; in all, $44,850.

Mr. TRACEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 12 and 13, the words "in all, $44,850" and insert:

"For necessary railway facilities in arsenal grounds, connecting shops with Delaware and Hudson Canal Company Railroad, Erie Canal, and with the Hudson River, $8,458; for replacing the present old and unsuitable wooden bridge over the Erie Canal with an iron bridge adapted to the present wants of the arsenal, capacity 130 tons, $15,000; in all, $68,308."

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, on Saturday last, when the military appropriation bill was under consideration, I offered an amendment designed to supply this arsenal with machinery and implements, the sum proposed to be appropriated being $126,000. That amendment had the support of the Committee on Military Affairs, and the Chief of Ordnance and the Secretary of War had sent letters to the committee urging an appropriation of that amount. The amendment was, however, ruled out on a point of order.

It was my intention during the consideration of this bill to offer an amendment proposing a larger expenditure than that now under consideration—in all about $100,000. But after consultation with my colleague from New York [Mr. GREENMAN] and the members of the Appropriation Committee, we have come to the conclusion that the work now being carried on there would be very much advanced by the appropriation embraced in this amendment, and it being of so much importance to secure something, I have deemed it proper not to urge an appropriation for a larger amount. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I am instructed by a majority of the subcommittee to accept this amendment; and I believe such is the judgment and wish of the majority of the Committee on Appropriations, upon further information which has been obtained from the gentleman representing the Albany district [Mr. TRACEY] as well as the Representative from Troy [Mr. GREENMAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improvement, maintenance, and care of Smithsonian Grounds, including construction of asphalt roads and parks, $10,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend by striking out in the paragraph just read the word "parks," and inserting "paths." This amendment is merely to correct a misprint.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Military Posts:

For the construction of buildings at and the enlargement of such military posts as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary, $250,000.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "$250,000" and inserting "$400,000." I do not wish to occupy the time of the Committee of the Whole, but will state briefly the purposes of the amendment. In 1886 the now general of the Army recommended the enlargement of the buildings at Fort Snelling for the purpose of establishing a rendezvous there for a regiment, to be distributed over the Northwest as emergencies might arise. There are now there fifteen buildings, partially unoccupied. There are five companies now established there. The original estimate of the Secretary of War was $65,000 for the enlargement of the barracks and establishment of four companies at that post. He has made a revised estimate, recommending an appropriation of $85,000 for the purpose of rebuilding barracks, making, with the buildings now occupied, a convenient rendezvous for eight companies. There are now five companies. The original estimate was for four companies. The old barracks at Fort Snelling are now in such a state of dilapidation that they can not be used with proper regard to the comfort or health of the troops; and the proposed enlargement is absolutely necessary, as, in addition to the five companies already there, three more are to be placed there by the Secretary of War and the general of the Army.

For Fort Snelling barracks, Book of Estimates, pages 181–2, March 3, 1887, $65,000; for additional barracks, June 4, 1888, $150,000; making the whole amount for barracks, construction, and enlargement $791,287; which added to the revised estimates of $85,000 would make a total of $876,287.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations give $50,000 more for military posts than for many years. Only to-day the Quartermaster-General was present in the room of the Committee on Appropriations and expressed himself satisfied.

The object of the amendment is to make an increase at Fort Snelling. The Committee on Appropriations have never deemed it to be wise so to legislate. They have fixed the amount and permitted the Quartermaster-General or the War Department to determine the points at which the money should be expended.

Fort Snelling is not one of the points, so far as the investigation has gone, which is likely to receive the first consideration. I believe Atlanta is the point which will have first consideration. The second one is San Antonio. Some gentleman near me suggests Fort Porter. I forget the name of the third place.

I think this is large enough, when we come to recollect there has been put into the Army appropriation bill an item for a military post at Chicago. The appropriations this year, as recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs and by the Committee on Appropriations, will be double what they have been for many years.

Mr. RICE. I ask to have published, as part of my remarks, the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. RICE. It will be seen from this letter what the recommendation of the Secretary is.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 4, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of a communication from the Secretary of War of the 1st instant, submitting a modified estimate of appropriation of $150,000 for the erection of barracks at Fort Snelling, Minn., in lieu of the estimate for such object on page 182 of the Book of Estimates for 1889.

Respectfully yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., June 1, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit, for the consideration of Congress, a modified estimate of $150,000, as required for the erection of new barracks at Fort Snelling, Minn.

In Book of Estimates for 1888 and 1889, page 182, it will be seen that an item of $65,000 appears for barracks for four companies.

As it is proposed to increase the garrison to eight companies, it is recommended that the sum first proposed, namely, $65,000, be increased to $150,000, which will also cover the cost of the necessary apparatus for heating and lighting the barracks, an item which was not included in the estimate as first submitted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

ESTIMATES OF APPROPRIATIONS REQUIRED FOR THE SERVICE OF THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1889, BY THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Military posts:

For the construction of new barracks at Fort Snelling, Minn., for eight companies. (March 3, 1889, vol. 24, p. 531, sec. 1.) Submitted $150,000

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, D. C., May 28, 1888.

SIR: Referring to the item, $65,000, for the construction of barracks at the post of Fort Snelling, Minn., contained in the estimates for the next fiscal year, now pending before the Committee on Appropriations, I have the honor to request the views and recommendations of the War Department upon the proposition to increase the amount of the appropriation for this purpose to the sum of $150,000.

I am informed that plans and estimates for the enlargement of the post were prepared and forwarded by Brigadier-General Ruger, commanding the Department of Dakota, more than a year ago, and are now on file in the War Department. These, I understand, provide for the construction of barracks to accommodate eight companies of infantry, at a cost of about $131,000, with $16,000 additional for heating and lighting, and it is presumed that it is upon these estimates that the appropriation of $65,000, to accommodate four companies of infantry, is based.

The reasons for the allotment of a larger amount are as follows:

First. The sum recommended ($65,000) will, I am informed, not be sufficient to furnish accommodations for the present garrison at the post. At the date of General Sheridan's action upon the estimate the garrison consisted of four companies of infantry and a battery of artillery. This force has since been increased by the addition of one company, which, after the completion of the new barracks, must of necessity remain in their present quarters and be isolated from the rest of the command.

Second. No provision whatever is made for heating and lighting the barracks. This is a serious matter, and it is believed should be provided for, both on the ground of economy and for climatic reasons.

Third. The objection that quarters recently occupied by the department commander and his staff are insufficient for an eight-company post can be obviated by the use of the six sets of frame quarters in the rear of the office building and the seven sets of officers' quarters (frame) near the same building and now used by the officers of the garrison.

For many years past the enlargement of Fort Snelling to a regimental post has been eagerly desired by the people of the Northwest, and I have now before me a memorial of the citizens of St. Paul, through a committee of the Chamber of Commerce, urgently requesting action on the part of the representatives from the State of Minnesota for an appropriation sufficient to carry out this object.

Very respectfully,

EDWARD RICE,
Member of Congress, Fourth Minnesota District.

Hon. WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

[First indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 1, 1888.

Respectfully returned to the honorable the Secretary of War.

On February 18, 1887, the Lieutenant-General recommended the erection of two new barracks for four companies, at a cost of $65,000; and an item calling for that sum appears in the Book of Estimates for 1888 and 1889. This amount made no provision for the expense attending the lighting or heating of the buildings.

From these papers it appears that shelter should be provided for eight companies, and that the Lieutenant-General is in favor of increasing the sum first proposed from $65,000 to $150,000.

It is recommended that Congress be asked for this increased amount, namely, $150,000.

S. B. HOLABIRD,
Quartermaster-General.

[Memorandum.]

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., May 29, 1888.

The Lieutenant-General (as his annual reports will show) has for some time been of the opinion that as the location of Fort Snelling possesses such military advantages, the garrison should be increased. An appropriation of $150,000 would suffice for the construction of barracks for eight companies; the buildings formerly occupied by the headquarters of the department would afford accommodation for the officers of four companies, and the adjacent officers' quarters of the old post would shelter comfortably the officers of the other four companies until such time as an additional appropriation might provide more permanent arrangements.

For these reasons the Lieutenant-General is in favor of the proposition to increase the sum first proposed for this purpose from $65,000 to $150,000.

By command of Lieutenant-General Sheridan.

S. E. BLUNT,
Lieutenant-Colonel and A. D. C.

Mr. RICE's amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cavalry and artillery school, Fort Riley, Kans.: For continuing the work of buildings for the cavalry and artillery school, $100,000.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For macadamizing roads at Fort Leavenworth, $10,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order there is no law authorizing such an amendment?

Mr. MORRILL. Does the Chair sustain the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kansas on the point of order.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no desire to make any remarks on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order and rules the amendment out.

The Clerk read as follows:

New York, N. Y.: For completing the work of remodeling the old Produce Exchange building, $65,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall cause the public building in New York City, erected in place of the old Produce Exchange, to be completed and occupied without unnecessary delay; and to facilitate the work on said building, all expenditures upon the same shall be subject to the control and direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. RANDALL. I move, on page 65, line 15, after the word "same," to insert "including those from the appropriations for the support of the Army."

I submit this amendment under direction of the Committee on Appropriations. It is in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance and repair of military and seacoast telegraph lines, including rent of offices, salaries of civilian operators and repairmen, lights, stoves and fixtures, supplies, and general repairs, $23,000.

Mr. MORROW. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 6, page 69:

"Provided, That whenever it is in the interest of economy the Chief Signal Officer is authorized in his discretion to rent wires in telegraph lines and spare conductors in submarine telegraph cables owned by corporations or private individuals.

"For the rental, in the discretion of the Chief Signal Officer, of two wires between the signal office in the city of San Francisco, Cal., and Black Point, $100.

"For the rental, in the discretion of the Chief Signal Officer, of a conductor in the submarine cable between Fort Point and Lime Point, across the Golden Gate, at San Francisco, Cal., $600."

Mr RANDALL. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, the necessity for the amendment arises out of the following state of facts: An appropriation was made in the Forty-ninth Congress for building a line of telegraph from San Francisco to Point Reyes for the purpose of transmitting weather reports and other Government messages to San Francisco. Contracts were made for a line from the opposite side of the bay from San Francisco to Point Reyes. It was then supposed that the Signal Office would have the use of the Government cable from Black Point to Alcatraz, and then all that would be required to complete the line across the Golden Gate would be a short line of cable from Alcatraz to the main land. Within three months this Government cable between Alcatraz and Black Point has parted. On investigation by the Signal Office it has been determined that it would be more economical to rent spare conductors rather than to repair the present Government cable. The Signal Officer calls attention to that fact in the following language in his annual report to the Secretary of War:

Congress appropriated the sum of $2,500 for the purpose of building a line from San Francisco to Point Reyes, Cal. The appropriation amounted to but one-half of the original estimate, and it is doubtful whether the line can be built via Point San José. While the land line can be built from Point Reyes to a point on the Pacific Railway, thus insuring reliable telegraphic communication between Point Reyes and San Francisco at a very small cost, it is doubtful whether the entire line could be built, since the wording of the law would certainly require a cable.

It has been suggested that one of the spare conductors of the Western Union cable between Fort Winfield Scott and Saucelito could be rented; but this is not practicable unless specially authorized by Congress, since the Treasury officials will not pass vouchers for the renting of other lines unless there is a specific appropriation for that purpose.

The Government system of cables in San Francisco Harbor has been most expensive, and, so far, unsatisfactory. The cable between Point San José and Alcatraz Island has already cost this office nearly $3,800. It is almost four years since the cable was laid, and it has been in operation less than one-half the time. Situated as the cable to Alcatraz is, in a line where strong currents prevail, and where vessels frequently, by choice or necessity, anchor, it results that the chances of breakage are very seriously enhanced. The Chief Signal Officer is of the opinion that a cable can not be economically maintained between Alcatraz Island and Fort Mason, even if a new cable should be laid between those points, and it is doubtful whether the old one would longer serve the purpose, since it has been broken and underrun three times. Proposals have been invited, however, for the repair and maintenance of this cable, which will soon be in working order.

I also call attention to a letter addressed to me on this same subject:

SIGNAL OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, April 13, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to the Point Reyes telegraph line, which, under the law, is to be built to San Francisco via Point San José, I regret to inform you that the submarine cable from the latter point to Alcatraz Island, and which was to have been an important and necessary link in the line, has for the fourth time been broken, presumably by a ship's anchor, as in all other instances, and within less than three months after the last repairs had been made.

This only confirms what the Chief Signal Officer's experience and familiarity with the subject had led him to anticipate, as will be seen by reference to my annual report for 1887, a copy of which I inclose for your information, and to the marked portion of which, on page 35, your attention is respectfully invited.

This cable, which already has fourteen splices in it, is so badly strained, flattened, and kinked, and is generally in such wretched condition as to preclude the idea of further repairing it; nor would it be at all advisable to replace it by a new one, since the chances of breakage from anchors are many and unavoidable.

It becomes necessary, then, to provide other means of crossing San Francisco harbor, and the only practical route would be to lay a cable across the Golden Gate from near Saucelito to Fort Winfield Scott. As, owing to the swift current and rocky bottom, a very heavy cable would have to be contracted for over this route, the cost would be at least $3,000. When the Point Reyes line was originally discussed before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, a year ago, Senator ALLISON suggested that instead of laying a cable for this line it would be better to hire a conductor in the commercial cable already in position between the points named.

If we can succeed in renting a spare conductor it would undoubtedly be in the interest of economy to do so, since the deterioration of a cable, repairs, and interest on the money expended amount to at least 20 per cent. per year, or, in this case, to $600 per annum, a considerably larger sum than it is thought will be necessary to rent a conductor from the commercial company.

In view of the foregoing, and knowing the active interest which you take in this matter, permit me to suggest that you see Hon. Mr. RANDALL, with a view of having the following clause added to the sundry civil bill, under the proper heading, making an appropriation for the military telegraph lines, namely: "Provided, That whenever it is in the interest of economy the Chief Signal Officer is authorized to rent a spare conductor in submarine-telegraph cables owned by corporations or private individuals." As stated in my annual report, such a clause is indispensable if the conductor is to be rented, since the Treasury Department has decided that the leasing of lines by this service is illegal without it.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. W. GREELY, Chief Signal Officer.

Hon. W. W. MORROW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

In further explanation I ask attention to the following papers:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER,
Washington, D. C., April 30, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I inclose herewith for your information copy of a letter from Vice-President Eckert, of the Western Union Telegraph Company, in connection with the letter from this office to you of the 13th instant, which shows the condition of affairs with reference to the Point Reyes line and the appropriation which will be necessary to secure the use of a conductor in the submarine cable of the Western Union Company.

Very truly, yours,

A. W. GREELY, Chief Signal Officer.

Hon. W. W. MORROW,
House of Representatives.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY,
New York, April 28, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of April 10, addressed to Acting Vice-President Van Every, I beg to say that this company will lease to the Signal Office a conductor in its submarine cable between Lime Point and Fort Point, across the Golden Gate, San Francisco, Cal., at $600 per year, that being the rental that we are already receiving for a conductor in the same cable.

Please advise me whether this rate is acceptable to the Department, and I will have a formal lease draughted and sent to you.

Yours very truly,

THOS. T. ECKERT,
Vice-President and General Manager.

General A. W. GREELY,
Chief Signal Officer, Washington, D. C.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER,
Washington, D. C., June 14, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Lieutenant Maxfield reports from San Francisco that he has been unable to obtain permit for the erection of line from office to Point San José. He has made various attempts in the past four or five months, but the city authorities did not act. Their failure to act and a contract to be made before June 30 will prevent the completion of the Point Reyes line until another appropriation shall be made.

I advise you, since you were interested especially in the matter.

Very truly, yours,

A. W. GREELY, Chief Signal Officer.

Hon. W. W. MORROW,
House of Representatives.

SIGNAL OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, June 19, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the report of Second Lieut. J. E. Maxfield, Signal Corps, in charge of the station at San Francisco, Cal., which is as follows:

"It has been found impossible to obtain from the board of supervisors of this city a permit for the erection of the poles for the telegraph line from this office to Black Point. The objection found is to the erection of poles in the business center of the city. There seems to be no objection to the erection of poles for two-thirds of the line nearest Black Point, and endeavors have therefore been made to obtain permission from some of the private companies to erect the lines for the city end of the line upon their poles. It is found, however, that one company has secured nearly all the available routes by securing from the smaller companies their franchise in return for the use of a certain number of wires. This company is the Pacific Bell Telephone Company, which refuse to allow the erection of the lines upon their poles. The best terms that could be obtained from this company was the erection and maintenance of two wires between the signal office and Black Point for the sum of $100 yearly. As the instructions received were not to issue bids for the erection of this part of the line until a permit had been obtained, no bids have as yet been invited. On account of inability to obtain the necessary permit from the board of supervisors further action is stopped."

Your attention was previously called to the fact that this officer had been unable to obtain permission to erect the line in question, and that if such permission were not obtained before June 30 the money necessary for the completion of this line must lapse into the Treasury and be of no use to San Francisco.

The proposition to rent wires from private corporations is not possible under existing law, it having been decided some years since by the Treasury officials that the appropriations of this service did not warrant such expenditures. You were once written to regarding the insertion of a clause in the sundry civil bill authorizing the renting of wires in the Western Union cables. In addition to such a clause should also be inserted a clause authorizing the leasing of two wires between the signal office and Black Point, for the sum of $100 yearly, which sum should be inserted in the sundry civil bill, on page 69, after the item for maintenance and repair of military and seacoast telegraph lines.

It is to be regretted that this office was not earlier advised regarding this matter, but the supervisors of San Francisco have been so uncertain, as would appear from Lieutenant Maxfield, that he could not report earlier on this subject.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. W. GREELY, Chief Signal Officer.

Hon. W. W. MORROW,
House of Representatives.

Now in reference to the proposed appropriation of $100 for the rental of the line from the city office to Black Point it seems to be advisable. The city of San Francisco has certain municipal regulations in reference to the construction of telegraph lines through the city; and as the obtaining of a permit has caused delay, it has been found on a careful investigation by the officer in charge at San Francisco that it will be economy to rent one of the lines from the main office in San Francisco to Black Point rather than to build an independent telegraph line through the city. So that this amendment, calling for an appropriation of $700 in all, is to enable the Government to finish the line of telegraph to Point Reyes and put it into immediate operation.

It is an economical proposition, Mr. Chairman, much cheaper than to undertake to lay the cable and build the city line. And, furthermore, because of the fact that the Government has not constructed the cable from Alcatraz to the main land, and has not built the line from the San Francisco office to Black Point within the fiscal year, there will revert to the Treasury from the appropriation for that purpose a sum of money larger, I think, than the amount required by the amendment. Therefore, not only will the Government be benefited by the adoption of the amendment in the immediate completion of the line, but it will carry out the object already contemplated by law in a more economical manner than was originally intended. I hope, therefore, the objection will be withdrawn, and that, in view of the proposed economy, the amendment will be adopted.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I will reserve the point of order for the present.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, the Department has never in any way called the attention of the committee to this appropriation. It was never presented to the committee for consideration by the Department, and yet it would seem to be a very proper appropriation for the service. The amendment leaves the matter entirely in the discretion of the Chief Signal Officer, and if it should be necessary for that service, as I apprehend it may be from what has been said here by that officer himself, I think we ought not to object.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say that as far as the amendment goes, in both connections the limitation as to the amount of money is inadequate.

Mr. MORROW. The limitation is fixed in the amendment; it provides $100 for the line in San Francisco, and $600 for the rental of the cable.

Mr. RANDALL. But that, I think, is too much.

Mr. MORROW. That is the amount ascertained from the documents I have read; and the Signal Officer informs Congress in the annual report that it will be economy to make this rental rather than to construct the cable.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas, who had special charge of this portion of the bill, whether the Signal Officer during his investigations has impressed upon him the necessity for these appropriations?

Mr. RYAN. I have just stated, and if the gentleman from Pennsylvania had done me the honor to listen——

Mr. RANDALL. I always do myself that honor, but I can not well listen to two persons at a time. My attention was temporarily drawn away.

Mr. RYAN. The subject was never presented to the committee by the Department. It never came before the committee in any way for consideration. The Chief Signal Officer, in no interview with him, asked for this appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. Why should it be done?

Mr. RYAN. And all I know about it is derived from the statement of my friend from California, and the communications which he has read showing the necessity for this work.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no law authorizing this mode of rental.

Mr. MORROW. It is simply a matter of economy, and I should not ask it if I did not think it was necessary.

The Signal Officer called attention to it in his annual report, and I am under the impression that he believed I would call the attention of the House to it. He has all the time been pressing upon me the necessity for action in this connection, and I believe that is the only reason why he has not called special attention to it himself, thinking that I would take the matter up and bring it before the House. Both these propositions have received the attention of that officer; and further, as I have already said, appropriations for these subjects have already been made, which will lapse at the end of the year, and more money will then be required than is asked in this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. It may be the signal officer mentioned it in his report to the Secretary of War, but he does not report to Congress.

Mr. MORROW. I mean in his report to the Secretary of War. He made his recommendation in that direction.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask a ruling on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For superintendents of national cemeteries: For pay of seventy-three superintendents of national cemeteries, $60,000.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, in line 21, page 74, after the word "cemeteries," "for pay of seventy-four superintendents of national cemeteries, including national cemetery at Quincy, Ill., $60,720."

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order, but I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. The object of this amendment is simply to provide one more superintendent of cemeteries. In former years we had a superintendent at the national cemetery at Quincy. Through some legal trouble there with the Grand Army, Secretary Lincoln, when he was in authority, removed him, and since then we have been unable to get one, the Secretary of War claiming that the number of superintendents was fixed by the appropriation and he could not go beyond it. The object of that amendment, therefore, as will be seen, is only to increase the number by one. At Quincy we have a State Soldiers and Sailors' Home located, and we have, we think, merit enough to justify us in asking this additional appropriation. It only increases $720 the total amount for the superintendent there; and besides, it is already a national cemetery.

We formerly had a superintendent, and since his removal we have had located there the Illinois State Soldiers' Home; and that, in addition to the number of soldiers there in our beautiful cemetery, we think justifies us in asking for this increase.

Mr. RANDALL. If we had any estimate or any recommendation in this connection I would hesitate before making the point of order; but as I have made the point of order all through the bill on every matter which was subject to it, I do not like to make an exception in this case. But I do say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANDERSON] that if he will get any recommendation in connection with the cemetery, so that we can take the subject up under the rule, I will see that it is carefully considered. He can go to the Senate in the mean time and do what is best there.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I will say that I have letters from the Secretary of War in which he suggested this method. I went before the Committee on Military Affairs with the papers. In some manner they have been lost. I made diligent search for them, but on account of the shortness of notice——

Mr. RANDALL. You can get them duplicated.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is not subject to the point of order, it seems to me, because we are already employing superintendents for cemeteries throughout the country. Here is a cemetery——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. A national cemetery.

Mr. RANDALL. I would prefer to have the gentleman from Illinois adopt the course I have suggested to him. He will find no obstacle, I think, put in his way; certainly not by me, and I think the Committee on Appropriations will put no obstacle in his way. Of course if there is a cemetery there they ought to have a superintendent.

Mr. SPRINGER. Suppose we put it in now, and if you find there is anything wrong about it you can take it out.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman asks me to break a fixed rule. Let the gentleman go over to the Senate and put it in, and I will not object to it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman has lost the papers.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no papers.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. The reason of the removal was on account of a local trouble there. We had a superintendent there before.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know anything about the merits of the case.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. Certainly not; but you have my word for it.

Mr. RANDALL. Of course I would take your word.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. It seems to me if we were entitled to it previous to the removal of the soldiers' home we ought to have it now, and I hope the House will vote for it.

Mr. MANSUR. I would ask the gentleman in charge of the bill that by unanimous consent this amendment be agreed to. They had a superintendent for a number of years. There is no reason why he should not be provided for. This bill gives superintendents to cemeteries where there are not one-fifth of the number of soldiers buried that are buried here.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is the point of order made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANSUR. I am making this appeal for his benefit.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a matter of administration. We have given all that is estimated for.

Mr. SPRINGER. The point of order does not apply to this case.

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair will determine that.

Mr. SPRINGER. There are numbers of these cemeteries, and the law does not assign a superintendent to each one, but leaves the assignment to the Secretary of War.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois claim, from the fact that there are already from seventy to eighty superintendents provided for, the House would be justified under the rule in increasing the number indefinitely?

Mr. SPRINGER. If there has been a cemetery established, the employment of a sufficient force to carry it on is authorized. That is a work already in progress. The establishment of a cemetery there carries with it the obligation of the Government to see there is a proper administration at that point. It is a work authorized by law. If there was no cemetery there it would be a different thing, but where there is a cemetery there is an implied obligation to keep it up.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. Not only is there a cemetery but we used to have a superintendent there.

Mr. SPRINGER. There was a superintendent there at one time and his salary was provided for; but by some misapprehension of the circumstances surrounding the case that salary was left out of the bill or the superintendent was dropped by the administration. We do not know exactly how that was. We do know there is no superintendent there now, and we think there ought to be one. There is a superintendent at Springfield, Ill., where the cemetery is not much larger than the cemetery at Quincy.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANDERSON] say there was an officer employed there as superintendent in former years?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. Yes, sir; and there was a home established there.

The CHAIRMAN. And by administrative act he was dispensed with?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. It was established there, and there was a superintendent appointed who remained there for some time. There was a charge made by some of the local men there that the superintendent made a dicker with the Grand Army post by which he gave them a part of his salary to indorse him. On this charge Secretary Lincoln removed him; and ever since then there has been no superintendent.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no law fixing the assignment. By the amendment proposed this officer will be assigned to Quincy.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. If I may be allowed to modify my amendment I will do so by inserting "national cemetery at Quincy, Ill."

Mr. RANDALL. That is a change of law.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I will modify my amendment so as to fix the number at seventy-four, and the appropriation at $60,720.

Mr. LAIRD. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether he made the point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. RANDALL. I did, because we have no information whatever from the Department about this. I asked simply that the gentleman might secure that information, and, that being secured, there will be no obstacle thrown in the way of their having a superintendent at that cemetery, or any other in the United States.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I move to strike out, in line 22, the words "seventy-three" and insert "seventy-four," and also to make the appropriation, in lines 22 and 23, $60,720.

Mr. LAIRD. I wish to say to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that in the Military Committee this matter has been incidentally investigated, and we have some information as to the number of interments in this cemetery and to the necessity of having this officer, or some one, to take charge of it.

Mr. RANDALL. Is it proposed to put this same man back there?

Mr. LAIRD. Oh, no.

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir. That performance was not under our administration.

Mr. RANDALL. What does the Chair rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in doubt as to what would be the correct ruling on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, and will submit it to the committee.

The amendment of Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois, was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I find a mistake in the next paragraph of the printed bill. After line 24, "Headstones for graves of soldiers," there should be inserted "for continuing the work of furnishing headstones for unmarked graves of Union soldiers, sailors, and marines."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Maintenance of roadways to national cemeteries: For maintaining the roadways to national cemeteries which have been constructed by special authority of Congress, $10,000.

Mr. FUNSTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment at this point, and also to have read a letter from the Quartermaster-General, which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 75, insert "for repairing roadway to National Cemetery at Fort Scott, Kans., $5,000."

The letter was read, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 16, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to suggest that an appropriation of $5,000 be made for repairing the roadway constructed under the authority of Congress from the city of Fort Scott, Kans., to the National Cemetery, near that place.

The Fort Scott National Cemetery is situated about 1½ miles southeast of the center of the town, and contains a little over 10 acres. Number of interments, 590.

The road heretofore constructed, 7,390 feet in length, is very much worn from the heavy teams passing over it, and it is estimated that the sum of $5,000, appropriation of which is recommended, will be required for the purchase of the necessary material and employment of labor to put it in proper condition.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. B. HOLABIRD,
Quartermaster-General United States Army.

Mr. JAMES C. COURTS,
Clerk Committee on Appropriations,
United States House of Representatives.

Mr. FUNSTON. This report of the Quartermaster-General was not made to the Committee on Appropriations in time to get the item into the bill, if they were so inclined, on account of the absence of the engineer, but when he returned the Quartermaster-General made the report which has just been read. Now, Mr. Chairman, in addition to what he states with reference to this matter, I desire to say that I have been over the road and have observed it personally, and while it is true that near the city it has been badly cut up by heavy teams, yet that cause applies to only a short portion of it. The whole road all the way to the cemetery is in bad condition.

The fact is the road was repaired by grinding limestone by means of a machine instead of putting on good broken rock, and the result is that in wet weather it washes away, and in dry weather it blows away [laughter], so that much of the last improvement made has disappeared, and instead of it there are great holes in the roadway, making it uncomfortable for visitors or others going to the cemetery. This is perhaps a matter of more consequence to the National Government than to the city of Fort Scott; and as the Representative of the district in which the cemetery is located I call the attention of the House to it. The road was built at the expense of the Government, and it has been once improved at the expense of the Government. That "improvement," however, has proved a failure, and we now ask that $5,000 shall be appropriated. I do not believe that is sufficient to put the road in perfect order, but I understand the hopelessness of getting more, and that is the amount that is asked for by the Quartermaster-General. I leave the whole matter now to the good sense of the House, and I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will agree to let this amendment be adopted.

Mr. LAIRD. What is the length of the road?

Mr. FUNSTON. It is given in the report.

Mr. LAIRD. The distance is about a mile and a half, I believe?

Mr. FUNSTON. It is 7,390 feet.

Mr. LAIRD. Does the road go through the city?

Mr. FUNSTON. No, sir; no part of it is in the city. It is altogether outside, I think, though I can not speak positively.

Mr. LAIRD. What is the number of interments in the cemetery?

Mr. FUNSTON. Five hundred and ninety.

Mr. LAIRD. When was the road built?

Mr. FUNSTON. Some six or eight years ago, and it was repaired some four years ago.

Mr. LAIRD. You say it was built out of crushed lime-rock?

Mr. FUNSTON. Yes; repaired with limestone crushed by machinery.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FUNSTON. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he will not yield two minutes to my colleague [Mr. RYAN].

Mr. RYAN. I will follow the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, we appropriated last year for these purposes $3,000. In this bill we have increased the appropriation $7,000, making $10,000 in all, the full amount of the estimate of the Quartermaster-General. That officer, in his communication on the subject, states that the object of the appropriation is to repair roads leading to nine cemeteries; and among the cemeteries which he enumerates is this one for which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON] is trying to get a separate appropriation.

Mr. FUNSTON. The gentleman will allow me to say that the estimate to which he refers was made without sufficient knowledge of the condition of the road.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand that this road has been used to some extent by citizens as a public road, and that partly in consequence of such use these repairs are made necessary.

Mr. FUNSTON. It has been so used for only a short distance. The whole road is in bad repair.

Mr. RANDALL. In fact, this is, I understand, a public highway in part. The matter had better be left under the care of the Quartermaster-General, to whom we give the full amount of his estimate; and he enumerates Fort Scott as one of the places for which the appropriation of $10,000 is to be spent.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, my colleague on the committee [Mr. RANDALL] is correct in stating that the estimate of the Department for repairs of all these roads was $10,000, the amount reported in the bill. But that embraced only ordinary repairs of the roadways to the national cemeteries. Here is a roadway that needs to be constructed in order to make it at all serviceable or useful. Without the appropriation asked in the amendment this cemetery is practically inaccessible. The clerk of our committee, Mr. Courts, telegraphed to the Quartermaster-General, General Holabird, to ascertain whether he desired the $5,000 mentioned in a letter from the Department as additional to the $10,000 included in the bill. General Holabird sent in reply the following telegram:

WAR DEPARTMENT, June 13, 1888.

To J. C. COURTS:

Five thousand dollars additional wanted for Fort Scott road.

S. B. HOLABIRD,
Quartermaster-General.

I think there ought to be no objection to this appropriation which General Holabird asks for and states to be necessary.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to ask whether this is a national cemetery exclusively.

Mr. RYAN. I understand it is.

Mr. FUNSTON. Yes, sir; exclusively.

Mr. RYAN. It is used for no other purpose. The amount asked in the amendment is a small matter, and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the estimate will be adhered to and the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations sustained.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. FUNSTON, it was rejected, there being—ayes 29, noes 46.

The Clerk read as follows:

National Cemetery, Antietam, Maryland: For the construction of a macadam road from Antietam Station to the Antietam, Maryland, National Cemetery, $15,000.

Mr. PETERS. At the request of my colleague [Mr. PERKINS], who is not now present, I move to amend by inserting what I send to the desk as a separate paragraph after the paragraph just read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction of a road from Baxter Springs, Kans., to cemetery containing monument erected by the Government to the memory of the members of the Third Wisconsin Cavalry, massacred at that place during the recent war, $2,500.

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment is subject to a point of order, I believe. The committee have never heard anything about this matter. We have received no communication on the subject, either oral or written.

Mr. PETERS. I suppose it can not be contended that this amendment is not subject to a point of order. But this monument was erected at the expense of the Government. It is situated about a mile from the town of Baxter Springs; and the road by which it is reached is in a very bad condition.

Mr. RANDALL. We have never heard of this matter.

Mr. PETERS. This is a monument erected in pursuance of law.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman never called our attention to the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Burial of indigent soldiers: For expenses of burying, in the Arlington National Cemetery, indigent ex-Union soldiers who die in the District of Columbia, $800, said sum to be disbursed by the Secretary of War at a cost not exceeding $25 for such burial expenses in each case, exclusive of cost of grave.

Mr. McCOMAS. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out the words "five hundred dollars" and inserting "eight hundred dollars;" also by striking out "twenty-five dollars" and inserting "forty dollars."

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move, as an amendment to the amendment, the proposition which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "Arlington National Cemetery," in the pending paragraph, insert "or other cemetery in the District of Columbia."
Strike out in the pending paragraph, "$500" and insert "$1,000."
Strike out also, "$25" and insert "$40."

Mr. RANDALL. There is no law authorizing these expenditures as to the various cemeteries in the District. We had better not confuse this question.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I do not care whether the point of order be made or not; but I want to say distinctly that if the United States Government can not do for its indigent soldiers after their death, what various States of the Union do, we may as well dispense with this class of legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order being made against the amendment, no discussion on its merits is in order. If the gentleman wishes to discuss the point of order, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand the point of order is sustained. I move to strike out the last word. There is no illiberality at all in this provision of the bill. The body of every indigent soldier dying here without friends to care for him is placed in Arlington Cemetery. There the ground is free; the grave is dug without expense; everything is done by the Government. This $25 refers to the incidental expenses of his burial, and we supposed it was fully adequate. The Grand Army of the Republic wanted to be relieved of this expense to which they were subjected heretofore in this District of Columbia, and we desired to relieve their treasury to that extent.

Mr. FARQUHAR. As to the expense outside of the grave, we have found in the State of New York it is not less than $40. How, in this expensive city of Washington, they can get along with $25 is beyond my conjecture.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no expense for digging the grave or other like incidental expense. This $25 is put under the direction of the Secretary of War. It has been asked for by the Grand Army of the Republic, and the object of it is to relieve their treasury in the District of Columbia from this burden. I do not believe the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] is in favor of any unnecessary outlay.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Not at all. I do not mean any extravagant outlay. But I do say if the State of New York has not been able to get along with less than $40, I do not see how in an expensive city like this it is possible to get along with $25.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a new step, and if after it has gone into effect it is discovered that the amount is not sufficient I am ready at the next session to change it and make the appropriation sufficient for the purpose; but we are advised by those who understand the matter that $25 is all that will be needed.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I only speak from the experience of those members of the Grand Army of the Republic who have been compelled to put their hands into their own pockets to pay these expenses. In the State of New York the amount is $40.

Mr. RANDALL. If we had fixed the amount at $50, no doubt some gentleman would rise and say it ought to be $75.

Mr. FARQUHAR. If you put it at $40 you will find no one will object or ask that it shall be increased to a higher figure. When the whole amount is only $1,000, it seems to me to be small arithmetic instead of $40 making it $25. An indigent soldier is not a pauper.

Mr. RANDALL. We have been generous as far as the Union soldier is concerned.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I am willing to say that, and especially in reference to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who was a soldier himself. But I hope gentlemen will not indulge in economy in reference to this matter, which seems to be small arithmetic when the whole amount is only $1,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand the gentleman to characterize this as a small business. Now, I do not think such language should be used by gentlemen on this floor.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The gentleman is mistaken. I merely said that when the whole cost was only $1,000 it seemed to me to be a small piece of arithmetic to fix the amount at $25 instead of $40.

Mr. McCOMAS. I was sitting between the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from New York, and heard what was said by both, and am satisfied they misunderstood each other.

Mr. RANDALL. Such language is not such as should be used in a legislative body, and there is no justification for it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I did not use the language in any such sense as that attributed to it by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I merely said when the whole amount involved was $1,000 it seemed to be a small piece of arithmetic.

Mr. McCOMAS. The gentlemen have misunderstood each other. They are trying to reach the same point, and that is to provide for the proper burial of the indigent Union soldier. No one will say that gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber have favored anything else in respect to Union soldiers.

It illustrates the value of my amendment. From the statement I hold in my hand it appears the proper burial of a Union soldier in this District will reach a higher figure than is here provided. It is true they have ample ground at Arlington for the burial of Union soldiers.

Mr. RANDALL. Do you not see the advantage of putting them at Arlington, where we have perpetual protection for the graves of the soldiers of the Government? If they were scattered about in private cemeteries they would be left without care and unprotected.

Mr. McCOMAS. So I have stated, that if they were scattered in private cemeteries they would not have the protection which they will have buried at the national cemetery at Arlington. Whether Jew or Gentile, Catholic or Protestant, in that immense place there will be found consecrated ground for all, and where all will be properly cared for and protected.

Now as to the amount. We have made a careful inquiry, and the department commander, Colonel Lincoln, and others, have given the information which I am satisfied is reliable, and which indicates that $40 is the minimum sum that will be available for this purpose. If you include only the coffin, you will find the price running from $30 to $35. Then besides you must include the hearse and the shroud for the body of the indigent soldier of the Union who dies here; and when all these are included you can not possibly inter him in any sort of proper manner short of at least $40. You can not put a decent shroud about his body, you can not put him into a coffin, you can not get a hearse to take him to his grave across the river at Arlington, and put his body under the sod for less than that sum. It may be as much as is claimed in this paper, $60; but I am careful, as the chairman of the committee says, not to go beyond a proper limit in making such an appropriation.

I believe that $40 will be sufficient. But one thing is certain, we can not get it done for less than $40; and consider the cost of the shroud, the coffin, the hearse, and the transfer of his body to the grave, and you can not haggle it and make it less by one penny than $40. My amendment, therefore, is as small a sum as should be appropriated; and I believe that it is the correct amount. The addition of my friend here on the right [Mr. FARQUHAR], to apply it to the other cemeteries, I think is wrong. I ask the House to accept the amendment fixing the sum at $40.

Mr. RYAN. My own State pays $50 for this.

Mr. McCOMAS. If the House is willing to do so, I will agree to accept $50, but I want to make sure and get $40.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to state, Mr. Chairman, that in Ohio we have a law to inter indigent soldiers of the Union, and fixed the sum originally at $35. I was on the committee for the disbursement of this money for some years, and I never found it sufficient to provide a decent coffin and hearse for the soldier.

Mr. FARQUHAR. And a uniform to put him in.

Mr. RANDALL. Did that include the ground?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; we allowed nothing for digging the grave.

Mr. RANDALL. Or for the ground?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, sir. I think the amendment ought to prevail. If you bury the indigent soldiers of the war of 1861, bury them decently, or not at all. Let the people do it.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say, in answer to what has been stated by the gentleman from Ohio, that there has been on the part of every member of the Committee on Appropriations, and it was unanimous on the subject, a purpose to do exactly what is right and liberal in this particular. I must confess that it is a little irritating, to me at least, to have gentlemen coming here and proposing amendments in larger sums, and undertake to reflect upon the Committee on Appropriations for trying to keep expenditures within reasonable limits.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want it understood, Mr. Chairman, now, that I have made no reflection whatever upon the committee. I believe that they have undertaken to do, with the information they had before them, just what was right and proper. It was only a matter of information; and whenever it is shown to a committee of the House that the sum fixed in the bill is not sufficient, and that it should be increased to the $40 asked in this amendment, then it is proper that incidental information in support of the amendment should be given, and when so given there ought to be no objection on the part of the committee. When I stated that if the Union soldiers are to be buried at all, they should be buried decently, I made no reflection upon the committee, and I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania is a little tender upon the subject in accepting it in that light.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, rather than have—because some of us in the committee are peculiarly situated in connection with the Union soldiers—any misapprehension existing in regard to the attitude of any one of the committee I shall yield my assent to the amendment. I do not want to have any one of these gentlemen placed in an incorrect position, because I know their impulse is to yield everything in this connection that could be desired. And so if the House wants $40 let them have it, as far as the committee is concerned.

Mr. McCOMAS. I think it is only proper that I should say that the information I have here came since the committee passed the bill.

Mr. MAISH. Let the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no other objection.

The amendment of Mr. McCOMAS was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the Pacific branch: For maintenance of six hundred members, at $150 per annum each, $90,000;
For out-door relief and incidental expenses, $28,650;
In all, $1,987,944.60.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 14, insert:
"For the completion of the construction of the Pacific branch of the National Soldiers' Home."

Mr. LAIRD. Is that where the point of order comes in?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No, this is an amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Was there not a bill passed by your committee for this purpose, a separate bill?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will hear the statement I wish to make, he will see that we had no jurisdiction to formulate a bill, but I am glad the gentleman seems to confess the propriety of this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I confess nothing at all. I do not know what it is. The gentleman runs too fast.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In the last Congress, Mr. Chairman, the House passed a bill providing for the establishment of a national home to be known as the Pacific Home west of the Rocky Mountains. An appropriation was made for it which falls more than $100,000 below what is actually needed for the construction of the necessary buildings for the accommodation of the applicants.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is too late to make the point of order. I have been debating the question for some time. I do not think the point of order will lie, anyhow.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not know what the amendment was.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It was read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. RANDALL. It never was read that I know of. I would like to hear it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Clerk read it a few moments ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I object to being taken off the floor in this way. I am occupying the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will see that the gentleman is not taken off the floor.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am taken off the floor on the demand of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the amendment be read again.

The Clerk commenced to read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will suspend. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The amendment is plain and simple. I was about to state the reasons for it when I was interrupted. It is offered for this reason: During the last Congress an appropriation was made for the establishment of a national soldiers' home west of the Rocky Mountains. It was finally located in Los Angeles County, California.

Mr. MORROW. Santa Monica.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The appropriation that was made has fallen over $100,000 below what is actually needed for the purchase of a site and for the erection of the necessary buildings. The president of the Board of Management of the Soldiers' Homes, General Franklin, addressed a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations some time ago, urging that this appropriation be embraced in the sundry civil bill, but the Committee on Appropriations have ignored that request.

Mr. RANDALL. We have no law.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Do not interrupt me. Wait until I get through. I will give the gentleman an opportunity to reply.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will ask the Clerk to read the letter that was addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I do not know why the committee did not make this appropriation. The letter itself will indicate the necessity for it.

The Clerk read as follows:

HARTFORD, CONN., April 16, 1888.

SIR: Congress at its last session directed the Board of Managers National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to establish a branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers in one of the States west of the Rocky Mountains, and appropriated $150,000 for the erection of the branch.

Since the law was passed the board has procured 330 acres of land for a site for the branch, and has had examinations of the title, water and sewerage facilities made, and has had designs and estimates for the buildings prepared. It has now $135,000 available for the erection of the buildings. To erect seven barracks, housing eight hundred and seventy-five or nine hundred men, will cost $171,000. A dining hall and kitchen will cost $45,000, and a boiler-house, with the necessary machinery for steam heat and light, will cost $25,000, making in all $231,000. A building for officers will cost $10,000, and officers' quarters will cost $10,000 more. One of the barracks can at first be used as a hospital, but a hospital must be soon erected. The whole amount required, therefore, is $251,000, and the amount now available is $135,000.

I have been directed to inform the committee of these facts, and to ask it to insert in the sundry civil bill an item of $100,000 for the construction of the Pacific Branch of the National Home during the next fiscal year, in addition to the amount already asked for, and $70,000 for the maintenance of the members of the branch during the same time.

Respectfully yours,

W. B. FRANKLIN,
President Board of Managers National Home Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Chairman Appropriation Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, Mr. Chairman, it will be seen——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. Now I make the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have not finished my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The five minutes to which the gentleman was entitled have expired.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I raise against the point of order the point that it comes too late.

Mr. RANDALL. Before the gentleman gave me any opportunity to know what the amendment was or its effect he began to speak.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I had no opportunity of knowing what it was.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want to be interrupted.

Mr. Chairman, the act authorizing this home came from the Military Committee. It was passed at the last session of Congress. If I am correctly advised, in that act a sum was fixed. The Committee on Appropriations informed General Franklin that they had no power to recommend anything in that connection. It was necessary for the law to be changed in connection with the limit.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In reply to the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to reply to the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask to have the law read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the law.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the board of managers of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers are hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to locate, establish, construct, and permanently maintain a branch of said National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, to be by such board located at such place in the States west of the Rocky Mountains as to said board shall appear most desirable and advantageous, and that the sum of $150,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to the said board of managers, and by them expended in carrying out the provisions of this act.

Mr. RANDALL. "Carrying out the provisions of this act;" the Committee on Appropriations had no power to provide for the object which the gentleman has in view, and the House has no power in this way to change the law. But I want to say that if this building is not completed, as we supposed it would be completed, by the 1st of July, and as intimated in the letter of April last of General Franklin, then there is no occasion for us to put in this bill an appropriation such as we have inserted, of $90,000 for the maintenance of 600 persons at that home. I think, however, that the building will be in good condition by the 1st of July to receive these soldiers for whose care and maintenance we make this appropriation of $90,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the gentleman has been arguing the point of order or the merits of the amendment. If he claims that he has a point of order pending, I insist that he has not, because it was made too late. The amendment was read at the desk, and no point of order was made upon it, and I proceeded to address the committee on the merits of the amendment before the gentleman began to make his point of order. But, sir, even if it were true that the point of order was made in time, I insist that there is nothing in it.

This amendment is in pursuance of a work already commenced; it is in pursuance of a law already passed. It simply calls for an additional appropriation to complete a work authorized by law. I know of no appropriation bill that can be brought into this House to which this amendment can be germane, if it is not germane to the sundry civil bill. The very purpose of the sundry civil bill is to take up subjects of this character and to provide for completing works already begun, such as post-offices and custom-houses and other public works; as the pending bill itself will show, for it contains appropriations to make additions to buildings and to complete buildings of various kinds. In the first place, then, I insist that the point of order comes too late. But, even if the Chair should entertain the point of order, I insist, in the second place, that it has no force whatever. Take the rules and read the statement of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, and you will find that it takes in all "sundry civil expenditures." What does the word "sundry" mean if it does not mean appropriations for items of a miscellaneous character that are not pertinent or germane to any other particular appropriation bill?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will permit, the Chair will direct his attention to a phase of the matter that the Chair thinks important to be discussed in this connection. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] states that the sundry civil appropriation bill carries appropriations for various public buildings and other public works already authorized by law; but does he insist that therefore the committee would have authority to incorporate an appropriation in excess of that fixed by law for the construction of a public work?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Unquestionably.

This very bill contains appropriations to complete buildings and to make additions to public buildings, and if the Treasury Department required repairs or required to have an additional building attached to it, this would be the proper bill to carry the appropriation for that purpose. We had an illustration here the other day when the post-office at Chicago was under discussion. That building is in an unwholesome condition, and an amendment was offered appropriating $60,000 to make sanitary and other improvements.

Mr. RANDALL. In this very bill we provide for carrying on this institution to which the amendment refers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks there is a distinction between providing for the repair of a building that has been already constructed, and making an increase of the limit originally fixed by law for the construction. The Chair thinks the former would be in order on an appropriation bill, but whether the latter would be is questionable.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I beg the Chair to remember that the law authorizing the erection of this building simply provides a certain amount of money, but does not use any language which excludes the appropriation of an additional amount. We all know that when a public building is authorized to be constructed, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred we merely appropriate at first a sum which is intended as the foundation, to start the building, and when we make an additional appropriation to complete the work it always goes into the sundry civil bill. I was on the Committee on Appropriations for four years, and I know that on every sundry civil bill brought into the House while I was a member of the committee there were amendments kindred in character to the one now offered.

Mr. RANDALL. To sustain my position I want to show that the gentleman himself from his own committee reported last session a bill of this character for the construction of additional barracks. They brought in a separate and distinct bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I concede all that the gentleman claims in that case. The bill may have emanated from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. RANDALL. It is another act to which I now refer.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not care what committee reports a bill providing for the construction of a public building, when the law has been passed and there is need for repairs, or for an addition to the building, the Committee on Appropriations takes jurisdiction of the matter and the letters and estimates coming to the House from the Department are all sent to that committee, because it is the only committee having jurisdiction of the matter.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the reading of the act which I send to the Clerk's desk. I object to this dumping of matters from other committees into the Committee on Appropriations.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act making appropriations for additional barracks at the Southern, Northwestern, and Western branches of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $150,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of a board of managers in the construction and equipment of additional barracks or quarters for disabled veterans at the Southern, Northwestern, and Western branches of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers located at Hampton, Milwaukee, and Leavenworth, respectively.

Approved June 30, 1886.

Mr. RANDALL. That is a case exactly in point with this, where a separate bill was introduced——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now let me call attention to the fact that the law which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has just caused to be read provides no plan for the building, and fixes no limit. It simply provides that a certain building shall be constructed and a certain amount of money appropriated.

Mr. RANDALL. To execute the provisions of the act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] to the closing language of the section which was previously read. After making the appropriation it continues, "and by them expended in carrying out the provisions of this act."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That fixes no limit upon the amount which may be appropriated. It simply designates a certain sum to carry out the law, but there is no limitation similar to that frequently put in other bills of this character that the whole cost shall not exceed a certain sum. There is no such language in that law. It authorizes the erection of this home, and appropriates a certain sum of money to carry out the law, but provides no limit at all upon the aggregate cost of the building. No plan is designated by the act. My judgment is that even if the point of order were made in time, this amendment is in order, because it proposes simply to finish the construction of a building already authorized by law and upon the cost of which no limit has been placed by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the effect of the amendment would be to change existing law as to the construction of this building, and is compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. MAISH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 12, page 86, insert the following:

"That the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the erection of monuments or tablets for the proper marking of the positions of each of the commands of the regular Army of the United States, including the Berdan Sharp-shooters, engaged at the battle of Gettysburgh, and for the restoration and care of the grounds, monuments, and tablets of said battle-field."

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] on the point of order.

Mr. MAISH. Mr. Chairman, this proposition has been recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs. It will be observed that this bill contains, on page 76, a paragraph headed "Monuments or tablets at Gettysburgh," providing—

That the appropriation of $15,000, made by the act approved March 3, 1887, for the erection of monuments or memorial tablets for the proper marking of the position of each of the commands of the regular Army engaged at Gettysburgh, be, and the same is hereby, made available for the purchase of land upon which to erect the monuments and tablets.

That appropriation of $15,000 being thus devoted to the purchase of land, no money whatever is left for the purchase of monuments and tablets to mark the positions of the regular troops. I offer this amendment so as to provide funds for purchasing such monuments and tablets; and I include the Berdan Sharp-shooters, because they were for the time being a part of the regular Army. The propriety of this proposition, after the $15,000 heretofore appropriated has been made available for the purchase of real estate only, seems to me very apparent.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman misconceives, I think, the object of the Department in this regard. Congress appropriated last year $15,000 for the object for which the gentleman now proposes an appropriation of $50,000. The Department this year has not asked any additional appropriation, but has simply requested that part of the $15,000 already appropriated may be used in the purchase of the land where they desire to place these monuments. No additional appropriation has been asked. We have passed the paragraph of the bill to which the gentleman has referred, and the committee has done in this connection all that the Department has asked.

Mr. MAISH. Of course the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is correct in saying that the Committee on Appropriations has not been asked for more than has already been appropriated; but the Committee on Military Affairs has been asked for even more than the sum proposed in my amendment. It seems to me that this is a suitable place to make the appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no law authorizing this appropriation.

Mr. MAISH. I had hoped there would be no objection to it.

Mr. RANDALL. It is altogether out of place here. We have given for this purpose all the money the Department has asked.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the amendment proposes a new provision of law, and is out of order.

Mr. ATKINSON. I move to amend by inserting, after line 12, page 88, the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That where State homes for the reception of disabled Union volunteer soldiers have been established, the United States shall hereafter pay to the States establishing such homes an amount for each soldier maintained therein not exceeding the one-half of the cost of maintaining each inmate of a National Soldiers' Home; and to meet this expense for the next fiscal year the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order we have passed that part of the bill where the amendment would be germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. RANDALL. I am struggling to get the bill through.

Mr. ATKINSON. I understand the gentleman makes the point the amendment comes too late, that the part has been passed where it would be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. That is one point, and the other is that it changes existing law. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order, if he wishes it.

Mr. ATKINSON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. ATKINSON. I shall not insist upon it, but will offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 10, page 88, insert: "For outdoor relief, $50,000."

Mr. ATKINSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, while the existing law provides that appropriations may be made for outdoor relief, no amount is fixed except in the appropriation bill for last year. The amount in the pending bill differs from the amount appropriated last year. So, if this point is well taken on the theory that the amount is fixed in the existing appropriation for the current year, then this appropriation as found in the pending bill is subject to the same point of order. The existing law provides there shall be an appropriation for outdoor relief. The point of order was made in the Forty-ninth Congress, but was overruled by the Chair and the amendment was considered and voted down.

Mr. RANDALL. The point I make is we have passed away from that part of the bill, and, even if it were germane, the amendment is not now in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is too late, as the committee had passed to a subsequent paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. We have given every dollar recommended for this purpose.

Mr. ATKINSON. My attention was not directed to the reading at the time or I would have submitted the amendment before the committee passed away from the paragraph. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw his point of order against this amendment and allow it to come in.

Mr. RANDALL. We have given every dollar asked by the Department.

Mr. ATKINSON. These men are entitled to the relief which they ask for. There may be those who can not avail themselves of the relief afforded at the Soldiers' Homes. The recommendation of the Board of Managers is in favor of granting outdoor relief, and the Secretary of War recommends that their suggestion shall be carried out. Therefore I think this House should consider the proposition to increase the appropriation to give these soldiers the relief they are entitled to.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman will read the report of the Board of Managers, which is embraced in the report of the Committee on Appropriations on this bill, he will find that we have given every dollar asked for by the Board of Managers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules the amendment out.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $1,987,944.60. And hereafter the provisions of sections 3690 and 3691 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall apply to all appropriations made for the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers: Provided further, That it shall be the duty of the managers of said Home, on or before the 1st day of October, in each year, to furnish to the Secretary of War estimates, in detail, for the support of said Home for the fiscal year commencing on the 1st day of July thereafter, and the Secretary of War shall annually include such estimates in his estimates for his Department.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I make the point against that paragraph that it changes existing law.

Mr. RANDALL. When you come to understand it you will not oppose it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do understand it. I well understand what it is.

Mr. RANDALL. I will inform, then, the rest of the House what it is.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My point of order is pending.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman will reserve it and let me state——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let me state the reason why it should not go into the bill. I will state, if I am permitted to discuss the merits, that the law at present does not require the board of managers to return into the Treasury the amount left on hand at the end of the fiscal year. I think that is wisely left to the discretion of the officers. Suppose one of these homes should be burned down. It is necessary they should have on hand something with which to meet the emergency and to erect temporary shelter for the soldiers turned out.

It is said, perhaps, that if any public building is burned down the occupants are turned out from under shelter; but the application is not of that character which should refer to such a condition at these soldiers' homes, for it is a well-known fact, Mr. Chairman, that they are in their nature to a certain extent hospitals; holding men who are disabled, many of them crippled and sick; whereas ordinarily when a public building burns down the occupants are able to take care of themselves and provide for themselves.

The managers of the soldiers' homes should be permitted to retain in their hands in these institutions the amounts which may be left over from the expenditures of the preceding year, to meet just such emergencies as might arise, and which can not be provided for by any general law.

Further, Mr. Chairman, I want to state that the managers of the soldiers' homes—and every one knows they are men of the very highest character, men, every one of whom has the perfect confidence of the people, at the head of it General William B. Franklin—but I need not take up the time of this committee to mention their names, and only desire to mention the further fact that in making the estimates for the ensuing year the managers of the homes deduct the amounts which remained on hand at the end of the preceding year. Not a dollar of that surplus is used without authority. They follow the law strictly; and they desire now to do what the law allows them to do, and what the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to deprive them of the power of doing by adopting here a new law on an appropriation bill—that is, the power of holding in their own hands the small sum—comparatively insignificant—which may remain in their hands at the end of the fiscal year.

Now I have stated the question upon its merits, and it remains for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to reply.

Mr. RANDALL. The calamity which the gentleman from Illinois alludes to as likely or possible in connection with soldiers' homes is just as likely or possible in relation to any other public edifice or institution in the country.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I admit that; but the occupants are of a different character.

Mr. RANDALL. Now listen to me for a moment. We give $2,000,000 per annum to maintain these homes. By prudent management of the officials in charge of them there has been at the end of the year a balance remaining on hand in excess of the expenditures necessary to maintain the homes.

The Committee on Appropriations say, with reference to that balance, as they say with regard to every other branch of the public service, that such amount so left over in excess of the expenditure shall be turned back into the Treasury.

There are some $60,000 or $70,000 over last year, under the appropriations, at the beginning of the current year, of the appropriations for the last fiscal year that was not used. What does the Committee on Appropriations recommend? That this amount of money shall go back into the Treasury. The Committee on Appropriations have given in this bill every dollar that these managers have asked, irrespective of what may be the balance left over from the last year.

But I want the gentleman from Illinois to draw a distinction in his point of order between the first part of this proposition and the proviso. The proviso, I will say to him, is asked for by the managers, and was incorporated at the instance of the managers themselves.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman is right as to that, and I will modify the point of order to that extent.

Mr. LAIRD. What is the point?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That the point of order is not made against the proviso. Let that stand.

Mr. LAIRD. I am not going to attack the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the question presented.

Mr. LAIRD. I want to be heard on the point of order for a moment. In the remarks which I wish to submit, Mr. Chairman, I want to refer exclusively to the question of law, not so much to the question of policy. I do not care to discuss that except perhaps by a word.

I think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is mistaken, if I caught the import of his statement to the House correctly or understood it correctly. It seemed to be to the effect that the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Homes were entirely satisfied with the paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. No, I said that the proviso was incorporated at their instance. We had a controversy in the committee between General Franklin and the members of the subcommittee on that point, but he failed to convince the subcommittee, and then, of course, sought other sources to remedy it.

Mr. LAIRD. Very good. It would be clearly a mistake on the part of the Committee on Appropriations if the House understood the chairman of the committee to assert that the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home were satisfied with the provision that would take this unexpended appropriation from their custody, as proposed in this paragraph, and turn it into the Treasury.

I hold in my hand a letter written by the president of the board, and transmitting as a part of it another letter written by W. W. Upton, the Comptroller of the Treasury, in which he discusses the question of law involved in the point of order presented here, and I will send this, if necessary, to the Clerk's desk and have it read as a part of my remarks, as it is pertinent to the issue and covers the question involved. It may be possible, however, to state the substance of it more briefly than to take up the time of the committee by reading it.

There are two sources under the law, Mr. Chairman, from which the directors of the soldiers' homes derive revenue to support the homes, one by direct appropriations from Congress, and another is by the deduction of certain fines and penalties, and the proceeds of the sale of certain property sold under condemnation proceedings in the Army and applied to the fund for the support of the soldiers' homes.

Now, under the decision of the Comptroller and by operation of section 3681 of the Revised Statutes, so much of the proceeds of the fines and the money derived from the sale of property upon condemnation, etc., in the Army as is turned over to the support of the soldiers' homes is required to be covered into the Treasury of the United States, pursuant to the section to which I have referred. But so much of the money for the support of the homes as is derived from appropriations of Congress passes into the hands of the Board of Managers and remains in their hands and in the hands of their successors, they having perpetual succession, as though it were in the Treasury of the United States; and the opinion of the Comptroller is that this money under existing law is authorized to remain in the hands of the managers of the homes. Consequently the point of order is well taken that this amendment changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman point to the statute which permits it or requires it to remain in the hands of the managers and not be treated as part of the surplus?

Mr. LAIRD. The statute does not specifically require it to remain in their hands.

Mr. RANDALL. It remains in their hands by a mere construction of the Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is important to show the statute, if there is a statute, in view of other provisions of law which the Chair has examined.

Mr. LAIRD. There are two statutes, as I have said: one which controls the funds derived, for the support of the homes, from fines, etc., imposed in the Army. Under the statute the money is specifically required to be covered back into the Treasury. I have cited the Chairman to that statute. It is section 3618 of the Revised Statutes, which requires specifically that the money be covered back into the Treasury. The other statutes—there are several of them—make no requirements on the subject.

I will read the opinion of the Comptroller:

> In reply I would say I deem it clear that such of said balances as have not been transmitted by request of the Secretary of War to the corporation mentioned in section 4825, remaining thus unexpended, should be covered into the Treasury in pursuance of section 3690, Revised Statutes, and the fifth section of the act of June 20, 1874 (18 Stat., 110), and I suppose there is no doubt as to that point. But as to such parts of the appropriation as have been regularly drawn from the Treasury and paid over to the said corporation in pursuance of the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., 359), the covering-in acts do not seem to apply.

I have before me the statute referred to.

Congress has given to the National Home "perpetual succession, with power to take, hold, and convey real estate and personal property," and while this corporation is a trustee, and its acts are in many respects similar in their effect to the acts performed by disbursing officers, its functions are in some respects entirely different from those of an ordinary disbursing officer, inasmuch as the money placed in the custody of the latter remains the sole and exclusive property of the United States, and is still a part of the money in the Treasury; whereas, when money is lawfully placed in the custody of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers in pursuance of said act of March 3, 1875, the legal title vests in that corporation for the time being and until Congress shall otherwise order. Congress has not otherwise ordered by law.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does it refer to current appropriations?

Mr. LAIRD. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. We argued all that in the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Nebraska will allow the Chair to call attention to what he regards as the especial point in this discussion, he would like the gentleman from Nebraska to point to some existing law which excuses the managers and officers of soldiers' homes from complying with the general provision of sections 3690 and 3691 of the Revised Statutes, which provides:

The balance which is not needed for such purposes shall be carried to the surplus.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If that provision applies, this amendment is out of order. It is unnecessary to re-enact a law already in existence.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be unnecessary; but what we want is some statute which excuses these officers.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Is it not incumbent on the Committee on Appropriations to show some necessity for such enactment?

The CHAIRMAN. On the point of order the only question for the Chair to determine is as to whether the amendment changes existing law.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is all the Chair has to deal with.

The CHAIRMAN. As to the wisdom or unwisdom of the amendment, that is a question for the committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There is one point to which I wish to call the attention of the Chair. The purpose of this bill is to make appropriation for the current year. The word "hereafter" is inserted, not "during the ensuing year," but the word is used as applying to the future. The bill reads, "and hereafter the provisions of the statutes" shall be applicable.

Why, it is as clear as the noonday sun that that is the enactment of a new law. It certainly will be assumed by the Chair as well as by every one else on this floor that the intelligent members of the Committee on Appropriations would not commit the absurdity of coming in here and asking us to re-enact a statute already in force, and it seems to me to be absolutely absurd for the inquiry to be made whether this board of managers are subject to the provisions of the statute or not. The committee confess by their bill that the managers are not subject to them; else the committee certainly would not now ask us to enact a permanent law bringing them under those provisions of the statute.

Mr. LAIRD. If the Chair will permit me to proceed with this, I think it will be seen that it covers the interrogatory of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order.

Mr. LAIRD. Well, if the mind of the court is made up there is no need of counsel taking up further time.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman can point to a statute of the nature the Chair has indicated, the Chair will be glad to have him do so.

Mr. LAIRD. If the Chair will notice sections 3690 and 3691 of the Revised Statutes, he will see that at the end of 3690 there is a provision that "this section, however, shall not apply to appropriations known as permanent or indefinite appropriations."

Mr. BLOUNT. These are not such.

Mr. LAIRD. This is a continuous appropriation as ruled by the Comptroller.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not understand that what you have read us refers to annual appropriations by Congress, but only to such funds as may be realized from other sources.

Mr. LAIRD. No, sir. I will insert the whole letter in my remarks, and the gentleman will see what the Comptroller says about the "covering in" of appropriations.

The letter in full is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., November 4, 1878.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 17th of July last, submitting the following questions touching the accounts of the "National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers:"

First. "Are balances of appropriations remaining unexpended at the end of each fiscal year to be covered into the Treasury as provided by section 3690, Revised Statutes?"

Second. "Ought the amount realized from sales by said Home to be covered into the Treasury as proceeds of Government property, as provided by section 3618, Revised Statutes?"

In reply I would say I deem it clear that such of said balances as have not been transmitted by requisition of the Secretary of War to the corporation mentioned in section 4825 remaining thus unexpended should be covered into the Treasury in pursuance of section 3690, Revised Statutes, and the fifth section of the act of June 20, 1874 (18 Stat., 110), and I suppose there is no doubt as to that point. But as to such parts of the appropriations as have been regularly drawn from the Treasury and paid over to the said corporation in pursuance of the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., 359), the covering-in acts do not seem to apply.

Congress has given to the National Home "perpetual succession, with power to take, hold, and convey real and personal property;" and while this corporation is a trustee and its acts are in many respects similar in their effects to the acts performed by disbursing officers, its functions are in some respects entirely different from those of an ordinary disbursing officer, inasmuch as the money placed in the custody of the latter remains the sole and exclusive property of the United States, and is still a part of the money in the Treasury; whereas when money is lawfully placed in the custody of "The National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers," in pursuance of said act of March 3, 1875, the legal title vests in that corporation for the time-being and until Congress shall otherwise order.

To avoid all difficulty which might arise from an unnecessary amount of money becoming thus set apart, Congress has, by the last-named act, besides requiring the annual estimate made for the information of Congress, required the managers of said home to furnish to the Secretary of War quarterly estimates of the probable expense of each ensuing quarter, and "an account of all their receipts and expenditures for the quarter immediately preceding." In this manner the Secretary of War is furnished with such data as to be able to determine with reasonable certainty whether at any time an unnecessary part of the appropriation has been placed in the keeping of the corporation, and to remedy any probable evil of this kind when issuing subsequent requisitions. This check upon the amounts to be intrusted to the administration of the corporation seems to have been designed by Congress as a substitute for the covering-in process which applies when the money is in the hands of disbursing agents having no corporate power and no legal title to the money intrusted to them.

I think there is no doubt your second interrogatory may be answered in the negative.

W. W. UPTON, Comptroller.

Hon. E. B. FRENCH, Second Auditor.

Mr. LAIRD. I think there is no doubt that the managers are not called upon under existing law to turn this over, as the amendment objected to requires them to do.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It was perhaps because of that decision of the Comptroller that the committee wanted to make the law in this appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order. The Chair will have read sections 3690 and 3691 of the Revised Statutes, which, in the absence of other provisions of law, the Chair thinks determine this question.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3690. All balances of appropriations contained in the annual appropriation bills and made specifically for the service of any fiscal year and remaining unexpended at the expiration of such fiscal year shall only be applied to the payment of expenses properly incurred during that year, or to the fulfillment of contracts properly made within that year, and balances not needed for such purposes shall be carried to the surplus fund. This section, however, shall not apply to appropriations known as permanent or indefinite appropriations.

SEC. 3691. All balances of appropriations which shall have remained on the books of the Treasury without being drawn against in the settlement of accounts for two years from the date of the last appropriation made by law shall be reported by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Auditor of the Treasury whose duty it is to settle accounts thereunder, and the Auditor shall examine the books of his office and certify to the Secretary whether such balances will be required in the settlement of any accounts pending in his office, and if it appears that such balances will not be required for this purpose, then the Secretary may include such balance in his surplus fund warrant whether the head of the proper Department shall have certified that it may be covered into the general Treasury or not. But no appropriation for the payment of the interest or the principal of the public debt, or to which a longer duration is given by law, shall be thus treated.

Mr. LAIRD. The Chairman will notice that the first section read is the section that is construed by the Comptroller.

The CHAIRMAN. The only exception made to the requirements of section 3690 of the Revised Statutes is found at the end:

This section, however, shall not apply to appropriations known as permanent or indefinite appropriations.

Appropriations made for the support of soldiers' homes are not of that class. These permanent or indefinite appropriations are appropriations providing for coinage, providing for payment of interest on the public debt, and others that might be named; but appropriations for the support of soldiers' homes, as just stated, do not come within that class. Section 3691 provides that—

If it appears that such balance will not be required for this purpose—

That is, for such outstanding accounts or claims—

then the Secretary may include such amount in his surplus fund, whether the head of the proper Department shall have certified that it may be covered into the general Treasury or not.

Construing these two statutes in the absence of any statutory exemption of the officers in charge of soldiers' homes from the requirement to report the surplus fund on hand, the Chair thinks that they are not excepted from those requirements.

If the Chair were to construe the law he would hold that they are now required to do so. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order. The Chair understood the point of order to be withdrawn as to the proviso.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Do I understand that the Chair holds that the point of order is good as to the first clause?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Chair has held that as to the first clause the point of order is not good. The Chair understands the gentleman to withdraw the point of order made against the proviso.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not see any use in urging the point of order against the proviso, because I think it is more in order than the first clause. As the Chair has laid down a proposition which retains in the bill the first clause, I will not urge the point of order against the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not include the proviso in the ruling. He understands the gentleman from Illinois to indicate now his purpose to withdraw the point of order as to that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not think the point of order is applicable to the second clause unless it is applicable to the first. Therefore I withdraw it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of the fees and expenses of United States marshals and deputies, $675,000: Provided, That not exceeding $300,000 of this appropriation may be advanced to marshals, to be accounted for in the usual way, the residue to remain in the Treasury, to be used, if at all, only in the payment of the accounts of marshals in the manner provided in section 856, Revised Statutes.

Mr. OATES. I make a point of order upon the proviso just read, which, it seems to me, is new legislation and, under the rules of the House, not in order upon a general appropriation bill. I am aware it may be claimed with some plausibility that this clause is merely a limitation upon the expenditure, or a mere direction as to the method in which the money appropriated shall be disbursed; and on that ground it may be argued that the proviso is not subject to the point of order.

But, Mr. Chairman, this proviso certainly changes existing law. It provides a new method of payment. Under the existing statute the Attorney-General has authority to direct the apportionment of the money appropriated for the payment of marshals and their deputies; and this money may be used in the payment of fees to enable them to discharge their duties. Then when they make the reports which the law requires, the First Comptroller adjusts their accounts and makes a settlement, they being responsible upon their bonds for all the money that goes into their hands. Under the change of law proposed in this proviso only $300,000 of the sum appropriated will be allowed to go into the hands of the marshals of the United States, and $375,000 will be held in the Treasury. Why held in the Treasury? It will be held there, according to the terms of this proviso, to be paid out under section 856 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that all proper claims against the United States in favor of these officers are to be paid upon the settlement made with the accounting officers. In that respect there is a change of existing law.

I am not complaining about the amount, which I understand is fully up to the estimate; but it is well known to every one who has taken the pains to look into the matter that there has been great difficulty in the adjustment of the accounts of marshals and their deputies and the obtaining of payment on those accounts. To such an extent has this difficulty gone that in one case within my knowledge—the case of a marshal in my State—his accounts were not adjusted for eighteen months, in spite of all the energy he could bring to bear in the matter; and to such an extent were the fees which he and his deputies had earned withheld in consequence of small objections (all of which were at last waived) that he informed me he could not obtain the services of competent deputies unless that method was abandoned.

Now, this proviso proposes a continuation of that method. The First Comptroller, as I remember, ruled that where the marshal was not provided with ready money to pay the expenses of holding United States courts, so that jurors and witnesses had to go unpaid, or sell or deposit their certificates, the marshal could not pay on these claims money which afterward came into his hands except to the juror or witness himself, although in many cases the jurors and witnesses lived more than 100 miles away from the court. The First Comptroller, in construing the statute, held that the certificates of witnesses or jurors were not negotiable, though the Attorney-General had adopted a construction precisely the reverse. That ruling of the First Comptroller he himself has modified, because he saw the dilemma in which it put these marshals and the great inconvenience to these parties who had earned their money.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama will permit the Chair to call his attention to the closing part of the proviso:

> The residue to remain in the Treasury, to be used, if at all, only in the payment of the accounts of marshals in the manner provided in section 856, Revised Statutes.

The Chair desires to ask the gentleman whether a direction that this money shall be paid in accordance with a certain existing provision of law is new law or is a change of existing law, and as such obnoxious to the rule?

Mr. OATES. I maintain that it is, because there are in the statutes a great many directions in regard to the payment of these accounts; that section is but one of them; and under this provision the payment of this whole sum of $375,000 is to be made in accordance with the provision of that single section, thereby suspending other provisions of law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman refer the Chair to such provisions of law as will be rendered nugatory by the provision in the bill? If there are such provisions, the Chair would be glad to take them into consideration.

Mr. OATES. The construction which has been placed by the Department upon all these different sections has operated in effect to place all this money with the marshals for the purpose of meeting these expenses. Unless the provision now pending were intended to effect a change in that respect, it would have nothing to operate upon.

If this proviso is to have any effect, the construction heretofore prevailing will be ignored, and the amount of the appropriation here reserved will be paid out in accordance entirely with the section referred to, which provides that—

> The fees of district attorneys, clerks, marshals, and commissioners, in cases where the United States are liable to pay the same, shall be paid on settling their accounts at the Treasury.

This provision extends to several classes of officers—not simply to this particular class. I submit that the proviso does change existing law. If such were not designed to be the effect—if it did not change the method of paying out this money—it would be nugatory; it would accomplish nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. What the Chair begs to direct the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to is that he will point out what statute it is this provision in the bill changes. If it changes a custom or practice of the Department, that of course may be quite a different thing from a change of the law.

Mr. OATES. It is legislation introduced here for that very purpose. Now, there is no statute which in so many words directs that this money shall be paid over at all. That is the construction of the body of the statutes in relation to the payment of marshals and deputy marshals which has prevailed all the time. The purpose is to overturn that legislation. It is of course in the nature of new legislation, for the object sought to accomplish is to change the existing practice under the present law.

Mr. RANDALL. That refers to a mere interpretation of the law, and not to the law itself. I wish to say to the gentleman from Alabama it has been inserted upon the urgent request of the Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. OATES. I am aware of the fact that this provision has been suggested by the Comptroller of the Treasury. I am also aware that, owing to the dilatoriness of accounts in that Department, bills have been introduced to expedite the settlement of these officers with the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The difficulty which the Chair sees, if he sustains the point of order, is this: Here is a gross sum of $675,000 to pay these officers; then a limitation placed on that by a clause in the bill providing, not that it shall be paid under any new law, but under existing law—a clause providing how the amount appropriated in this bill is to be paid.

Mr. OATES. Where a practice or custom in reference to the payment of these officers has continued for a long time it must be accepted as the law of the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would not hesitate to sustain the point of order if it can be shown the payment under section 856, which is directed by the clause in the appropriation bill, is a change in the law now upon the statute-book.

Mr. OATES. There are various modes of settlement adopted in reference to marshals, deputy marshals, commissioners, and other officers connected with the courts.

Mr. RANDALL. That relates to advances made to marshals.

Mr. OATES. The construction these statutes have received has gone into practice for many years. This money has been paid over in advance to marshals.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman point out the statute where that is required?

Mr. OATES. I am stating the construction put upon the statutes and the practice which has prevailed in reference to the settlement of these accounts. They are verified of course with the amount advanced, and proper credits are allowed in the adjustment. This provision changes that method to the extent that this sum is withheld and requires it to be paid out under section 856, which applies not only to marshals and their settlements but to district attorneys and other court officials. This money is retained from them. They must render their accounts and wait before they can reach it.

I find there is no statute which shows in so many words the whole amount appropriated for marshals shall be paid over to them, but the construction placed on the body of the statutes by the Department of Justice, by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, and under which they have acted, is to pay over the money as the statutes require, and to require them from time to time to render accounts which, when properly verified, are passed upon by the Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. RANDALL. I admit there is a possibility of a change of practice if this is passed.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what the Chair was trying to get at; that it, whether it was merely the practice of the Department which was proposed to be changed, or whether it was a change of the statutes.

Mr. OATES. It strikes me if new legislation changes the construction which has been placed on these several statutes, or attempts to do so, and adopts a different practice, it is as much a change of the law as if it changed the words of the law itself.

Mr. RANDALL. I draw a line of distinction there.

Mr. OATES. A settled construction, as every lawyer knows, if changed, amounts to what is equivalent to a change of the law itself.

Mr. RYAN. It may be admitted that the practice of the Department which has obtained for a great many years has been to authorize the payment to marshals of these moneys in advance; but it is a matter of construction in the Department.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I think, Mr. Chairman, the point made by the gentleman from Alabama is perhaps of this nature: Here is an appropriation which is to be expended according to a certain section of the Revised Statutes, which section is cited in the bill. Now, all agree that under that section this money can only be expended in a certain manner. All agree that that section places a limitation upon the power of the officials acting in their various capacities. All agree that the action of the officials heretofore was perfectly lawful—I am not speaking now of the construction of law, but that they have been acting in a perfectly lawful manner.

Now, it is perfectly obvious that if the statute here cited will not permit the exercise of that power as a part of the functions of these officials, then they drew it from some other part of the statutes. This clause in the bill therefore seeks to circumscribe the scope of the power of these officials, by saying that they shall be officials only to the extent laid down in that part of the statute, and shall not be officials in the sense laid down in the other undisputed section of the statute from which they drew undisputed lawful power heretofore. In that sense it may be a change of law, by imposing a limitation upon existing law, which is in effect a change of the statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order. The appropriation is made in this language:

For payment of the fees and expenses of United States marshals and deputies, $675,000: Provided, That not exceeding $300,000 of this appropriation may be advanced to marshals, to be accounted for in the usual way, the residue to remain in the Treasury to be used, if at all, only in the payment of the accounts of marshals in the manner provided in section 856, Revised Statutes.

The question for the Chair to determine is whether it is competent for the Committee on Appropriations, in framing an appropriation bill, to include a clause providing that while $375,000 shall be expended in a special way, $300,000 of the appropriation made shall be expended only under another statute, which is the law.

The Chair thinks that it is competent for the Committee on Appropriations to do so. If there were any statute that could be cited which was infringed by this action of the committee, the Chair would hold that it would all have to be construed together, and that the infraction could not be made. But in the absence of any such showing the Chair holds that it is competent for the Committee on Appropriations to designate in their appropriation bill that the expenditure shall be made under a special statute now existing, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. DIBBLE, Mr. JOHNSTON of North Carolina, and Mr. POST as conferees on the bill (H. R. 1451) for the completion of a public building at Wichita, Kans.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled the bill (H. R. 8565) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 885) to amend chapter 253 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, passed June 15, 1878, granting a pension to John Langland.

BRIDGE BILLS ERRONEOUSLY PASSED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to inform the House that certain House bills, which were erroneously upon the Calendar, were considered and passed at the last evening session, while similar bills, or bills covering precisely the same subjects, had been previously passed at other sessions of the House. The Chair will direct the Clerk to report the titles of the bills which were erroneously passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4759) authorizing the Little Rock and Alexandria Railway Company to build certain bridges in the State of Arkansas.

A bill (H. R. 7676) authorizing the Kansas City, Texarkana and Gulf Railroad Company to bridge the Red and Little Rivers, in the State of Arkansas, reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

A bill (H. R. 9610) to authorize the Birmingham, Selma and New Orleans Railway Company to build a bridge across the Tombigbee River, in Alabama, reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the several votes by which these bills were passed will be reconsidered, and they will be laid on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

And then (the hour of 5 o'clock having arrived) the Speaker pro tempore declared the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BRYCE: A bill (H. R. 10586) granting a pension to Moses Mayer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COWLES: A bill (H. R. 10587) granting a pension to Mrs. L. M. Whitted—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DOUGHERTY: A bill (H. R. 10588) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the St. John's River, in the State of Florida—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. S. T. HOPKINS: A bill (H. R. 10589) granting a pension to Henry Whitney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MATSON: A bill (H. R. 10590) for the relief of Ludwig Kirtzmeier—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10591) granting a pension to John W. Smith—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MCCULLOGH: A bill (H. R. 10592) granting a pension to Rebecca Brougher—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10593) granting a pension to Mary Henderson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10594) granting a pension to Jacob Hicks—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STONE, of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 10595) for the relief of William A. Nelson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE, of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 10596) increasing the pension of all dependent parents over seventy years old—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARNES: Memorial of Jonathan M. Miller, concerning Sandbar Ferry, on Savannah River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HOVEY (by request): Petition of James P. Gray, of Vanderburgh County, Indiana, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. NEAL: Memorial of the Medical Society of Tennessee, for removal of duty from all medicines, medical and surgical appliances, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CHARLES O'NEILL: Memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, favoring certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. PENINGTON: Petition of Typographical Union No. 2, in favor of the Chace-Breckinridge international copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: Petition of the administrator of William Martin, of Rutherford County, Tennessee, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SHERMAN: Petition of James Armstrong and others, citizens of New Hartford, N. Y., for protection of American industries—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WASHINGTON: Petition of the widow of Charles Colton, of Davidson County Tennessee, for reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WHEELER: Petition of Henry Hayett, of Jonathan O. Cooper, of Russell M. Kilburn, of Wyatt Oates, of Margaret M. Hargett, of F. W. Waugh, and of Caroline York, of Alabama, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WHITTHORNE: Petition of widow of John Nicholson, of Maury County, Tennessee, for reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WISE: Petition of John C. Jenks, heir of Augustus A. Jenks, of Chesterfield County, Virginia, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. YARDLEY: Petition of 86 citizens of Huntington Valley, Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, against the admission of Utah as a State with polygamy—to the Committee on the Territories.

The following petitions for the repeal or modification of the internal-revenue tax of $25 levied on druggists were received and severally referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

By Mr. T. H. B. BROWNE: Of J. B. Hale and others, citizens of Fredericksburgh, Va.

By Mr. MCADOO: Of citizens of Hudson County, New Jersey.

The following petition for the more effectual protection of agriculture, by means of certain import duties, was received and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 22, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LIST OF CLAIMS ALLOWED BY ACCOUNTING OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a supplemental list of claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury under appropriation the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-SHIP, COLUMBIA RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Light-House Board of appropriation for a light-ship, with fog-signal apparatus, outside of the bar of the Columbia River, Pacific coast; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSE, CEDAR POINT, MICHIGAN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Light-House Board of appropriation for a light-house at Cedar Point, mouth of Cedar River, Green Bay, Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF FACT IN THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House letters from the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting copies of findings of fact in the following cases; which were referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed:

William H. Wilson vs. The United States.
Susan S. Egler, administratrix, vs. The United States.
George H. Wenner vs. The United States.
John Dillard vs. The United States.

Almira E. Still, administratrix, vs. The United States.
Alexander Chavis, administrator, vs. The United States.
The heirs of Solomon George vs. The United States.

JOHN LANGLAND.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 885) to amend chapter 253 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, passed June 15, 1878, granting a pension to John Langland, with Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is simply an amendment to the title of the bill. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to amend the title of the bill so as to read:

"An act to amend chapter 253 of the acts of the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress, passed June 15, 1878, granting a pension to John Langland."

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be concurred in.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. TAULBEE, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. FORAN, until July 5, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. OATES. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 212.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. RANDALL. I shall have to yield for one from each side. I can not make fish of one and flesh of the other.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of States.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged report.

Mr. RANDALL. Has the morning hour been disposed of?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to make another motion.

Mr. MCRAE. I believe I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, to present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later to present his privileged report. The gentleman from Pennsylvania being on the floor, desires to make another motion.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to dispense with private business for the day.

The motion was agreed to.

DISPOSAL OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. MCRAE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to present this privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 181) to amend the joint resolution approved May 14, 1888, relating to the disposal of public lands in certain States——

Mr. RANDALL. How is that privileged?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know yet. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] stated that he desired to present a privileged report. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the joint resolution relating to the disposal of public lands in certain States, approved May 14, 1888, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to extend the provisions thereof to the States of Florida and Louisiana.

Mr. MCRAE. I am authorized by the Committee on Public Lands to report that resolution with the recommendation that it be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution which this proposes to amend, as the Chair understands, withdraws public lands from sale in certain States and reserves them for homesteads, and this extends its provisions to two other States.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; so as to embrace all the States of the South.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCRAE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, WICHITA, KANS.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I desire to present a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1451) for the completion of a public building at Wichita, Kans., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

SAMUEL DIBBLE,
THOMAS D. JOHNSTON,
P. S. POST,
Managers on the part of the House.
G. G. VEST,
S. PASCO,
JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The managers of the conference on the part of the House submitted the following statement:

The managers on the part of the House on the conference between the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1451) for the completion of a public building at Wichita, Kans., respectfully submit the following statement:

The bill as passed by the House increased the limit of cost of the Wichita public building $50,000. The Senate amendment substituted an increase of $100,000. The effect of the action of the committee of conference is in favor of the latter as the amount of increase.

SAMUEL DIBBLE,
THO. D. JOHNSTON,
P. S. POST,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FILING OF REPORTS.

Mr. MCCREARY. I ask unanimous consent that members having reports from committees to present be allowed to file them with the Clerk, to be referred to the appropriate Calendars.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

MARY C. DAVIS.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10318) granting a pension to Mary C. Davis; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Rushford, widow of John Rushford; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS WYNNE.

Mr. SAWYER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 3116) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Wynne; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE AT PLATTSMOUTH, NEBR.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported the bill (H. R. 10347) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River near the city of Plattsmouth, Nebr., and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL BOUNTY.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3407) to extend the time for filing claims for additional bounty under the act of July 28, 1866; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES EARLY, ETC.

Mr. HEARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1602) to provide for the closing of parts of two alleys in square 132 in the city of Washington, D. C., and for the relief of Charles Early and Corbin Warwick; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ALLEY CONDEMNED.

Mr. HEARD also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7364) to appropriate and pay for alley condemned in square No. 493; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BALTIMORE AND POTOMAC RAILROAD.

Mr. HEARD also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9977) to authorize the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company to extend a side track into square No. 1025, in the city of Washington; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

The Clerk will report the pending paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of United States district attorneys, the same being for payment of the regular fees provided by law for official services, $225,000.

For payment of district attorneys, the same being for payment of such special compensation as may be fixed by the Attorney-General for services not covered by salary or fees, $3,000.

Mr. MORROW. I desire to offer an amendment to the paragraph just read. I want to make the amount ten thousand instead of three thousand.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 93, line 2, strike out "three" and insert "ten."

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I believe the committee rose yesterday just after the argument and decision on the point of order on the preceding paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. OATES. The point of order was overruled, and then the committee rose. I desire to offer an amendment to that paragraph. I move to amend by striking out the proviso, for reasons which I gave yesterday. I do not know that I care to say anything in addition to what I then said.

Mr. RANDALL. Though we have passed this paragraph, I do not object to going back.

Mr. OATES. This is exactly where we left off last evening.

Mr. RANDALL. But several paragraphs have been read this morning.

Mr. OATES. I did not hear them read. I thought we were at the same point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that one or two paragraphs have been read this morning. The paragraph to which the gentleman from Alabama directs attention can be returned to by consent.

Mr. OATES. I will withdraw my motion to strike out the proviso, and content myself with offering an amendment to the proviso, allowing it to stay in.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want to take a "snap judgment" on anybody; therefore I do not make the point that we have passed the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the gentleman from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. OATES. The objection to the proviso, in my judgment, was that it would operate so as to embarrass the United States marshals and their deputies in obtaining the money that they actually earn. This provision withholds in the Treasury $375,000 of the appropriation instead of allowing it to be paid over to the marshals; it would remain there to be paid out to them on a statement and adjustment of their accounts. There may be some force in the argument that if the whole of this money should be at once distributed among the marshals at the beginning of the next fiscal year it might not be properly disbursed. It is argued further that there would be no stimulus to that vigilance and promptitude in the rendition of their accounts which is necessary to a proper keeping of the accounts of these officers in the Treasury. If these objections hold good the amendment which I propose would so arrange this matter that no harm could result. My amendment is simply to add this proviso: That the accounting officers of the Treasury shall audit, adjust, and settle the accounts of marshals and their deputies within sixty days after the same are presented for allowance.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. OATES. If this amendment be adopted I do not see that it can do any one any harm. All I wish in this matter is a prompt settlement of the accounts after the services have been rendered.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say to the gentleman from Alabama that this proviso was urgently pressed by the First Comptroller, Mr. Durham, and was adopted by the subcommittee after elaborate discussion. So far as we have heard, it has not been objected to by the Department of Justice. The gentleman understands that if the entire sum is distributed to the marshals, some get more than they need, others less; and thus a deficiency is created, unless the accounts are promptly adjusted, perhaps in the manner which the gentleman proposes.

Mr. OATES. If the accounts are promptly adjusted by the accounting officers of the Treasury, I do not see that any great inconvenience can result.

Mr. HERBERT. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] what reason the First Comptroller gave for asking the adoption of this limitation. It seems to me that under section 856 of the Revised Statutes, which is referred to in the proviso, the Comptroller has now full control over this money.

Mr. RANDALL. The reason given was that it is desirable to prevent the distribution of the entire appropriation at the beginning of the fiscal year, when it can not possibly be ascertained, or even guessed at, how much each marshal will require. This provision allows the distribution up to the amount indicated; then the accounts are adjusted, and the balance of the money in the Treasury is drawn upon. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the amendment just suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the first motion indicated by my colleague [Mr. OATES] to strike out the proviso ought to prevail. As I understand, this whole matter is now under the control of the Comptroller. He advances the amounts appropriated in such sums from time to time as his discretion may dictate. Here is the provision of section 856 of the Revised Statutes:

> The fees of district attorneys, clerks, marshals, and commissioners, in cases where the United States are liable to pay the same, shall be paid on settling their accounts at the Treasury.

When the point of order was pending yesterday the Chair very properly asked, Where is the law which would be changed by this proviso? In other words, where is the law that compels any distribution of the fund to be made by the Comptroller? There is no such law; it is a matter entirely within his discretion. He advances the money for the purpose of enabling the several marshals to pay as they go in cash for the services of each witness and juror and for all other expenses incurred. The Government is amply secured by the bonds of the marshals, which are always sufficient to cover the amounts placed in their hands. That is the object of having those bonds. I know personally, by reason of having acted occasionally on behalf of the marshal in my district, that this matter is within the discretion of the Comptroller; and I can not see why he should come here and ask us to take away from him this discretion and compel him by law to keep more than half of this appropriation in the Treasury until the accounts have all been audited and settled. It does seem to me that the arrangement now proposed would add to the numerous complaints coming from all over the country in regard to the delay experienced by marshals in getting their accounts settled at the Treasury Department.

I venture to assert, Mr. Chairman, that there is scarcely a gentleman here who represents a district in which there is a United States marshal who has not had occasion to go or write to the Treasury Department in relation to the settlement of these accounts.

Now, it seems to me that this is placing just another obstruction in the way of a prompt and speedy settlement of these accounts, and Congress is asked to take the responsibility of putting that obstacle in the way. I hope it will not be done. There is no need for it. I do not see why we should do it.

It is a matter altogether in the discretion of the officials of the Department, and certainly if this is adopted complaints will be far more numerous in the future than they have been in the past in regard to these settlements.

There is no possible need for it

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the gentleman from Alabama has not fully considered the effect of the proviso, or he would not take the position he has assumed. Under the law, as it is now administered, this fund is all distributed at the beginning of the year.

Mr. HERBERT. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I am sure he does not want to be in error, but he is entirely mistaken in that assertion.

Mr. BYNUM. Then I am misinformed. I understand it is all distributed at one time.

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir; it is not distributed; it is only distributed from time to time as it is needed.

Mr. BYNUM. I am informed by the chairman of the committee that the statement I make is correct; and that it is all distributed at the beginning of the year.

Mr. HERBERT. I beg the gentleman's pardon; that is an entire misapprehension of the fact. It is not distributed.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee understood it was distributed.

Mr. BYNUM. And that has been my information.

Mr. HERBERT. The committee has been misinformend, for I know it is not the case.

Mr. HOLMAN. It can be distributed.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the information conveyed to the committee.

Mr. HERBERT. Of couse it can be distributed; but it is not distributed. It is a matter within the discretion of the Comptroller, and he does not distribute it.

Mr. BYNUM. That, however, has been the administration of the Department in this particular. It is not in the hands of the Comptroller, but is distributed by the Department of Justice or the Attorney-General, who apportions and places in the hands of the various marshals throughout the United States such sums as in his opinion the business of the several offices will require for the ensuing year. The result of this distribution has been an inequality in the amounts of the funds left in the hands of the various marshals at the end of the year. In one district the expenses may be greater or less than they are in another, and they may vary owing to conditions which can not be foreseen. In some large amounts may remain on hand, while in others there is a deficiency. The amount allotted to one marshal may be largely in excess of the amount required, and at the end of the year there will be a surplus, whereas in another district there will be a deficiency in the fund.

When that condition of affairs is ascertained, when one marshal has a superabundance of funds and another has nothing, you can not get it from the one and transfer it to another until the end of the year. It is therefore desirable to have a portion of the funds reserved in the Treasury, and not be compelled to wait until the end of the year to enable the Department to equalize the funds. If a distribution is made semi-annually instead of annually, the Department can then determine with greater accuracy about how much is needed by each marshal, and if there has been allotted to one marshal for the first six months of the year more than is needed and another marshal in another district a less sum than is needed the error can be remedied without a deficiency being reported. This provision, therefore, will enable the Department to more speedily adjust the accounts of the marshals, because the fund will be more equally distributed and the Department will have funds on hand with which to adjust any inequalities, instead of, as now, having to wait until the end of the year and for the new appropriations.

Mr. HERBERT. Let me ask the gentleman to point to any law which compels such distribution.

Mr. BYNUM. I do not know that there is any law compelling it. It has only been the practice.

Mr. HERBERT. There is no such statute, I can assure the gentleman.

Mr. BYNUM. But as I understand it, the Department asks this legislation for the purpose of making the distribution. It has been the practice, I believe.

Mr. HERBERT. The whole matter is in the discretion of the Comptroller, and you ask this House now to tie his hands absolutely, and prohibit him from exercising that discretion which the law confers upon him. That is not where the trouble is.

Mr. BYNUM. This fund goes to the Department of Justice, and is distributed on warrants to the marshals.

Mr. HERBERT. It is distributed in the Treasury by the Comptroller; but there is no law that regulates it. It is only a matter of practice.

Mr. BYNUM. The funds are not distributed by the Comptroller. They do not remain in the Treasury. They are appropriated to the Department of Justice in an aggregate sum, and are paid over upon the warrants of the marshals upon an apportionment by that Department.

Mr. HERBERT. It will be only another obstacle in the way, and I sincerely hope it will be rejected.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment of Mr. OATES was read, as follows:

Add to the paragraph the additional proviso:

"Provided further, That the accounting officers of the Treasury shall audit, adjust, and settle the accounts of marshals, and their deputies, within sixty days next after the same are presented for allowance."

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I desire to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama by inserting a provision for jailors also.

Mr. HERBERT. That will come in at another place.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I do not propose to insist upon it now if it can be inserted at another place; but certainly the jailors are treated worse than any other servants of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his amendment for the present.

The pending amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of district attorneys, the same being for payment of such special compensation as may be fixed by the Attorney-General for services not covered by salary or fees, $3,000.

Mr. MORROW. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2, page 93, strike out "$3,000" and insert "$10,000."

Mr. MORROW. The compensation of the United States attorneys as fixed by the law at present provides for payment in most of the districts of the sum of $500 for annual compensation, and the remainder of the compensation is provided in what is called the fee bill of 1853, now incorporated into section 824 of the Revised Statutes, $6,000 being the limit of annual compensation under section 835; but there are services required of United States attorneys in many districts that do not properly come within the purview of the fee bill nor within the line of duty required under that portion of the statute providing an annual salary of $500.

In the northern district of California there is a service required of the United States attorney in connection with Chinese cases that is very important to the Government, yet it is a service that is not specifically provided for in the fee bill except upon the theory that the United States is a party in these cases. Therefore this provision of $3,000 is intended to recover such service at San Francisco and elsewhere in the United States. I am advised that the sum provided in the bill is not sufficient to pay for the service in San Francisco and elsewhere, and that this service will have to be abandoned unless a sum of money not less than $10,000 shall be appropriated.

I desire to call the attention of the committee to the necessity for the service in the district of California. I have no doubt but what the same facts will apply in other districts; but not being familiar with the other districts of the United States, I can only speak with regard to my own district. The Chinese immigration question is one of the most difficult questions we have to deal with in that district. Under the proceedings relating to habeas corpus as soon as a vessel arrives at San Francisco with Chinese passengers on board the Chinese immigrant, who is refused a landing by the custom-house official, sues out a writ of habeas corpus, is landed, and gives a bond for appearance in court when his case shall be reached for hearing.

He is then discharged and of course allowed to go where he pleases for several days or perhaps weeks or months, until his case can be reached on the calendar. In the mean time while he is out he is enabled to familiarize himself sufficiently with the country, so that when he comes before the court to support his plea of "prior residence" he is able to give such information concerning the city of San Francisco or surrounding villages as to convince the court that he has been there before and was there at the date of the treaty, which entitles him to his discharge. Confronted with this condition of affairs the Government officers made an investigation as to what could be done to prevent a false plea of this character being maintained in court. It was determined that the best way to proceed was, as soon as the Chinaman was landed to have him brought before the United States attorney and have him examined at once by the United States attorney as to whether he had been here before, and to that end ascertain his knowledge of the country and his alleged employment when he was here. Now, this system which has been adopted by the Government in San Francisco has proved the most efficient method yet devised in keeping out Chinamen not entitled to come in. But this is an unofficial service on the part of the United States attorney, directed by the court, and is not within the fee bill, unless, as I said before, we assume that the United States is in fact an actual party to the proceedings. Therefore the necessity for the sum provided for in my amendment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. An examination of the report of the committee presented with this bill will show that the officer to whom the gentleman alludes received $6,000 as his regular fee, and has been paid something like $6,000 more for attending to these Chinese habeas corpus cases. If that officer earns the first $6,000 and attends to the work for which he is chosen, his compensation is sufficient.

Mr. MORROW. Undoubtedly.

Mr. RANDALL. If he performs any other functions which enable him to earn $6,000 more he must neglect those duties.

Mr. MORROW. Unquestionably.

Mr. RANDALL. Now this district attorney, Mr. Carey, receives $6,000, and then in another way he gets $6,000 more. That is what we want to break up.

Mr. MORROW. That is precisely what I am trying to break up by my amendment. Under the present system the district attorney makes the charge for his services in habeas corpus cases under the fee bill, which, however, is a subject of controversy with the accounting officers of the Treasury. The result is his emolument accounts are swelled to the sum of $6,000. If you will give a sufficient appropriation to pay for the unofficial service according to their value under the approval of the Attorney-General, you will reduce the emolument accounts below $6,000 under the fee bill; but without a suitable appropriation the Attorney-General can not settle the accounts of the United States attorneys in this way.

I am with the gentleman from Pennsylvania in endeavoring to cut off these fees and extra salaries; and I would reduce the emolument accounts by withdrawing from them the habeas corpus cases, and pay the United States attorney what his services are fairly worth in such cases and no more.

Mr. RANDALL. Then offer an amendment that those fees shall go into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MORROW. That was the proposition made not long ago by a bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RANDALL. The only way the Committee on Appropriations can break up this abuse is by not giving the money.

Mr. MORROW. Well, that money that he now receives comes under the fee bill, and you are not breaking up any abuses. What I want you to do is to give a little more under this provision so as to stop the abuse you mention under the other head.

Mr. RANDALL. We are not going to give any more, so far as my advice is concerned, until we break up the system by which a district attorney can neglect his duty, and nevertheless draw his salary and go out into side work and make $6,000 more.

Mr. MORROW. I entirely agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania in regard to that.

Mr. RANDALL. Then let us not give the money.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. MORROW. I move to strike out the last word. I want simply to make a provision here so that the Attorney-General can pay for these services such sums as he may deem appropriate, and avoid the provisions of the fee bill by which this officer is to swell his fee.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not the only case of this abuse. There are other district attorneys who are receiving fees which we think they ought not to receive. A district attorney who receives $6,000 a year ought to be content to perform all the service that the Government of the United States requires at his hands within the limits of his district.

Mr. MORROW. Unquestionably; and that is why I urge this amendment. If this amendment is adopted so that the Attorney-General can pay for these services a reasonable amount, the result will be that the fee bill will not exceed what it was formerly, before these cases arose, namely, two or three thousand dollars in the district of California. I had the honor to be assistant United States district attorney for the district of California for four years, and the emolument account at that time was about $2,000, or perhaps $3,000, a year; but the charges did not include such services as we are now discussing, as they were not required. These Chinese habeas corpus cases have originated since the act of 1882, and when it was determined that the United States should be represented by the district attorney it was discovered that these unofficial services might be brought into the emolument account of the district attorney under the fee bill, and then it was, and not before, that his accounts were swelled to $6,000 a year.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations had not the power to say that these fees should go into the Treasury of the United States, nor had they power to create an official to be appointed by the court at a reasonable salary to perform these habeas corpus duties in connection with the Chinese. If, however, the gentleman [Mr. MORROW] will draw a paragraph that will give the court the power to appoint such an official at a reasonable salary, say $1,200 or $1,500 a year—because the work does not require a very great amount of mind—I will not object to its going into this bill; but we want to cut off this abuse of paying United States district attorneys large sums of money for performing duties that they ought to be glad to perform in connection with the service of the Government.

Mr. MORROW. I will prepare such an amendment and submit it to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OATES. As the Clerk has noted an amendment which I offered providing that these fees earned by the district attorneys unofficially shall be paid into the Treasury, I am in favor of that course. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is right in saying that a district attorney who receives $6,000 a year salary ought not to be permitted to make six thousand more in this way; and yet that statement does not fully meet the case. I agree with the gentleman on that branch of it, but there are district attorneys who do not make even $1,000 a year, and who are called upon to perform unofficial services for which they ought to be paid; yet with this meager appropriation of only $3,000, the Attorney-General will not have the means to compensate many of them. I do not know the extent——

Mr. RANDALL. I will tell you the extent. Six thousand dollars went to one man.

Mr. OATES. That is wrong.

Mr. MORROW. Yes; that is wrong. We want to break that up.

Mr. OATES. The proviso that I offered that the unofficial fees should go to the Treasury would enable the Attorney-General to properly compensate these officers without allowing any one to get double compensation.

Mr. RYAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] stated that the service rendered by the United States attorney in these Chinese habeas corpus cases was compensated under the law by a fee of $10 for each case. Did I understand the gentleman correctly?

Mr. MORROW. Yes. He presents his account for that amount, but they have not been allowed by the accounting officers.

Mr. RYAN. If that be true, why should not the compensation that he receives for that service go into his emolument returns?

Mr. OATES. My understanding is that it is paid out of an appropriation similar to this.

Mr. RYAN. That is not what I am asking. My question is this: If this service of the district attorney is compensated by law, why should not the compensation go into the emolument return?

Mr. OATES. I am not aware of any provision of law that gives special compensation for that service.

Mr. OATES. There are a good many cases coming up where some compensation ought to be given to district attorneys for unofficial duties, none being provided for in the fee bill.

Mr. RANDALL. What I think is this: that if the United States attorney who receives $6,000 a year to attend to the duties of his office goes outside and gets as much more money by other work, either he does not earn regular compensation or else there is an abuse as to the latter work; and if his regular duties are sufficient to occupy his time, then it is plain that when he is absent the Government has to pay some one else to take his place in performing his proper official duties.

Mr. OATES. I quite concur with the gentleman in thinking that when the Government pays a district attorney $6,000 a year, it is entitled to his whole time, and to all the service he can render; but there are a good many of these officers who do not get that amount; there are a good many who get even less than $1,000 a year, and others who do not get more than $1,500 or $2,000 a year, which is not great compensation for a man of fair ability, and I say that if such an officer has any unofficial duties to perform for which there is no fee or allowance provided by law, the Attorney-General ought to have a fund in hand from which to compensate him.

Mr. RANDALL. Does not the gentleman think that those district attorneys who earn the smaller salaries have sufficient time at their command to pursue their private practice of the law?

Mr. OATES. Oh, yes; they can pursue their private practice when their time is not employed by the Government. But the proposition I make is that the Government ought to pay for services actually rendered. It has not, however, been the policy of the Government to allow these district attorneys to receive as their compensation fees to a larger amount than $6,000 except in some instances like those in California, where they have been allowed to collect double fees. I think that where the salary reaches as high a sum as $6,000, the Government is entitled to all the services which the district attorney can render. Where less than that amount is received and the district attorney has duties to perform for which fees are not provided by statute, the Attorney-General ought to allow him compensation.

Mr. RANDALL. I think that the holding of this office of district attorney is conducive to an increased private practice.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] to the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW].

The amendment of Mr. OATES was read, as follows:

Provided, That the fees earned by United States district attorneys unofficially shall be turned into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest the insertion of the word "all;" so as to read "all fees." I presume the gentleman will not object to that.

Mr. OATES. I am requested to state what I mean by "unofficial" services. There are statutes providing a fee-bill, by which district attorneys are paid for certain services; yet they are required to perform by the Government other services, for which there is no fee provided by statute. It is fees of this character to which my amendment refers.

Mr. MORROW. Still they are services rendered for the benefit of the United States, but where the United States are not directly a party.

Mr. OATES. But they are not provided for by statute. I will, however, modify my amendment so as to strike out the word "unofficial" and insert "services for which no fee is now provided by law."

Mr. RYAN. If the fees are "unofficial," how does the gentleman from Alabama expect to get that class of fees turned into the Treasury?

Mr. MORROW. Under the law in regard to fees, a fee of $10 is charged and should be allowed in the case of a petition for habeas corpus in which the United States Government is not directly but indirectly a party. Under the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama this fee of $10, which, so to speak, is a fee charged by the rule of analogy, will, if collected from the petitioner, go into the Treasury; and the officer will receive from the Attorney-General for his services whatever they are reasonably worth.

Mr. RYAN. In this connection I wish to ask the gentleman from Alabama whether he contemplates that this fee of $10 in the California cases which have been referred to shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. OATES. Certainly; that would be the effect under my amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the amendment as modified be now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That for services rendered by United States district attorneys where they are not allowed to retain such fees, the same shall be turned into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Allow me to suggest a substitute for the amendment. It is to insert this provision:

Provided, That all fees earned by United States attorneys shall be included in their emolument returns and covered into the Treasury.

Mr. RANDALL. That is wise.

Mr. OATES. I have no objection to that. It covers the point. I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] being withdrawn, the Clerk will read the amendment sent to the desk by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to line 2, page 93, the words: "Provided, That all fees earned by United States attorneys shall be included in their emolument returns and covered into the Treasury."

Mr. SPRINGER. Does that allow the district attorney to retain any of the fees?

Several MEMBERS. No.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think it ought to read: "in excess of the amounts allowed by law."

Mr. OATES. By existing law the district attorneys are allowed to retain as their compensation the amount of their fees up to $6,000; the southern district of New York is an exception, the allowance there being larger.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. At the suggestion of the gentleman from Kansas, I desire to modify my amendment by inserting after the word "fees" the words "or emoluments."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the modification will be made.

Mr. SPRINGER. This being a new provision of law, it should provide fees and emoluments in excess of the salary allowed by law shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. RYAN. Not in excess of $6,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the provision, that he shall not have anything.

Mr. RYAN. This provides the compensation he receives for his services as United States attorney through fees, or salary, or allowance shall all go into his emolument return to make up $6,000. Is not that right?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; that is right.

Mr. SPRINGER. If you are going to pay $6,000 all right.

The amendment as modified was again reported.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. A word in addition to what I have already said.

Mr. BYNUM. Will that amendment effect the gentleman's purpose?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The law provides that the district attorney may retain out of his fees and returns the sum of $6,000. He is required to make an emolument return—a return of his fees and earnings into the Treasury Department. If he earns fees and emoluments in excess of $6,000, then he may be allowed for extra services in the discretion of the Attorney-General; but he is permitted to retain $6,000, and if he earns more than $6,000 then the Attorney-General is allowed in particular cases to allow something beyond that.

Mr. BYNUM. I understand fully, and the only fear I have is that the language of the law will prevent his retaining anything.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. No, sir.

Mr. OATES. There are so many statutes making exceptions as to different attorneys in different districts, it seems to me this is rather blind legislation, and we can not tell what the effect of it will be.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. I desire to call the attention of the House to this fact. If this matter is carefully investigated it will be ascertained there are a number of special statutes on this subject, and it will certainly be unwise in this inconsiderate manner to undertake to change the policy of the Government in this respect. This matter was called to the attention of the Judiciary Committee, and I remember that in many of the States there are many statutes regulating the payment of these officers. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] will find after this amendment is adopted—if the House shall see proper to do it—it will lead simply to confusion worse confounded. The gentleman will find by investigation there are a number of statutes regulating these payments, special in their character.

I desire to say in addition that I do not fully understand what he means by the word "emoluments." It is true that is a legal term and has a legal signification, but when he says fees and emoluments shall be covered into the Treasury it may be a matter in which he may find himself involved in difficulty when he comes to have the accounts made up.

My opinion is that it is better to let the law remain as it is now. Let these payments under the control of the Department of Justice be covered into the Treasury under existing law. We should not legislate, in my judgment, upon such an important matter in this inconsiderate way.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The law requires the district attorney every six months to report to the Treasury everything he has earned in every class of cases, dismissed cases, nolle cases, cases of trial by jury, judgments of court, which are all reported in their emolument returns, and are all covered into the Treasury. The district attorney, instead of being paid from the Department here, retains the amount out of his emolument returns. When I was district attorney I was never paid except from my emolument returns.

Now the only effect of this provision is to require the district attorney to cover into the Treasury, in certain cases, fees that for some reason heretofore he has not been in the habit of including in his emolument returns. That is all. He draws his salary just the same under the law as it is.

Gentlemen are mistaken if they suppose that district attorneys are paid by fees in the sense of retaining them. They may retain them, it is true; but they include them in the emolument return, and that emolument return is the measure of their compensation if it does not exceed $6,000. Take an instance: The United States marshal in Indiana makes his emolument returns, and receives his compensation, of course, in the same way. One United States marshal there concluded that he was not under obligation, in accordance with the practice, to return fees received in bankruptcy cases when he rendered his accounts; but the Comptroller refused to audit the account until he included also the bankruptcy fees in his emolument returns, and covered them into the Treasury of the United States.

Now, the effect of the amendment is to provide that he shall return his fees—and I have used the word "emolument" because it covers his earnings, and is perhaps a little more comprehensive than the word "fees"—it contemplates that he shall cover all the earnings of his office into the Treasury of the United States, and the Treasury Department shall audit the account and pay $6,000 a year to the official as his full compensation. That is all. It is not capable of any other construction. It does not contemplate anything else; and there is nothing in the provision which can justify any other construction. There is no confusion about it, nor can there be any.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, it is hardly to be expected that a layman should know exactly what the effect of such propositions are, when that most learned and fraternal of professions, the legal gentlemen of the House, differ so widely. But I venture to suggest that the remedy provided by the Committee on Appropriations, as far as they could go, is the better plan, and ought to be adhered to in the limitation as to the amount of money appropriated for this service. The Judiciary Committee, it seems to me, is the proper source for the cure of such abuses as I have indicated as occurring, or which have taken place in the northern district of California; and I hope at least that the amount fixed by the committee will not be increased.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 41.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to renew the amendment with an addition which I now send to the desk, as there seems to be some misapprehension in the minds of the committee as to the effect of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following proviso:
"Provided, That all fees and emoluments earned by the United States attorneys shall be included in their emolument return and covered into the Treasury, except the amount of compensation now allowed by law."

Mr. SPRINGER. That makes the provision explicit——

Mr. RANDALL. I fear that if adopted it might by implication recognize exactly what I am trying to prevent.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want them to put all these fees into the emolument returns; but I will modify it to meet what I understand to be the objection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania by striking out the words "and covered into the Treasury."

Mr. RANDALL. I think it would be better to let the Judiciary Committee take charge of that subject and report by a bill. I want to say that there are services now rendered by the district attorneys for which there are no recognized fees provided by statute.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would suggest to the chairman that he allow this provision to pass over temporarily, with the privilege of recurring to it.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, then, the clause will be passed over.

There was no objection.

Mr. OATES. What has become of the amendment of the gentleman from California?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood it to be withdrawn.

Mr. OATES. I refer to the amendment proposed to strike out "three" and insert "ten."

Mr. MORROW. I have not withdrawn that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs pardon. The Chair was under the impression that it had been withdrawn.

Mr. RANDALL. We do not want to increase that amount.

Mr. MORROW. This is the provision in reference to the Chinese question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the amendment of the gentleman from California to the committee.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 16, noes 42.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of regular assistants to United States district attorneys, who are appointed by the Attorney-General at a fixed annual compensation, $105,000.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of the paragraph the words:
"Provided, That the respective salaries of such assistants be restored to the amount paid prior to July 1, 1887."

Mr. RANDALL. That is a change, and it belongs to the deficiency bill. It refers to the past and has no place in this bill. We have provided in this $105,000 that they shall receive that additional 20 per cent. allowed on the prior acts making the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. I do.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not think the gentleman from Pennsylvania understood the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I think I did.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The amendment does not provide for paying them for the time which is passed. It only emphasizes the declaration of the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee have emphasized this by giving $105,000 so that the assistants will get the additional $20,000 during the coming year. That is as far as we want to go.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is as far as the amendment I offered goes.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not necessary. We have provided that all he regular assistants shall get the 20 per cent. of which they have been deprived because of the fact that part of the fund was, whether unnecessarily and improperly or not I can not say, taken for special attorneys.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I want to say to the chairman of the committee that this amendment, as I believe, is directly in accord with the plan of the committee. It goes no further and proposes nothing but a distinct declaration——

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, well, we do not want to legislate in that connection. We will take care of that 20 per cent. and emphasize it when the deficiency bill comes in.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I address myself to the Chair on the point of order. The proposition is:

Provided, That the respective salaries of such assistants be restored to the amount paid prior to July 1, 1887.

Mr. RYAN. May I interrupt the gentleman for a moment?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. You may.

Mr. RYAN. The Department reduced all the assistants 20 per cent. for the current year. They did so because, as they claim, of an inadequate appropriation. The committee was informed that at present the aggregate amount that is being paid out to the regular assistants is $85,000. The amount of the 20 per cent. reduction was about $20,000. So the committee added that $20,000 to the $85,000 that is now being paid to the regular assistants, in order that the Department might restore the 20 per cent. that has been taken from these officers.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I understand that. It was done in order that the Department might restore the salaries.

Now, I will address myself to the question whether this amendment is subject to the point of order. At the date of July 1, 1887, these assistants were receiving certain salaries in conformity with existing law. The Department of Justice having paid out or proposing to pay out larger sums to other assistants appointed by that Department, cut off without action of Congress, without action of law, the salaries of these assistants. Now, I think clearly the committee have appropriated a sum sufficient to restore that 20 per cent. But there is no declaration in the existing bill that the Department shall do so. My amendment is simply a declaration that they shall comply with existing law.

Mr. RANDALL. I only want to say, the amendment interferes with the discretion of the Department—that discretion which now rests with the Attorney-General under the law. The amendment changes the law in that particular. Will the Chair decide the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Was the reduction made by departmental action?

Mr. RANDALL. There is a discretion provided in the act in that connection. At least I presume so, because the Attorney-General would not violate the law. He is an officer to execute and administer the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if there was a discretion given in the law for the reduction, if the Attorney-General followed that discretion, and if it is proposed by the amendment to take away that discretion by forcing the payment of a certain amount, the amendment would change existing law. But in the absence of the statute the Chair is unable to state how that is.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. As I understand the statement of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN], who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, the object in making this appropriation, both in the language used and in the amount fixed, was that the Department should restore these salaries. I think the language of the bill itself is just as much subject to the point of order as being new legislation as is the proviso I propose to place in it.

Mr. RANDALL. Not at all.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Was it not and is it not the purpose of your committee that the Department should restore these salaries to what they were July 1, 1887.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; we give them the money that will enable them to do it, but we do not say they shall do it.

Mr. RYAN. That is true; but the object of adding that $20,000 was to enable the Department to restore the 20 per cent. to the officers from whom it had been taken.

Mr. RANDALL. I can understand that in some of these cases the Attorney-General might not want to restore the old salary, on account of the inefficiency of the officer or some other reason.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I see that objection to the proviso.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing to leave it as the law now is, to the discretion of the Attorney-General. Let us content ourselves with returning the amount of money that was taken from that fund to go to the regular assistants. We have separated the appropriation so that the amount fixed ($105,000) for those assistants shall not be diverted to other objects.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] or the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] give the Chair a reference to the statute under which the reduction was made? The amendment takes away all discretion as to the reduction.

Mr. RYAN. It grows out of the very law that authorizes him to fix the salary. He refixes the salary, and fixes it at the reduced figure. That is where he gets the power to make the reduction of 20 per cent., and that is the method by which the reduction was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The reduction was made by refixing the salary, and the statute allows him to adjust the salary?

Mr. RYAN. Yes, in his discretion.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, that being so, the Chair will be compelled to hold that the point of order is well taken, because the proviso compels this official to pay to these officers not what is proper in his discretion, but what he was paying prior to the reduction. Therefore, if the law is as the gentleman says, the Chair is compelled to hold that the proviso would change existing law in that it would take away this discretion. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move to strike out the last word, and I do it almost entirely for the purpose of obtaining information. I understand that the payments to assistant attorneys have heretofore been included in one item. I find that in this bill they are divided into two items, one being for the regular assistants, an appropriation of $105,000, and the other for what may be termed special assistants, $10,000 additional, aggregating $115,000. Now, I find by Executive Document No. 208 that the fees of assistant attorneys, as given therein, were for 1885, in round numbers, $90,000; for 1886, $98,500; for 1887, $98,645; and on turning to the report of the committee, I find a letter from Comptroller Durham, under date of March 9, 1888, where he gives the special cases in which services were rendered and the fees allowed therein, aggregating in round numbers $5,009. By adding that to $98,600, I get an aggregate of $103,600, instead of $115,000. I do not know that I have included all the items, but I do know that from the information furnished by the officials and by the committee it would seem as though there was an increase in the aggregate allowance. When I say the "aggregate allowance" I mean the allowances to the regular assistants and the special assistants united.

I may be wrong in this, but I am confirmed in my idea that there is an increase here, by turning to another letter of Comptroller Durham, under date June 9, 1888, where he suggests this division of the appropriation under these two heads, one for the regular assistants and the other for the special assistants. His suggestion is that the appropriation for the regular assistants should be $100,000, whereas the committee have reported it as $105,000. I understand the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations well enough to hesitate to believe that he would recommend an increase unless the needs of the service imperatively demanded it.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] misapprehends the reference of the First Comptroller in his letter of March 9. That letter, with the table attached, applies to salaries paid to regular attorneys outside of their regular compensation, and the "special" amount that has been expended is much greater than that.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But where in these documents is there any specifications of the "special" amount which has been expended, to whom it has gone, and in what amounts? I must say that I have searched carefully every document within my reach but have failed to get the information, and I want to know where this difference is.

Mr. RANDALL. In order to simplify the matter we have provided, first, in a paragraph for the salaries of the district attorneys; next, for the regular assistants, who are paid an annual compensation; and third, for other assistants, who may be characterized as specials. I ask to have read a communication from the Attorney-General——

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand that that is so in the bill, but I have given the figures as they were in 1885, 1886, and 1887; and in 1887, with the special allowances, they aggregated only $103,600, whereas these two items in the bill make $115,000.

Mr. RYAN. But you are mistaken; they aggregate more; those are for the regular assistants.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am speaking of the special assistants.

Mr. RYAN. But those figures refer to the regular assistants, not the special assistants.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I wish to know what document gives us any light as to what special assistants have been employed during the past two years and their compensation. Can the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations give us that information?

Mr. RANDALL. I have not that information at hand; but the gentleman can get it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Where?

Mr. RANDALL. A document which I hold in my hand shows the regular assistants for the last three years.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But it is well known there have been special cases prosecuted under the authority of the Department of Justice for the last two years. I want to know whether there is any appropriation in this bill for that purpose, and whether there is accessible to members any report giving the payments made on account of such services.

Mr. RANDALL. My information—and I want to speak with care, because I have to rely exclusively on my memory—is that heretofore there has been about $55,000 expended in other directions than as provided for, by reason of the two funds being put together, necessitating the 20 per cent. reduction to which allusion has been made. The committee want to break up that system, and in the very next paragraph of the bill have provided that $10,000 shall be the extent of the expense to which the Government shall be put in this connection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am in sympathy with the object of the committee, but I want to know——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move to strike out the last two words. I want to know whether there is any document or report which will inform us what those $55,000 went for.

Mr. RANDALL. There is not in this report anything which will give that information; but the information is accessible to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I take the liberty of stating to the gentleman from New Jersey that on page 193 of the annual report of the Attorney-General of the United States for 1887 he will find the information he desires.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will examine that further on. I will now ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations another question. As I have stated, I find by the document I hold in my hand that in 1885 the compensation to these regular assistants was, in round numbers, $90,000; in 1887 it jumped up to more than $98,000; and now it is proposed to appropriate $105,000. Why the increase?

Mr. RANDALL. I can only say that is the statement which has come to us from the Department. We have simplified it so that those assistants shall get what they received prior to the reduction which was made by the Attorney-General or the President—I do not know which.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But Comptroller Maynard, in a letter of June 9, recommends an appropriation under this item of only $100,000; yet the committee has put it at $105,000.

Mr. RANDALL. We have made the appropriation separate and distinct, so that under this paragraph no money can go to pay exorbitant fees for special counsel.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand that. You follow the Comptroller's suggestion as to form, but exceed it as to figures.

Mr. RANDALL. I guess not.

Mr. RYAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] labors under a misapprehension.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Here is the letter, which I ask the gentleman to read.

Mr. RYAN. It does not matter what the letter says.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It does matter what the letter says when the gentleman disputes my statement based upon that letter.

Mr. RYAN. We have ascertained from the actual expenditures in the Department that $85,000 is now being paid to the regular assistants, and the deduction of 20 per cent. for the last year amounted to $20,000. We have added $20,000 to the $85,000 in order to restore the 20 per cent.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will read the letter of the Comptroller:

I am unable to give you exact figures for this year; but I suggest the appropriation for regular assistants ought to be about $100,000.

Mr. RYAN. "About."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I did not know that this committee ever exceeded the estimates.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of assistants to United States district attorneys who are employed by the Attorney-General to aid district attorneys in special cases, $10,000.

Mr. SOWDEN. I move to strike out the paragraph just read. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the vicious practice which has grown up of employing special attorneys under the Department of Justice should be discontinued. The report of the Attorney-General for the last year indicates the number of these special attorneys and the extraordinary expense attending their employment. I have before me an itemized account of the exorbitant charges of one of these special counsel, Grosvenor P. Lowery. I see by the bill of items which he rendered to the Department of Justice, and which was certified to the Treasury Department——

Mr. RANDALL. I submit to the gentleman that in this bill we provide against the recurrence of those large expenditures to which I suppose the gentleman is going to refer.

Mr. SOWDEN. I say that this gentleman charges—

To special services in accordance with terms of contract, attendance upon court at the adjourned June term in September, 1886, at Cincinnati, an argument of motion to dismiss and plea in abatement of the defendant, the American Bell Telephone Company, $500.

That is what he charges as per contract. I go back and examine the bill of particulars, and I find on the 16th of September he charges $75 for ten hours' work, and that he—

Went to Cincinnati at 7 p. m., arrived at Cincinnati at 6 in the morning, 17th, and charged $100.

In other words, he charged $100 while sleeping en route to Cincinnati. On another page of his bill I find he charges for traveling and other expenses for himself and clerk to Cincinnati and return, September 16, $171.50.

Here is his account and letter of Assistant Secretary Thompson transmitting the same to me. It deserves the careful examination of every member of this House before we vote for any further appropriations of this character.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 12, 1888.

SIR: In compliance with your request of the 6th instant, I have the honor to transmit herewith a certified copy of an account No. 100436 for $5,783.45 in favor of Grosvenor Lowery for services as an attorney in the case of the United States vs. The American Bell Telephone Company.

Respectfully yours,

HUGH S. THOMPSON, Assistant Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SOWDEN,
House of Representatives.

TRANSCRIPT CERTIFICATE.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, REGISTER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 10, 1888.

Pursuant to section 886 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, I, W. S. Rosecrans, Register of the Treasury Department, do hereby certify that the annexed is a transcript from the books and proceedings of the Treasury Department, and true copies of the originals on file in the case of G. P. Lowrey, special assistant United States attorney for the southern district of Ohio.

W. S. ROSECRANS, Register.
A. H.

Be it remembered that William S. Rosecrans, esq., who certified the annexed transcript, is now, and was at the time of doing so, Register of the Treasury of the United States, and that full faith and credit are due to his official attestations.

In testimony whereof I, Hugh S. Thompson, Acting Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, have hereunto subscribed my name and caused to be affixed the seal of this Department, at the city of Washington, this 10th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1888.

[SEAL.]

HUGH S. THOMPSON,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
December 18, 1886.

I hereby certify that I have examined and adjusted an account between the United States and G. P. Lowrey, special assistant United States attorney for the southern district of Ohio, and find that the sum of $5,783.45 is due from the United States to him for services and expenses in the case of the United States vs. The American Bell Telephone Company et als., in full to December 6, 1886, which sum is payable from the appropriation for fees of district attorneys United States courts, 1887, as appears from the statement and vouchers herewith transmitted for the decision of the First Comptroller of the Treasury thereon.

JAS. Q. CHENOWETH, First Auditor.

To the FIRST COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY.

FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE.

I admit and certify the above balance this 28th day of December, 1886.

CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW YORK:

Grosvenor P. Lowrey, being duly sworn, says: The accompanying account against the Department of Justice for professional services and disbursements in the case of The United States vs. The American Bell Telephone Company, and also the bill for amount of balance due for services and disbursements April 7, 1886, in the same case, all bills being dated December 6, 1886, are true and correct in all respects.

The account is made out under employment of February 3, 1886; the times charged in both bills were actually and necessarily employed in investigating the matters embraced in the terms of my employment; the travel, correspondence, telegrams, etc., were necessary to the same.

The gross sum charged, being $7,783.45, is justly due, and no part thereof has been paid; and all available vouchers for outlays and disbursements have been secured and are annexed to the bills, including the bill rendered April 7, 1886.

GROSVENOR P. LOWREY.

Statement:
Received December 17, 1886.
Dated December 16, 188-.
From Special Assistant United States Attorney G. P. Lowrey.
Appointment February 3, 1886.
Oath April 2, 1886.
Subject, 1887:

$7,783.45. Services and expenses from April 7, 1886, to December 6, 1886, including balance due April 7, 1886, in United States vs. The American Bell Telephone Company et al., being compensation per agreement.

Action:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, December 18, 1886.

I hereby certify that such services were actually rendered, and that the same could not be performed by the Attorney-General, or Solicitor-General, or the officers of the Department of Justice, or by the district attorneys.

This account is approved for $5,783.45, and respectfully referred to the First Auditor of the Treasury, payment to be made from fees United States attorneys fund, 1887, to G. P. Lowrey, 15 Broad street, New York City, N. Y.

[SEAL.] G. A. JENKS,
Acting Attorney-General.

This account speaks for itself, and needs no further comments at my hand.

Mr. RANDALL. If my colleague will examine the amount appropriated in this bill, he will find that it will prevent anything of this kind being done hereafter.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I find that there has already been paid to special attorneys in this one case an amount exceeding $40,000. In my judgment it is time to call a halt on such expenditures.

Mr. RANDALL. That is what the committee have done.

Mr. SOWDEN. I am glad to hear it. It should have been done long ago. It seems to me that my amendment ought to prevail. Over $40,000 has already been paid these special attorneys, and according to the statement before me, from the Treasury Department, Mr. Lowrey still claims $911.12.

Mr. RANDALL. The claim to which the gentleman refers is not covered by this bill, but will have to be provided for in the deficiency bill. I am advised there is an item of $20,000 in the deficiency estimates.

Mr. SOWDEN. I hope my colleague will see to it that no appropriation is made for any such purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. The amount in the pending bill, as the gentleman will find by looking at it, will prevent anything of the kind during the coming fiscal year.

Mr. SOWDEN. But we ought to see that this balance for which this man makes claim should not be paid to him.

Mr. RANDALL. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Mr. OATES. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, in support of his motion, discussed only estimates put in by the Attorney-General in the employment of counsel in the prosecution of what is known as the telephone case. The suit was brought and contracts entered into by Mr. Goode, except as to the contract made with him after he went out of office. Subsequent contracts in reference to suit in United States court in Massachusetts were made by the present Solicitor-General, Mr. Jenks.

And, sir, when any gentleman looks into the character of that litigation and the character of talent necessary in order to prosecute the suit properly he can not object to these expenditures.

It is true in the case of Lowrey the expenditure seems to be not in accord with the charges made by other attorneys, but in excess of them. I have not the official information at hand, but it is a fact, nevertheless, that his services have been dispensed with, and he is no longer in the employment of the Government in that case. So, too, Mr. Goode has ceased to have any connection with the prosecution of that case, which has not been finally disposed of, but is still pending on an appeal before the Supreme Court. And it is necessary to retain, for the proper prosecution of it, all of the other counsel that the Solicitor-General, acting as Attorney-General in this matter on account of the disability of the Attorney-General from interest, has employed.

So instead of striking out the $10,000 which the committee has seen proper to report, that amount should be at least multiplied by four. It is too small, sir, for a proper compensation of the attorneys in this particular case. In addition to that we have but to look over the report of the Attorney-General and we will see that special attorneys are employed, and necessarily so, in other litigations in which the Government is largely interested. One suit in the State of California alone involves the interest of the Government to the extent of some two million of dollars, and we see by the report that Mr. D. M. Delmas, a lawyer of eminent ability in San Francisco, has been employed at a rate of compensation fixed at $100 a day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. OATES. I move to strike out the last word.

Now, sir, from the very character of that suit, which is instituted to recover damages of the Nevada Lumber Company for cutting timber and trespassing upon the lands of the United States, vast numbers of witnesses will be called upon to testify. During the present session money has been appropriated to pay for land surveys in order to have correct and accurate evidence in the case. There will be hundreds of witnesses, and it will take many days in time to prosecute the suit, and a large amount of money to pay the necessary expenses.

Mr. Chairman, the appropriation of $10,000, I repeat, is wholly insufficient to meet the expenses necessarily involved in these cases alone; and the Government ought not to trust entirely to the ability of the district attorney in the prosecution of cases involving such vast interests.

But a few words now in reference to the telephone litigation. I believe I am the only member upon this floor who was engaged in the special investigation of the telephone matters for about four months, under a resolution adopted by the last Congress. I ought to know something of the litigation which has been instituted in those cases; but it is sufficient to say at present that the first suit brought at the instance of the Solicitor-General, Mr. Goode, was dismissed, it was understood at the instance of the President, because it had not been referred to the Department of the Interior, which was the practice then prevailing.

Then another application was made, and the Secretary of the Interior summoned both his assistant and the Commissioner of Patents, and invited the Bell Telephone Company with the other competing companies interested to appear, all of whom came before them, and they had a hearing day after day, represented on both sides by the ablest counsel in the United States for a long time. Testimony was taken which formed a volume of many hundreds of pages; and after this full investigation by these officials, and after the First Assistant and the Commissioner of Patents all delivering opinions without consultation to the Secretary of the Interior, they were all of opinion, as well as the Secretary himself, that this suit ought to be brought in the interest of the people at large, on the allegation of facts tending to show that the patent was obtained by fraud, that it was not the invention of the original patentee, and that therefore a great monopoly with an aggregated capital amounting to some two hundred millions of money ought not to be permitted to continue its business if these allegations were true. And it was but just to the people of the United States that a suit should be brought at the instance of the Government, that being the only character of suit in which there could be an annulment of the patent in such a case.

In the other suits that had been brought and were pending in the Supreme Court, but which were recently decided, they were brought under the law which permitted them only for infringement, and the main question underlying was incidentally and not directly involved, and has never yet been decided. That question has never as yet been decided, important though it may be, by the Supreme Court; and while this committee deny to the Acting Attorney-General, Mr. Jenks, a sufficient sum of money to retain the services of efficient counsel in order to prosecute that suit to a final termination there can be no decision. It seems to me most unwise.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] complains that some $40,000 have already been paid to counsel. Well, suppose it be true that $40,000 has been paid to counsel; suppose that a greater amount was paid than ought to have been paid in the judgment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that is no reason to stop here and deny an appropriation which would be practically ordering a dismissal of the cases on the part of the Government. But we should appropriate money enough to enable the Acting Attorney-General in that matter to prosecute the case to a final decision, as well as the other important suit to which I have called attention in California, and several minor ones, for which the sum of $10,000 here appropriated is utterly insufficient.

Mr. RANDALL. I can state to the House that there was paid about $40,000; and as I understand it there is a deficiency asked for on account of assistant attorneys of $25,000 more. Now, it occurred to me that amount might not go to the regular assistant attorneys but to the special assistants. How much it will be I do not know because I have not examined the papers; but it occurs to me that $40,000 to these attorneys is sufficient compensation to enable them to pursue this case to the end, in connection with what is here provided for. We have divided the appropriation so that the amount provided for the regular assistants shall not be disturbed, and separate provision is made for the special attorneys. I think $10,000 is quite adequate for that purpose. We do not know or believe that a case is likely to occur again of so great magnitude as the one to which the gentleman has alluded.

Mr. OATES. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is doubtless aware of what I stated I knew unofficially, that the services of Mr. Lowrey and Mr. Goode have ceased. Mr. Goode has been paid in full.

Mr. RANDALL. I have a letter here, dated March 8, from the Department of Justice, which, after reciting that $38,591.74 has been paid, says the balance unpaid, as near as can be stated or estimated, is as follows: To John Goode, $5,000——

Mr. OATES. Not $5,000.

Mr. RANDALL. No; six days at the rate of $5,000. The amount due to Mr. Lowrey is $911. The letter goes on to state that Hon. A. G. Thurman has not rendered his bill for services in the case at Boston. This shows there must be some balance due.

Mr. OATES. Doubtless there is some balance due; but the two gentlemen to whom I have referred, Goode and Lowrey, have ceased their connection with the case. Probably Judge Thurman's connection will terminate also.

Mr. RANDALL. We thought $10,000 was enough for this purpose.

Mr. OATES. When you examine the contracts existing as to the other attorneys——

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say, in justice to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES], that I confirm his statement that the Attorney-General has had no connection whatever with the cases; that all the proceedings have been conducted under the direction of the Solicitor-General.

Mr. OATES. The Solicitor-General has had charge of all the proceedings.

Mr. RANDALL. Whether the Solicitor-General conferred with any other officer of the Government or not I do not know. It has been intimated he did.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the pending question?

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to strike out lines 7, 8, and 9.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am opposed to the motion to strike out. When opportunity is given I want to move to increase the amount.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. SOWDEN. I renew it. I agree with the gentleman from Alabama in what he has to say in reference to the importance of the case of the United States against the Bell Telephone Company; but I take issue with him when he proposes to defend the immensely large sums of fees charged by these special attorneys, and more particularly the fees charged by Mr. Lowrey.

I say his claim is wholly unjustifiable. He charged $500 for attorney fees while attending court at Cincinnati—$100 a day while there—besides $8 a day for hotel expenses, and $171.50 for traveling expenses to and from Cincinnati for himself and clerk. This charge is beyond all reason, and I hope the House will refuse to appropriate any further money with which to meet his demands. I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, by what authority these special attorneys are employed through the Solicitor-General. If I correctly understand the act of 1870, under which these attorneys are employed, they can only be employed by the Attorney-General himself. No compensation can be allowed to any person besides the respective district attorneys and assistant district attorneys for service as attorney or counsel to the United States or to any branch or department of the Government, except in cases specially authorized by law, and then only on the certificate of the Attorney-General that such services were actually rendered, and that the same could not be performed by the Attorney-General or Solicitor-General, or the officers of the Department of Justice, or by the district attorneys.

I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, whether the district attorneys representing the Government in the different districts of the United States, together with their assistants, are incapable of properly representing the Government in these suits? Is it true that the Attorney-General with his corps of able assistants or deputy attorneys-general, with the Solicitor-General and his assistants, can not perform this work? As I understand the law, the Solicitor-General, or any officer of the Department of Justice, may be sent by the Attorney-General to any State or district in the United States to attend to the interests of the United States in any suit pending in any of the courts of the United States or in the courts of any State. Why can not the Solicitor-General or some other officer of the Department of Justice be sent into the different States or districts of the United States where suits are pending in which the United States have an interest, and assist the United States district attorneys where they are incapable properly to represent the interests of the Government? Thus these extraordinary expenses might be saved to the people. Forty thousand dollars to $60,000 for special counsel fees in a single case is entirely too much, and can not be regarded as proper economy in the management of the Department of Justice under this Administration.

Mr. BUCHANAN. On examining the report of the Attorney-General to which I was referred, I find there is scarcely any information furnished upon the point about which I inquired. The names of the special counsel are stated, but that is all. There is no statement of what is paid them. The statement is that compensation is to be fixed by the Department of Justice. Now, as is well understood, in this Hall for some time past, and to-day as we have been sitting here, the thermometer has mounted up into the nineties. And when the suggestion was made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] that the Attorney-General was not responsible for the origin or conduct of this legislation, and the Solicitor-General alone was responsible, the suggestion struck this House with such a degree of refreshing coolness that the thermometer fell 10° instanter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, as remarks upon this side of the House have had such a beneficial effect upon the weather, we will have a few more. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. OATES. I move to amend by striking out "ten thousand" and inserting "forty thousand." This appropriation will be available in part to the use of the Solicitor-General, acting as Attorney-General in the prosecution of the telephone suit, and in part to the use of the Attorney-General in cases where he has seen proper or thought it necessary to employ assistants to district attorneys, particularly in the case that I have referred to in California, involving $2,000,000.

That is a suit against a solvent company entirely able to respond in damages, a suit requested by the Interior Department, in the first place, by Commissioner Sparks, and the Attorney-General saw proper in bringing a suit of that magnitude against a company with unlimited means, a company which employs attorneys of the very highest ability to defend that suit, and pays them, no doubt, more than the total amount I propose to appropriate in this bill—$40,000. The Attorney-General, I say, saw proper in bringing that suit to employ assistants. Could the Government safely rely upon the district attorney alone to prosecute such a case as that? Why, it would have been folly to have done it. On the contrary, it was wise to employ the very best ability that could be obtained.

That has been done, and in view of the length of time necessary for the trial of the cause (of which we can judge by the number of witnesses subpœnaed and the character of the contest), the payment of one attorney receiving $100 a day would probably absorb the greater portion of this ten-thousand-dollar appropriation. And is that anything to the Government in a suit involving two millions? Why pursue a policy which will cramp the Department and limit it to the expenditure of $10,000 when, if there were no more than two suits of the character I have indicated, that amount would be quite inadequate, and we all know that there are a good many minor suits in which it is necessary to employ assistant counsel? Why, sir, attorneys of the ability and standing of those employed specially are men who would not accept the office of district attorney, men who earn $25,000 or $50,000 a year in their general practice, and you can not expect to obtain their services for a mere song.

The Government when it employs their services must expect to pay them reasonably, otherwise it will not be able to secure them. In the telephone suit all of the preliminaries, all of the details, have been already gone through with, and it is now in a shape to go before the Supreme Court for argument and consideration. Would it be wise to deny to the Acting Attorney-General in that case a sufficient amount of money to retain the counsel already employed for the proper presentation of the case before that court? With this meager appropriation, to be divided between that suit and the other suit in California, it could not be expected that the Solicitor-General would be able to retain the services of the counsel who have been in the telephone case from the beginning and who therefore ought to know all of its features and be able to argue it to so much greater advantage than any new men could possibly do. For these reasons, while I acquit the committee of all wrongful intention in the matter, I do insist that they have not attached the importance to this suject that it deserves, that they have not gone to the bottom of it as they should have done; and I believe that if they had done so they would have appreciated it properly and would have recommended a more adequate appropriation than $10,000.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman will perhaps be surprised when I state that the expenditures of the Department of Justice for the current year are $350,000 greater than they have ever been before.

Mr. OATES. I raise no question about the general expenditures of the Department. This particular matter is what I have been speaking about.

Mr. RANDALL. And I was almost inclined to say that instead of being the temple of justice, it seemed to be a sink of injustice. The citizen and his rights are trampled upon in every direction in this country through processes of law, and there are many members of this House—I doubt not some from the gentleman's own State—who know that what I say is true in regard to the prosecution of cases by the Department of Justice. Now, I do not want to be drawn into a discussion of what is adequate or inadequate pay for the attorneys in the telephone case, but I will say that the fees already paid to gentlemen engaged in that suit are large—not to characterize them in any stronger language—and I hope most sincerely that the House will not increase this appropriation beyond the figure recommended by the committee. The committee do not think it likely that any other such cases as those which have been mentioned will occur again; and if they do I incline to the opinion that there ought to be fewer attorneys employed and an annual compensation fixed where there is a prospect that the litigation will continue a sufficient length of time to justify it.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, if the general policy of the Department of Justice were in issue here, I might enter upon a discussion on that subject with my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]; but that is not the issue before the House, and I do not propose to enter into its discussion at this time.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not wish to reflect unjustly upon the Department of Justice in connection with these prosecutions in various sections of the country, which ought never to have been entered upon; but I think the influence of the Department ought to be brought to bear upon these district attorneys and marshals who engage in these frivolous prosecutions.

Mr. McRAE. I would remind the gentleman from Pennsylvania that deputy marshals have no authority to arrest people who have not been indicted without a warrant, and that such writs can only be issued by commissioners appointed by the courts to which they are amenable. The Attorney-General has no control of commissioners. If the courts know of the evil complained of, they have the power to correct it by removing the present and appointing better commissioners.

Mr. OATES. The only complaints I have heard in my State are against some of the commissioners and deputy marshals, and I do not know whether they are true or not.

Mr. RANDALL. It may be that I do injustice to the district attorneys, but it does seem to me that in Alabama, Georgia, and other States as to which I have had occasion to make examination, many of these prosecutions have been altogether without justification.

Mr. OATES. I can only say as to the two district attorneys in my State that I am personally well acquainted with both of them; that they are upright, conscientious gentlemen, as well as men of ability, and I do not think either of them would do anything wrong.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] by striking out "forty" and inserting "fifty." I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that the Solicitor-General of the United States—a gentleman personally known to almost every member of this House, especially those on this side, he having formerly been a member here; a gentleman of the highest character and ability—is of the opinion that the sum of $50,000 is required for this service. He is charged with the duty of representing the United States in all contested cases and with the responsibility of employing such necessary assistance as he may think requisite. Although the Committee on Appropriations has reported only $10,000 for this service, I think that at least $50,000 has usually been expended for special counsel. The nature of the business intrusted to these special counsel is such as to require the very first talent in the country.

I call the attention of the committee to some of the suits which were pending during the last fiscal year, as recited in the annual report of the Attorney-General for 1887. I find many others: the case of The United States vs. The Sierra Lumber Company, in the northern district of California; the case of The United States vs. The Central Pacific Railroad Company; the suit to establish title to the Potomac Flats; the case of The United States vs. The Northern Pacific Railroad Company, the Montana Improvement Company, et al.; the case of The United States vs. The Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company; the Bell Telephone cases; the Election cases, as they were called in Missouri, and also in the western district of Texas; certain cases before United States commissioner at Las Cruces; the case in which the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians were concerned; the Fidelty Bank cases in Cincinnati; the case of The United States vs. The Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company and Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Mr. OATES. That was not only one case.

Mr. SPRINGER. No, there were a number of cases of that kind. Another of these cases is that of the United States against the Frontier Land and Cattle Company; another is the United States against the North Crow Land and Cattle Company.

These were cases pending during the last year, for which the Department of Justice deemed special counsel necessary; and the importance of the cases, together with the amounts involved, is such, it seems to me, as to justify, nay, require the employment of the very best counsel in the country to represent the United States. Such counsel can not be employed if the Committee of the Whole adheres to the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations and allows but $10,000 for this purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. You underrate the qualifications of the district attorneys, some of whom I know are as competent as any attorneys who could be employed.

Mr. SPRINGER. My friend underrates the Solicitor-General's ability and his knowledge of the needs of the service. I am satisfied that this gentleman, who is well known to all of us, has the interests of the United States at heart and desires that they shall be subserved in these matters. He would not sanction the expenditure of a single dollar unless the public interest required it. If there is one man in the public service who is more entitled to our confidence than another, it is Solicitor-General Jenks.

Mr. SOWDEN. I fully concur with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] in what he has to say about Solicitor-General Jenks. Nobody can say anything against his character.

Mr. SPRINGER. And nobody can say anything against it. Yet he is of opinion that $50,000 is required for this service, and I am inclined to take his recommendation on a question of this kind, even against that of the Appropriations Committee, although as a rule, and in almost every case, I have stood by that committee even against my own judgment, knowing that their judgment was better than mine. But in this case, to which I have paid some personal attention, I think the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] should be agreed to. I therefore ask permission to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] remarks, in connection with the pending proposition, although not in logical connection with it, that the expenditures of the Department of Justice have largely exceeded the expenditures of that Department for any previous year in our history, and furthermore, that the policy of that Department is one of great injustice and oppression to our own citizens.

Mr. RANDALL. I intended to make no charge against this Department of Justice, but only against the officials in that Department.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I do not see any difference as to whether it is the Department of Justice, as you stated, or its officials who compose it who are now charged with being guilty of oppression and injustice to our own citizens. That is the proposition of the gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL. That is my belief.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. You stated it and I have no doubt that is your belief. You do not mean to dispute that you stated it just as I have said. We understand each other.

When the gentleman from Pennsylvania brings in a statement of that character, and especially when it is in no wise germane to the proposition under consideration, I think it is proper that he should give us the particulars. I think we need to know how and why and where the Department of Justice of this Government is made a department of injustice to the citizens of this country. Let us know who is to blame. I do not believe in permitting a matter of that kind to go unchallenged or uninvestigated. I have no knowledge of such injustice or breaches of duty myself, but it seems the gentleman has, and if it exists it should not be permitted to go unrebuked, and I trust the gentleman will make good his serious charge against this administration if it be true, and also explain how and why expenditures in this Department have been increased. We want something more than mere charges. We want the facts.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN], who is generally here in his seat on the other side, and who seems to cover the whole of that side of the House, remarked——

A MEMBER. He is over here on the Democratic side of the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman from New Jersey remarked that the Attorney-General had something to do with bringing what is called the telephone suit.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman misrepresents me. What I stated was, that the suggestion that the Solicitor-General and not the Attorney-General was responsible for the institution of this suit was very cool and refreshing.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Which is the same thing.

Now, sir, that responsibility, no matter to whom the responsibility attaches, is an honorable responsibility. It is an honorable and dutiful responsibility.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Had not the gentleman better address his remarks to the gentleman from Alabama, and not to myself?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Not at all, sir, because the gentleman from Alabama did not make his remarks in the spirit that you did, nor did he state or imply a charge. The remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey were conceived and expressed in a spirit of fault-finding and as a carping critic. He does not have the impression that it is an honorable responsibility.

Now, as to the matter of fact, regardless of the spirit and purport of the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey. That statement has often been made, and it has nowhere been attempted to be proved that the Attorney-General had anything to do with the institution of the suit, and however much the gentleman from New Jersey may carp he will not now rise in his place and even attempt to prove that the Attorney-General had anything to do with the bringing of the suit.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am willing to concede, if the gentleman thinks it is necessary, that the Attorney-General has nothing to do with the running of the Department of Justice.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. He will say it because he is unwilling to do justice to any one under this Administration. He simply makes his insinuations, but he does not and he will not attempt to substantiate them, because he knows they are the mere vaporings of animosity, and that they can not be substantiated.

When we have suits of this character we know we need to guard against extravagant and unreasonable employment of special counsel.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I should like to have one minute more.

Mr. HOOKER. If the Chair will recognize me I will yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. One sentence in addition. Our side of the House has made charges in times past, and perhaps with some measure of injustice—for it is the tendency of those in politics to find fault with their opponents—charging the administration of the other party with excessive expenditures in these or similar cases; and while we need to guard against excessive expenditures, we know there is parsimony, unwisdom, and injustice in any policy that utterly defeats the ends of justice. We have this case on hand, and we should carefully measure what would be suitable private compensation in a case of similar interest and importance, and so long as the demands of the Government are not in excess of that rule we ought to grant it.

And that economy which withholds what is necessary for the employment of proper counsel for the Government and the people can be made one of the most fruitful means to defeat the ends of justice and to actually establish the supremacy of the rascalities and monopolies which we ought to be seeking to prevent and destroy.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will assume the pro forma amendment to be withdrawn,

Mr. OATES. I renew it.

Mr. Chairman, I purposely did not attempt to enter into any argument by way of reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania in regard to the general management of the Department of Justice, nor do I conceive that question to be involved in this discussion. I have not heard any complaint of it heretofore, and have not investigated so that I am sufficiently informed to give an opinion upon the question. I have had faith in the head of that Department, and have yet; and have not, therefore, investigated it.

I address myself to the point before the committee, the amount of the appropriation for assistants to district attorneys.

Now, sir, with reference to the employment of these assistants in the prosecution of the telephone suits, I have in my hand a copy of a letter furnished by Solicitor-General Jenks to Mr. RANDALL, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, which explains in detail all of the expenditures that have been made, how much money has been paid, and what contracts are still existing; and I desire to have it read at the Clerk's desk in my time. I invite the attention of the members of the committee to the reading of this letter, so that they will have full information from that officer, who seems disposed by his acts to economize as far as possible in the proper prosecution of this question.

I ask the Clerk to read the letter I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, March 8, 1888.

SIR: In answer to yours of the 28th of February, addressed to the Attorney-General, concerning the case of the United States vs. The American Bell Telephone Company and others, which is under my charge as Acting Attorney-General, and referring to House Document No. 153, with request that the Department "show when the employment of each of the counsel named therein began, the amount of money which has been paid to each up to date, and the amount to which each is entitled under the terms of his employment, from the beginning thereof up to this time," you are respectfully informed that the bringing of the suit to which your communication refers was recommended by the Secretary of the Interior after a preliminary hearing which, in his judgment, demanded the interposition of the Government to protect the people of the United States. It was brought after a careful examination of such facts as were accessible to the Government, and on consultation had between the Solicitor General and the counsel employed to assist the United States attorney in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of Ohio against the Bell Telephone Company and other parties, its supposed agents, process was issued and served. The case came on to be heard, and, after argument, the court dismissed the bill without prejudice for want of jurisdiction in that district. The counsel employed in that case to assist the United States attorney for that district, and the amounts paid to each, were as follows:

Hunton & Chandler, appointed February 1, 1886, at a compensation of $5,000 for services in that case and traveling expenses, in pursuance of which they were paid in full, including expenses	$5,309.10
C. S. Whitman, appointed February 1, 1886, at a compensation of $3,000 for that suit and actual and necessary traveling expenses, under which he was paid in full	3,162.40
G. P. Lowrey, New York, appointed February 4, 1886, at a compensation of $1,000 retainer, $75 per day for services actually rendered in New York, and $100 per day when employed elsewhere, and necessary traveling expenses, under which employment he was paid	11,898.60
Hon. A. G. Thurman, appointed February 19, 1886, at a retainer of $1,000 and such further compensation as might be determined, and was paid thereon	4,629.95
Hon. John Goode having on the 10th of August, 1886, retired from the office of Solicitor-General, and had, through the whole course of the litigation, charge of the case, which on or about the 20th of September following was fixed for final argument, was, on the 13th of August, 1886, employed at an annual compensation of $5,000 and traveling expenses, not to exceed $250 per year, under which he was paid in that case	2,485.60

These amounts comprise the full compensation, so far as I have any knowledge, in that case.

After the dismissal of the bill in the southern district of Ohio, the Bell Telephone Company being a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Massachusetts, a bill was filed in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Massachusetts, on which process was issued and served, and the cause was brought on to hearing, when, after argument, the court dismissed the bill, from which decree an appeal is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States. The bill was filed in the case last named on the 13th of January, 1887. The same counsel were employed as were concerned in the previous case, with the addition of W. C. Strawbridge, of Philadelphia, as follows:

G. P. Lowrey, appointed January 18, 1887, on the same terms as in previous case, except without additional retaining fee. He participated in the argument on final hearing in Boston. As the labor incumbent on him in preparation, except for final argument, was supplied largely by Mr. Strawbridge, his bill is probably confined to the actual preparation for and final argument. He has been paid nothing under this appointment. He has rendered his bill to the 14th of June, 1887. It aggregates	$911.20
This has not been paid. No bill has been rendered since that date, and I am not aware of any performance of services on his part after the date fixed in the bill last referred to.
Hon. A. G. Thurman was appointed on the 18th of January, 1887, on the same terms as his previous appointment. He participated in the argument on the final hearing in Boston, but has rendered no bill.
Hunton & Chandler were employed on the 18th of January, 1887, at a compensation of $5,000 for their entire services in this case, or any other which may hereafter be brought for the same purpose, $3,000 to be paid on or after July 1, 1887, the balance on the final determination of the suit or suits, with actual and necessary traveling expenses. They have been paid in full to date, including expenses	3,114.70
W. C. Strawbridge was employed on the 18th of January, 1887, at a compensation of $1,000 for all services in this suit or any which may be brought for the same purpose, and necessary expenses. He has been paid in full to date, including expenses, so far as rendered	1,283.64
Of this $90.91 was paid out of the appropriation for 1888, the balance out of that for 1887.
C. S. Whitman was employed January 18, 1887, at a compensation of $3,000 for services in this suit and any other which might be brought for the same purpose, and traveling expenses. He has been paid to date, on this appointment, out of the appropriation for 1887	1,582.50
Hon. John Goode was employed January 18, 1887, at a compensation of $5,000 per year, and necessary traveling expenses, not to exceed $250 per year, payable quarterly. He has been paid in full to the 18th of January, 1888	5,125.25
He resigned January 24, 1888. His account for the last six days, at the rate aforesaid, has not been presented or settled.

RECAPITULATION.

Total paid to G. P. Lowrey in both cases	11,808.60
Total paid to Hon. A. G. Thurman in both cases	4,629.95
Total paid to Hunton & Chandler in both cases	8,423.80
Total paid to C. S. Whitman in both cases	4,744.99
Total paid to Hon. John Goode in both cases	7,610.86
Total paid to W. C. Strawbridge	1,283.64
Total	38,591.74

The balance unpaid, as nearly as I can estimate, is:
To Hon. John Goode, six days, at the rate of $5,000 per year.
To G. P. Lowrey, as above stated, $911.20.
To Hon. A. G. Thurman, bill not rendered for services in cause at Boston.

It may be proper to state that the appointments of the several assistant attorneys in the case in Ohio, except the Hon. John Goode, were made by him as acting Attorney-General in charge of the case. His appointment in that case, as well as the appointments of all the assistant attorneys in the case in Massachusetts, were made by me as acting Attorney-General in charge of the cases.

Very respectfully,

G. A. JENKS,
Solicitor-General and Acting Attorney-General in this case.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

[During the reading of the foregoing the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCCREARY was recognized.

Mr. HOOKER. If I can be recognized, I will yield the time to the gentleman from Alabama to complete the reading of that communication.

Mr. MCCREARY. I will yield for that purpose with the understanding that I may next be recognized.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the letter as above.

Mr. MCCREARY rose.

Mr. RANDALL. I want five minutes——

Mr. MCCREARY. I believe it was understood that I was to be recognized next.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to suggest that debate close in five minutes?

Mr. RANDALL. No; but I want to be heard for five minutes on this proposition.

Mr. MCCREARY. For three days during the consideration of this bill I have voted with the Committee on Appropriations which framed it, but I believe the Committee on Appropriations is mistaken in the appropriation recommended in the paragraph under consideration. The bill provides:

For payment of assistants to United States district attorneys who are employed by the Attorney-General to aid district attorneys in special cases, $10,000.

Now, sir, in the light of the report which has just been read at the instance of the gentleman from Alabama showing that during the last year it was necessary to have about $38,000 in order to pay these necessary expenses, I am convinced that $10,000 is not enough. It has been the rule heretofore to make an appropriation for district attorneys and assistant district attorneys in the same paragraph, but at this time the Committee on Appropriations propose to make an appropriation for employment of attorneys in special cases in a separate paragraph and only allow $10,000. That sum is so insignificant, it is so utterly inadequate, that the Attorney-General will be unable to employ such assistant attorneys in important cases as are certain to be needed. The Attorney-General was compelled to employ assistants last year in many important cases.

I hold in my hand the annual report of the Attorney-General for the year 1887, and it appears that during the last year there were forty-six cases in which the Attorney-General deemed it to be his duty to employ special assistants. It is known to all that the best lawyers in this land are employed to prosecute claims against the United States Government. If we expect to maintain the dignity of the United States, if we expect that the business of the United States shall in every case be properly understood and properly attended to, then we must employ lawyers of the highest order of legal talent to meet the first-class lawyers employed to prosecute suits against the Government. Therefore I say that if we appropriate anything at all it should be more than the sum provided in the bill.

There were forty-six cases last year in which the Government was a party, and in which special counsel or assistants to the district attorneys were employed, cases distributed amongst the States and Territories as follows: In Alabama, California, Colorado, Dakota, District of Columbia, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, New Mexico, North Carolina, Ohio, Texas, Utah, Virginia, Washington, and Wyoming. The business extended, it will be seen, to almost every part of our vast country. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES]. I believe we should appropriate $40,000. I believe that is the proper amount to appropriate, and it is about what was expended the past year, and I do not believe it is too large now. If it is not needed it will not be expended.

Mr. Chairman, I have confidence in the Solicitor-General of the United States. Mr. Jenks is not only one of the ablest lawyers we have, but he stands out conspicuously before this country for honesty, energy, and fidelity to duty. He believes that we should appropriate more than the sum suggested by the committee. I have confidence in the Attorney-General of the United States. I do not believe we have had a more faithful, efficient, or able Attorney-General at any time in the history of our Republic than the distinguished and worthy Attorney-General now in office. I am willing, therefore, to intrust to the Attorney-General, or to the Solicitor-General when necessary, the employment of assistants when they are required. They will only use the amount of money that is necessary in such cases. If you should appropriate too much they will only expend what is necessary, and the residue will be left to be used as needed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] a moment ago seemed to criticise my statement as to the expenses of the Department of Justice during the current year having been in excess by about $350,000 of those in former years. I have a table here, which accompanies the urgent deficiency report, showing the expenditures for the Department of Justice and its courts since 1878. The largest amount I am able to find in any other year is $3,385,000, while the expenditures for the current year 1888 were $3,574,400. There is a deficiency of $150,000, making the total of $3,724,400. When the appropriation is expended and the deficiency is given it will cost the Government of the United States about $350,000 in excess of any former year.

Now, as to the next point, whether any citizens are improperly arrested, detained, and harassed at home or elsewhere. I want to direct the gentleman's attention to the report of the Committee on Appropriations prepared by General BURNES, of Missouri, and to a paragraph of that report which went undisputed, and was emphasized on this floor by the gentleman himself. I will ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

But the most painful and deplorable part of this subject has relation to the wrongs and outrages perpetrated, under the forms of law, upon poor and oftimes ignorant men by deputy United States marshals and others, because of some mere technical or imaginary petty misdemeanor, in order that a color of right may appear for retaining money of the United States for extraordinary expenses of witnesses and others. If the prodigal waste under this head were only the loss of money to the United States the injury would be inconsiderable as compared with the personal wrongs upon individual citizens perpetrated merely as a basis for large expenditures. The system now, and for years existing, pays a premium for cupidity and encourages assaults upon the body of the people.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, in addition, I have derived information from statements of members on this floor from Georgia, from Tennessee, from Alabama, and from other States.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. And from North Carolina.

Mr. RANDALL. And my colleague on the left also says Pennsylvania. I am not so familiar with prosecutions in that State as he is. This very day a member from North Carolina has appealed to me to permit an amendment to this bill which will go to prevent what I have characterized as great injustice.

Mr. OATES. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if all this complaint, which I have no doubt is very much exaggerated——

Mr. RANDALL. It may be, but still I hear it.

Mr. OATES. Does it not arise from the vicious system of perquisites?

Mr. RANDALL. I believe it does. I am not saying how it arises. I am saying it exists.

Mr. OATES. I think it exists only to a limited extent.

Mr. RANDALL. I think, myself, a good deal of it is done by commissioners and deputy marshals who thereby get fees. It is a fact that has come to my knowledge that these very officials have been rebuked by the judges of the courts wherein they acted. I can establish that fact beyond controversy. I sometimes feel it a duty to speak out. I prefer always to speak out myself against those of my own party who do not do quite right, rather than permit the opposition to call attention to such things and thereby secure some possible political advantage.

Mr. MCRAE. You say these prosecutions are instigated by commissioners who are rebuked by the court. Why does not the court remove them? They are appointed by the court.

Mr. RANDALL. I can bring a reliable gentleman, a member of this House, to say that judges of the United States courts have from the bench rebuked these officers. I take it the officers are deputy marshals who employ people to swear out warrants before the commissioners.

Mr. MCRAE. The point I want to call attention to is that the commissioners are appointed by the court, and the court has power to remove the commissioners, if not the power to remove the deputy marshals.

Mr. RANDALL. The commissioners are appointed by the circuit judges, and these prosecutions, I think, are mostly under district judges.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the present amendment is exhausted. The Chair understands the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I renew the pro forma amendment. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama will be voted down. I have here a statement which I received from the Treasury Department, and desire to have it read in order to show that $40,625.07 was paid to these special attorneys, leaving only a balance due Grosvenor P. Lowrey of $911.20.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 8, 1888.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 3d inst., asking for a detailed statement of the accounts, rendered and approved by the Attorney-General, of the attorneys employed by the Government in the prosecution of the suit for the invalidation of the Bell Telephone patent, and the amounts paid thereon, I have the honor to inclose herewith copy of letter of the First Comptroller of the 7th instant, and statement therewith submitted.

Respectfully yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD,
Secretary Treasury.

Hon. W. H. SOWDEN,
House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 7, 1888.

SIR: The letter of Hon. W. H. SOWDEN to you of February 3, asking for a detailed statement of the accounts, rendered and approved by the Attorney-General, of the attorneys employed by the Government in the prosecution of the suit for the invalidation of the Bell Telephone patent, and the amounts paid thereon, which you referred to me on the 4th instant for report, has been examined.

I have the honor to transmit herewith a summary of said accounts. If the particular items entering into any or all of these accounts should be required, the same will be prepared in this office; but the above is supposed to be all that will be necessary under the call made in the letter.

The letter of Mr. SOWDEN is herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

M. J. DURHAM, Comptroller.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Grosvenor P. Lowrey	911.20
Total amount paid to date	40,625.03

Mr. SOWDEN. This statement clearly exhibits the fact that $40,625.03 has already been paid to these special attorneys, and that there is a balance of $911.20 still due to Mr. Lowrey. Now I want to know from the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] why he proposes to increase the amount already provided for in the appropriation bill under consideration? Why make it $40,000? Who are the special attorneys that are still unpaid, either in this particular case or any other? Have they not all been provided for in previous appropriation bills? Did not the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] say that their services have been substantially dispensed with, and that they are no longer engaged in the service of the Government? From the letter of the Solicitor-General I infer that Mr. Lowrey is entitled to receive no other money than this balance of $911.20.

Mr. OATES. This is not a deficiency bill, and we are not discussing what has been paid in the past.

Mr. SOWDEN. No, sir; we are discussing what is due these attorneys.

Mr. OATES. Not at all. This appropriation is not intended to pay what may now be due to anybody.

Mr. SOWDEN. Oh! then this is to provide for future instances of this character.

Mr. OATES. I do not know whether of this character or of what character. This appropriation is to be used at the discretion of the Attorney-General.

Mr. SOWDEN. And the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] approves of the expenditure of money in this direction without limit.

Mr. OATES. Without limit?

Mr. SOWDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. I have confidence in Solicitor Jenks, in his integrity and his economy.

Mr. SOWDEN. So have I. I have as great faith in the integrity of the Solicitor-General as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] can have. There is no more able, honorable, and conscientious official in the public service than Solicitor-General Jenks. And I would not say an unkind word of the Attorney-General. He is one of the ablest officials that ever held the high and responsible office which he so acceptably fills. My object is simply to call the attention of this House, and particularly this side of it, to the enormously large fees charged by Mr. Lowrey and the other special attorneys in the public service, with a view of correcting the evil, if possible, and cutting down these needlessly extravagant expenditures.

Mr. OATES. Further expenditure in this direction is entirely in his discretion, but I want enough money appropriated so that he may not be cramped for want of means for the employment of counsel to prosecute these suits if he thinks it is best for the Government that assistant counsel should be employed.

Mr. RANDALL. Unless some one else wishes to take the floor, I shall ask unanimous consent to limit debate on this paragraph.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to say a word.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want one minute.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I wish to occupy not to exceed five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent that debate upon the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to fifteen minutes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I simply want to state that the abuses which formerly existed in the administration of justice in the southern district of Illinois have been greatly lessened, if not entirely abated, and that while under a previous administration the expenses of the United States courts there aggregated over $80,000 a year, for the last year those expenses have amounted to only $56,000, showing that the frivolous prosecutions to which reference has been made——

Mr. RANDALL. I did not refer to Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. You referred generally to such prosecutions, and I say these figures show that in that State, at least, such prosecutions are no longer instituted, but that justice is administered there for the sake of justice by an honest Democrat.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman will remember that when those matters were brought to public attention under a former administration, I took care to characterize them in fitting terms.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is true. I simply wanted to congratulate the country upon the fact that in the State of Illinois, at least, the abuses which formerly existed have been remedied.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] in commenting further upon his charge that this Administration, through the Department of Justice, is acting with hardship and injustice toward the people of this country, goes now into a dissertation upon the system of internal-revenue taxation.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not recollect that I alluded to internal taxation.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I thought the gentleman was alluding altogether to the question of collecting the spirit tax.

Mr. RANDALL. I alluded to the administration of the law in relation to all taxes, but the gentleman may proceed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Was the gentleman speaking of the laws relating to customs taxes?

Mr. RANDALL. Go on.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I understood no such reference, but I accept both. Now, sir, the gentleman has spoken of calling attention to the faults of our party and the faults of our Administration, and first without limit, but even now the gentleman has not intimated that harsh and unnecessary procedures have not been limited and reduced under this Administration.

I maintain that we have far fewer complaints, just and unjust, under this Administration than we have had heretofore in regard to the execution of the revenue laws; for the people who pay the taxes have learned to know that a consistent, uniform, and maintained policy will be followed.

Sir, there is harshness in connection with the collection of all taxes laid upon consumption, and indeed in the collection of taxes of every character. In reference to our customs taxation, those who seek to do illegal acts, those who correspond to the people who, under the internal-revenue laws, sell without license or engage in illicit distilling—those who are known as smugglers—feel the hand of the law upon them, and have reason, like other violators of the law, to cry out with pain.

And, sir, good citizens will sometimes fall under suspicion in a rigid and faithful enforcement of the revenue laws, either in the interior or at the ports. We know that there are complaints of the searching of private baggage; and even the ladies who are passengers upon our ocean steamers are sometimes compelled to submit to the search of their persons by female officials of the Government in order that there may be no evasion of the customs duties. There must be travel. Can anything be more inquisitorial than this? But where is the case of undue injustice anywhere? It was charged. It is not cited.

I hold, sir, that whatever may be the occasion of an increase of expenditures, it has yet to be pointed out that this arises from any improper cause; and indeed the cause and occasion, whatever it may be, has not yet been stated, as I trust it will be.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is certainly familiar with the occasions of the expenditures in these branches of the service, where, he says, there has been an increase in expenditure. Before the incoming of the present Administration we made this country ring from one end to the other with the cry that the rascals were permitted to go unwhipped of justice; but, sir, when now we have been fairer with honest men and harsher with rascals, we find that we do not stop complaints, not even within the limits of our own party. Yet, too, when we have a summary of these attorneys employed as assistant counsel, far fewer in the total than under previous administrations were employed in cases of no greater magnitude, smaller also in the total of fees than were perhaps single fees in similar cases before, we have complaints without evidence, and we have what I call a pseudo-economy, which says that we must stop the necessary employment of talent and ability and let those whom we have said were the rascals of this country go unwhipped of justice, to violate the law and maraud upon public interests. I will not say this is the purpose. I do say it is the effect.

I trust the gentleman will not continue to ignore part of his charge, and to shift from officials to system the other, but will point out where these increases are, and will show the House where there has been any additional or failure to lessen the hardship, friction, or oppression in the execution of the revenue laws, either in the interior or at the ports. I know that no one will be able to show that there has been any relaxation of that fair, even balance and undeviating justice which ought to characterize the administration of the laws of our country.

[Mr. OATES withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto is exhausted.

The question recurred on Mr. OATES's amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 48.

Mr. OATES. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Mr. FORNEY and Mr. OATES as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 37, noes 83.

Mr. OATES. I am satisfied no quorum is present, and will therefore withdraw my point of no quorum.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCREARY. I move to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty."

I have so much confidence in the recommendation of the Attorney-General——

Mr. RANDALL. Debate is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 53.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SOWDEN. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fees of United States commissioners and justices of the peace acting as United States commissioners, $100,000. And no part of any money appropriated by this act shall be used to pay any fees to United States commissioners, marshals, or clerks for any warrant issued or arrest made, or other fees in prosecutions under the internal-revenue laws, unless the prosecution has been approved, either before or after such arrest, by the attorney of the United States in the district where the offense is alleged to have been committed or the prosecution is by indictment.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 18, after the words "has been," the following:

"Commenced upon a sworn complaint setting forth the facts constituting the offense, and alleging them to be within the personal knowledge of affiant, or upon sworn complaint of the collector or deputy collector of internal revenue, setting forth the facts upon information and belief, and."

Mr. RANDALL. Is not that a change of the law?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. No; I think it is not a change of the law, but, on the contrary, is in harmony with the law which we have passed at this session.

Mr. RYAN. I make the point of order against it.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. It is in harmony with what has been enacted in legislation during this Congress. The object is to prevent frivolous prosecutions. It has been the practice to allow officers to issue warrants on affidavits setting forth the facts to be on information and belief. Whether malicious or otherwise, the result has been the accumulation of these prosecutions, greatly to the annoyance of the citizens. In one case, I am informed, more than thirty warrants were issued, which, upon investigation, resulted in only five being bound over to court.

Now, this is only a sample of the frivolous prosecutions that are inaugurated by officials simply for the purpose of getting fees. They are paid their fees, it must be understood, whether the prosecution is well founded or not; hence there is a constant temptation for them, in order to earn improper fees, to institute proceedings against people; and what we ask is to make them swear to these facts of their own personal knowledge or have their informant do so.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that that practice is being continued now?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I understand that to be the practice. In some places it is undoubtedly the practice on the part of these United States officers, supported by the Federal authorities.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I only wanted to know whether it was the case now or not.

Mr. RYAN. I insist upon the point of order. This changes existing law and is entirely new legislation. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that if that provision were to become a law there could be no complaints, if I understand it correctly, made against a wrong-doer, except by one who had personal knowledge of the fact.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Mr. RYAN. Personal knowledge of the facts?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Of the facts, of course.

Mr. RYAN. And it would simply be to allow criminals to go unwhipped of justice.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. No, sir; just let me say to the gentleman, if the Chair will permit me a moment, that you can arrest persons charged with a violation of the law now upon information when the prosecution is instituted by a deputy collector, a collector, or revenue agent. My object is to prevent the deputy marshals or others from instituting suits for the purpose merely of getting the fees.

And, by the way, I take this position: The gentleman from Kansas says that the point of order he makes against my amendment is because it is a change of existing law. But the very clause itself which the committee have put into this bill is new legislation, and the point of order not having been made against that, I have a right to offer an amendment which is germane to that provision.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. And the point of order can not lie against my amendment, since it was not made upon this clause of the bill which changes the existing law.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is true. The gentleman is correct in that respect. If the point of order had been made in regard to the clause, from lines 12 to 21, it would have been good, but not having been made against the clause, and it having been admitted to consideration by the committee, it is proper to move any amendment which is germane to it. We are dealing with changes in existing law.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. And the point of order therefore came too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think the amendment changes existing law.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, it has been the practice ever since the organization of the Government that officers or others might make complaint upon information or belief before commissioners or other officers having jurisdiction of the crime alleged. This proposes to change that entire practice, to change the law now so that if an officer is informed by a good and respectable man, or men, of the existence of an offense or crime he can not go before a justice of the peace or a commissioner and make complaint upon information and belief. I think it is a dangerous innovation, and one that should not be adopted.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. In response to what the gentleman from Kansas says, it is necessary, too, that some provision should be made to protect the people from the unjust demands which are made by these Government officers and others for the purpose of securing their fees.

Mr. COWLES. The deputy collector, under existing law, is the only one who has a right to institute proceedings, as I understand the law now, and this amendment does not affect that right, but only requires an affidavit as to the facts alleged.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the proposed amendment be read again.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. The officers have the right to make the complaint.

Mr. RYAN. Ah, the revenue agents; but the marshals can not, under your amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. No, sir; and they ought not to be allowed to do so. I want to keep the deputy marshals from doing that and harassing the citizens, and making frivolous complaints simply for the purpose of getting their fees; but let those from whom they obtain the information make the affidavits on their own personal knowledge.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does the gentleman refer to the deputy marshals?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Yes, sir; and not only now, but under your administration they pursued the same policy.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Well, I only wanted to know what officers the gentleman alluded to; and he need not get excited about it.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I am not excited; but I was only referring the gentleman to the fact that this is an abuse that is not of recent growth. It is an old thing.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Because I understood the gentleman to say awhile ago, and to that I addressed my inquiry, that the deputy marshals of the United States were now pursuing that practice.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Yes, sir, they are the ones who probably profit most by this practice, and I want to prohibit that; and also to break up the habit of other persons who obtain a part of these fees from being permitted to pursue that practice further.

Mr. COWLES. People who want to be witnesses and draw their per diem.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I supposed that the deputy marshals at present would not do such a thing.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I ask a vote on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 44, noes 43.

Mr. RYAN. No quorum. I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. RYAN, and Mr. JOHNSTON of North Carolina, were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 43.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I offer the amendment I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 93, line 19, after the word "by," insert "the circuit or district judge or."

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. BUCHANAN. No point of order lies.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to hear you.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then reserve the point.

Mr. RANDALL. I will.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is all right. Let the point of order be reserved.

Mr. Chairman, as the paragraph stood in the bill originally it seemed to me it was as favorable to violators of the internal-revenue laws as any legislation by this House could be. An amendment has been adopted which makes it still more difficult to arrest such violators. It may be that substantial abuses exist. It may be it is not within the power of the Department of Justice to regulate by effective action those abuses. I have nothing to say in criticism of the amendment which has just been adopted. But as the provision now stands thus amended it is almost impossible to secure a warrant for the arrest of a real offender. Not only must the facts be sworn to of personal knowledge, but the prosecution must be approved of by the attorney of the United States. Now, I propose to go one step further, which will not injure innocent persons in the least, and ask that that approval may be either by the attorney or a circuit or district judge of the United States. It might be necessary to issue this warrant in a moment's notice. The judge might be near by and the district attorney absent.

Mr. RANDALL. I accept that amendment, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I simply want to add that I do not think the criminals of this country have all the rights.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before we pass from the subject of United States district attorneys I wish to offer an amendment to line 2, page 93. I understood that leave was given to return to that point.

Mr. RANDALL. I will reserve the point of order on the amendment until I hear it read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add after line 2, page 93:

"In all proceedings or cases, civil and criminal, including prize cases, where fees or compensation of any kind are now taxed against and paid by the United States for services of district attorneys or their assistants, and in all such proceedings or cases where services are performed by United States attorneys or their assistants in behalf of the United States, and the costs are taxed against and paid by other parties than the United States, all such fees and compensation for such services shall be included in their emolument returns, and all such fees as may be in excess of the amount of compensation now allowed by law shall be covered into the Treasury."

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order on that amendment. I want to get this bill through, and I know that an amendment of that character will occasion great delay in the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is the substance of what was moved by the gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from Indiana, but we could not agree upon the language at that time. I have now prepared this, and I hope the Clerk will read it again for the information of the committee.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, that is clearly subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLANCHARD). The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. BYNUM. The law already provides what fees district attorneys are entitled to. The question is covered by sections 833 and 834 of the Revised Statutes, with the exception of two statutory provisions, which allow these officers certain fees which are not included in the fees and emoluments returned. Section 825 provides—

That there shall be taxed and paid to every district attorney 2 per cent. upon all moneys collected or realized in any suit or proceeding arising under the revenue laws and conducted by him, in which the United States is a party; which shall be in lieu of all costs and fees in such proceeding.

Section 827 provides—

That when a district attorney appears by direction of the Secretary or Solicitor of the Treasury on behalf of any officer of the revenue in any suit against such officer for any act done by him, etc., he shall be allowed such compensation as may be certified to by the court, and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, etc.

Now, this amendment would clearly make a change in these statutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this point. The law intended originally that the district attorney should receive a compensation not exceeding $6,000 a year. Five hundred dollars of it is paid in salary, and the remainder, so far as the fees of the office go, is paid in fees earned by him; and, notwithstanding the allowance of 2 per cent. in those revenue cases, the law provides that when the maximum of the district attorney is reached the balance shall be covered into the Treasury. It was the intention of the law that all fees and emoluments in excess of $6,000 a year should be covered into the Treasury, and this amendment simply provides that that original intention of the law shall be carried out. If the aggregate emolument exceeds that amount, it must be put in the emolument return to show what it was, and the excess above $6,000 must be covered into the Treasury. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] will not raise the point of order on this amendment, because it is simply carrying out the intention of the law at the time the compensation of these officials was fixed, and I have no doubt the gentleman will concede that $6,000 a year is enough.

Mr. RYAN. I ask to have the amendment read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I contend that this amendment is in accordance with the law. I hold that that is the law now, but it has been construed differently by the Department, or rather, not by the Department, but by the attorneys in various localities who have refused to make returns of different kinds of fees which have been earned, and the Department has no official knowledge whatever of the amounts which they have received in that way. This amendment simply requires the district attorney to comply with the law.

Mr. RYAN. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois whether his amendment embraces all fees, allowances, and all other compensations to United States attorneys.

Mr. SPRINGER. It embraces everything that they earn.

Mr. RYAN. And provides that all those items shall be included in the emolument returns?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. RYAN. And shall go to make up the maximum of $6,000?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; and that all in excess of that amount shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to make any further argument, but simply to call the attention of the Chair to the statute. Here is what is required by law to be returned as fees and emoluments, and the Chair will see that the statute especially excludes the fees mentioned in two sections of the statute I read. Section 833 provides that—

Every district attorney, clerk of a district court, clerk of a circuit court, and marshal shall, on the 1st day of January and July of each year, or within thirty days thereafter, make to the Attorney-General in such form as he may prescribe a written return for the one-half year ending on said days, respectively, of all the fees and emoluments of his office, including necessary clerk-hire, together with the vouchers for the payment of the same for such last half year.

Then section 834 provides that—

The preceding section shall not apply to fees and compensation allowed to district attorneys by sections 825 and 827 of the Revised Statutes.

Now the gentleman's amendment proposes to bring in the fees which are covered by sections 825 and 827 of the statute, and to make them a part of the fees and emoluments which district attorneys must include in their accounts.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do you object to that?

Mr. BYNUM. I raise the point of order that it changes existing law.

Mr. OATES. The point of order may be well taken, but does not the gentleman think this a proper provision?

Mr. BYNUM. I do not think this a proper place to legislate on such a subject. It is dangerous to amend the law in this hasty way.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am very sorry that this point of order has been made by a gentleman on this side of the House. I think my friend from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] has stopped a very great reform.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of United States prisoners, including necessary clothing and medical aid, and transportation to place of conviction, and including support of prisoners becoming insane during imprisonment and continuing insane after expiration of sentence, who have no friends to whom they can be sent, $330,000.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I move to amend by adding to the paragraph just read the following:

Provided further, That the accounting officers of the Treasury shall audit, adjust, and settle the accounts of jailors for the support of United States prisoners within sixty days after the same are presented for allowance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of bailiffs and criers, not exceeding three bailiffs and one crier in each court, except when specially authorized by the Attorney-General; of expenses of district judges directed to hold court outside of their districts; of meals for jurors in United States cases when ordered by court; of compensation for jury commissioners, $5 per day, not exceeding three days for any one term of court, $135,600.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I make a point of order on the first part of this paragraph. I submit that this reduction in the number of bailiffs is subject to the point of order, as it changes existing legislation. Section 715 of the Revised Statutes provides that—

The circuit and district courts may appoint criers for their courts, to be allowed the sum of $2 per day; and the marshal may appoint such a number of persons, not exceeding five, as the judges of their respective courts may determine, to attend upon the grand and other juries, etc.

In the southern district of New York United States courts are held as a rule every day in the year, excepting Sundays, Christmas, New Year's Day, the 22d of February, and the 4th of July, and sometimes four courts are running simultaneously. In these circumstances it would be utterly impossible for the marshal to get along with fewer bailiffs than he now employs.

This reduction, I understand, is not asked for by the Department of Justice, which has supervisory jurisdiction of all the United States courts.

So great is the business transacted in the United States courts of the southern district of New York that the Government is often required to call in a judge from another district, as Judge Shipman has often been called, to hold court.

My point of order, Mr. Chairman, is against that portion of this paragraph which proposes to provide for only three bailiffs, when the existing law to which I have referred, in section 715 of the Revised Statutes, authorizes five.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCMILLIN). Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. I do. The point of order is made, as I understand, that this paragraph changes existing law. I admit that it does so in this respect: The existing statutes provide that the United States marshals shall appoint these bailiffs, subject to the approval of the court. It will be observed that the language of the law is, "not exceeding five," clearly indicating that in some cases five will not be required. The language to which the point of order may properly apply, "except when specially authorized by the Attorney-General," and in fact the language of the whole paragraph, was inserted in the bill at the instance of the Department of Justice, which, through one of its officials, appeared before the Committee on Appropriations. I think I repeat his language when I say that there has existed in connection with this branch of the service the grossest abuse; that five bailiffs are needed in but few United States courts; and he felt it his duty to inform the committee that three were sufficient in almost any court. But if in any city more than three bailiffs are required, that contingency is provided for by the clause giving the Attorney-General discretion to allow five.

In many cases these bailiffs are nothing more nor less than body servants to the judges; and in almost any court three bailiffs are sufficient. If the point of order be insisted upon, I shall have to consent that the words "except when specially authorized by the Attorney-General" be struck out. Then the limitation as to the employment of only three bailiffs will stand without any possible exception.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that as the paragraph now stands, the point of order is well taken.

Mr. RANDALL. I consent that the language to which I have referred be struck out. Then this appropriation will contain an absolute limitation of the number of bailiffs to three.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. In reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I wish to say it is very evident that if the Attorney-General sent any assistant to appear before the Committee on Appropriations on this subject, the official who appeared there did not know what he was talking about when he said that more bailiffs are employed than are necessary to perform the duties.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman who appeared before us, Mr. Hodges, is one of the most intelligent officers of that Department.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. He may be intelligent out in Kentucky or Pennsylvania, but he would not suit for New York City. [Laughter.] We know what we want in New York. We ask to be let alone. We want "home rule."

As to the necessity for these officers, I wish to say that there is not sufficient assistance at present in the United States courts in our city for the accommodation of the people who have occasion to do business there. I believe I understand the wants of those courts; and I have the authority of the United States marshal, General McMahon, for the statement that he has not sufficient assistance to keep the courts running in a proper manner for the accommodation of the public business. I do not care what may be the case in other parts of the country; I am here to defend the interests of New York City.

Mr. RANDALL. It is very evident that the point of order which the gentleman has made will deprive New York City of the relief which it would have had under the terms of the provision as reported.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I prefer to have New York as it stands than to submit my case to any Attorney-General. [Applause.] I stand on the law, and I want it to remain as it is; I do not want to subject it to the caprice of anybody. There is the law, and I want the law obeyed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. RANDALL. I take out those words which have been objected to.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I want to strike out "three" and insert "five."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have an amendment which I think will promote harmony. I ask leave to insert the words which I send up to the Clerk's desk in place of those which have been stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes now to strike out the obnoxious portion of the paragraph. Notwithstanding the law authorizes the employment of a certain number of bailiffs, the gentleman thinks it is competent for the Committee on Appropriations to make an appropriation for such number only as they may think proper.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let me propose an amendment, which I think if accepted will get us out of the present trouble.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "court" insert "except in the southern district of New York or."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I offer this to get out of the trouble.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from New York will now see that the words which have been stricken out are the words which he ought to have retained. I always like to accommodate the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Yes; and I have always been in favor of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. He is a gentleman for whom I have always had the highest regard.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN'S amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For stenographic clerk for the Chief Justice and for each associate justice of the Supreme Court, at a sum not exceeding $1,600 each, $14,400.

For payment of such miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized by the Attorney-General, including the employment of janitors and watchmen in rooms or buildings rented for the use of courts, and of interpreters, experts, and stenographers; of furnishing and collecting evidence where the United States is or may be a party in interest, and moving of records, $140,000.

Mr. OATES. I move move to strike out "40" and insert "75;" so the appropriation will be $175,000 instead of $140,000. The Committee on Appropriations recommend $140,000. The amount estimated by the Department of Justice included the preceding proposition for $14,400. The appropriation of $14,400 for stenographers to judges of the Supreme Court being embraced in a separate paragraph would leave the amount to be covered by this paragraph $200,000. The Committee on Appropriations have recommended only $140,000. It seems to me that amount is too small, and I therefore move to amend by making it $175,000, $25,000 less than the amount estimated by the Department.

Mr. RANDALL. This is an increase of $50,000. Mr. Hodges, of the Department of Justice, appeared before the Committee and stated the amount provided was enough.

Mr. OATES. Does the gentleman say that the Department is satisfied with this appropriation?

Mr. RANDALL. That is what we judged from what they said. The gentleman will notice that the estimate for bailiffs and criers was $85,600. We have added $50,000 to that, which we are informed it was desirable to have, so they might be able to get their pay without being incumbered by other matters.

Mr. OATES. Do I understand the gentleman to state that this is substantially what the Department desires?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, we understand it to be satisfactory.

Mr. OATES. Then I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows.

UNDER LEGISLATIVE.

Botanical Garden:

For extension and repairs to heating apparatus; for new sash to rotunda of conservatory, paint and reglaze conservatory and various hot-houses, and general repairs to buildings and walks, including granolithic pavement on First street, leading to Botanic Garden to Capitol, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, $4,000.

Mr. CRISP. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 8, page 95, insert:

"For allowance to contestants and contestees in full for expenses incurred by them in contested-election cases: J. B. Morgan, $701; G. H. Thoebe, $2,000; J. B. White, $2,000; W. O. Arnold, $750; F. M. Simmons, $720; William Vandever, $2,000; N. E. Worthington, $2,000; A. C. Davidson, $2,000; J. V. McDuffy, $2,000; J. D. Lynch, $2,000; P. S. Post, $2,000; Robert Smalls, $2,000; J. G. Carlisle, $1,207.19; William Elliott, $2,000; in all $23,430.19."

Mr. RANDALL. This paragraph has always appeared heretofore on the deficiency bill.

Mr. CRISP. The only objection to putting it there is the uncertainty of that bill and the certainty as to this. It would seem to me to be entirely proper here, and that it belongs to this bill of right. It is in no sense a deficiency; it is a provision of law.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not a deficiency, but then it is not an expenditure for 1889 either.

Mr. CRISP. But it is one of the expenses, it seems to me, which should properly go upon the sundry civil bill. I suppose the gentleman will have no objection to its going on this bill. Do I understand the gentleman to object?

Mr. RANDALL. I have no power to object that I know of.

Mr. CRISP. Then I ask the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. ROWELL. I offer the further amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After "P. S. Post," strike out "$2,000" and insert "$7,668.40."

Mr. RANDALL. That is subject to the point of order, of course.

Mr. CRISP. And I raise the point of order upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRISP. The point of order is that it is wholly——

Mr. ROWELL. Will the gentleman withhold the point of order for a moment and allow a statement?

Mr. CRISP. I have no objection to that.

Mr. ROWELL. Under the law, I admit, Mr. Chairman, that we are limited to the expense of $2,000 in each of these cases, unless Congress in the act making the appropriation shall see proper to exceed that sum by making a special exception.

Now, this case illustrates the necessity of an exception. The legal, notarial, and office charges, in exact accordance with the law in this case, amounted to $1,155.70. The legal constable's fees, charged up in exact accordance with the law, amounted to $501.55. For witness fees, ascertained exactly in the same manner, and paid in accordance with the law, $656.10 were paid. The record evidence, cost of copying, $194.65; printing the brief, $266.75; making a total of $2,774.75 of fees provided by statute where this evidence was taken, and required to be paid by the law; with other expenses not included in preparing and taking evidence, exclusive of attorneys' fees, of $823.65, making an expense on the part of this contestant, exclusive of attorneys' fees, of $3,598.40. This does not include a single dollar of the attorneys' fees. The attorneys were engaged in taking testimony for three hundred and twenty-nine days, engaged at the same time in four different counties, and sometimes in two or three different places, preparing an argument, without preparing the answer, without arguing the case before the committee. I repeat, they were employed for three hundred and twenty-nine days, for which a payment was made of $3,144, or less than $10 per day. For the preparation of the brief, which is a very elaborate and very comprehensive document, the charge was only $375, whereas the ordinary charge of attorneys of this city in such cases would not be less than $1,000, and for arguing the case before the Committee on Elections the charge was only $250. All these aggregate the sum which I have proposed in the amendment, and which was actually expended in the case.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that the law is explicit on this subject, and of course makes this subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CRISP. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of being heard for a moment. The Committee on Elections of which my friend from Illinois is a member, in passing upon these accounts for expenses, felt themselves bound by the existing law. I do not mean to be understood by that to say that it is not in the power of this Congress to repeal that law pro tanto, if you please, by making the allowance in excess of $2,000; but I do mean to say that it is not in the power of this House to do it upon an appropriation bill when the point of order is made that this provision is a change of the existing law.

Now as to why the law was passed it is perhaps unnecessary to say anything. I understand, however, that the expense accounts rendered have been increasing from year to year, for inasmuch as it was understood that the United States was to pay the bill, no special effort at economy was used, no formal contract with lawyers was made, but there was that kind of liberality employed which we all perhaps feel more or less when somebody else is required to foot the bill.

Mr. ROWELL. But in this particular case you will admit the fees were particularly low.

Mr. CRISP. I frankly admit that there are many cases where this law operates as a hardship. I am only mentioning the reasons that prompted Congress to make the law. We felt bound by it. I have no doubt the gentleman is largely a loser financially. I have no doubt that other gentlemen who have had contests have been losers; but I think the committee were unanimous in the opinion that we were bound to carry out this law. There is a specific provision of the Revised Statutes that in no case shall more than $2,000 be allowed.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to further debate.

Mr. CRISP. In this case we allowed the full amount the law permitted us to allow. Mr. Chairman, I now withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment. I see there is a provision in the bill in my name for $2,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be entertained, if in order.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Can I be heard?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, if you offer an amendment.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I move to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$5,500."

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I wish to be heard.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to address the Chair on the point of order?

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Yes, sir; I do. I wish to state to the Chair that this point of order will not hold good as against my proposition. The chairman of the Committee on Elections, with all due respect to him, has misconstrued the situation of this case from beginning to end. I do not stand here as a contestee in this case, nor do I recognize the gentleman that pretended to dispute my seat as a contestant. I take the ground that I was duly elected a member of this House without the slightest tinge of fraud. There was not a particle of fraud in my case.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman is not speaking on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I was showing that the point of order against me does not apply. I am not a contestee and I was annoyed by a man who was not a contestant, but a deliberate pirate who attempted to steal my seat. He had no right to it whatever. The claim he made that I was not a citizen of the United States——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that the gentleman is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman is outside of the point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. If I had not been a citizen of the United States that question could have been investigated by this Congress without costing me a dollar. I was put to this great expense and annoyance out of pure wickedness and with the expectation that money might be made out of it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not addressing himself to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point. The gentleman is going outside of the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order, but does not like to be discourteous to any member.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I will either have my proper fees or none. If my amendment is out of order, I move to strike out the whole amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The statute fixes the amount to be allowed in these cases, and under section 3, Rule XXI, it can not be exceeded in an appropriation bill. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WHITE] now moves to strike out what the Clerk will read.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I would like to cite you two cases where this point of order, as you term it, has been decided the other way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled on the point of order. Does the gentleman appeal from the ruling of the Chair? If not, he is not in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "J. B. White, two thousand dollars."

Mr. CRISP. Do I understand the gentleman wants to strike that out?

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I insist upon it.

Mr. CRISP. I have no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to hear the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

The CHAIRMAN. It appropriates $2,000 for this purpose; and that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WHITE] proposes to strike out.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. WHITE, of Indiana, and the Chair being in doubt as to the result the committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 35.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment of Mr. CRISP was then agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

For the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving for both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, the Library of Congress, the Executive Office, and the Departments, including salaries or compensation of all necessary clerks and employés, for labor (by the day, piece, or contract), and for all the necessary materials which may be needed in the prosecution of the work, $2,047,000; and from the said sum hereby appropriated printing and binding shall be done by the Public Printer to the amounts following, respectively, namely.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask a question for information of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. In the Book of Estimates the estimate of the Public Printer is $2,489,621, while the appropriation made by this bill is $2,122,000, making a difference of $367,000, or about $1,000 a day between the estimate of the Public Printer and the amount which the committee gives. Now, it is well known that last year we were troubled with deficiencies for the Government Printing Office because the appropriation for that year was certainly inadequate, and what I desire to know now is the reason for this difference of $367,000 between the estimate and the appropriation, and whether the committee are perfectly satisfied that the amount in this bill will carry the office through without a deficiency.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no deficiency this year, and this is the long session. The appropriation in this bill is for the next year, when we shall have the short session, and there is not likely to be a deficiency. We give the same amount for the coming year that was given for this year, with an addition of $20,000 and two items—one for a new engine, $12,000, and the other "for the construction of an additional story on the south center of the fire-proof main building of the Government Printing Office, and the removal of the electrotype foundry to the same, $16,000." So that this bill in fact makes an increase over the appropriation of last year of about $48,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Public Printer to comply with the provisions of the law granting fifteen days' annual leave to the employés of the Government Printing Office, $95,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; to pay pro rata leaves of absence to employés who resign or are discharged (decision of the First Comptroller), $15,000; in all $110,000.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, I observe that there is an appropriation here of $15,000 for the prorating of leaves of absence to employés who resign or are discharged. My recollection is that the previous appropriation which we made for this purpose for the discharged printers was only $5,000, and considering that there were hundreds discharged from that office, many of them without reason, and that it took only $5,000 to pay them their pro rata, it would seem from the amount of the present appropriation, $15,000, that it is the intention to discharge pretty nearly all the balance of those in the office.

Mr. RANDALL. This is for the coming year. It is not for anything that is due for the current year. That belongs to the deficiency bill.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I grant that, but I say it took only $5,000 in 1888 to pay the proratings of men discharged, and why should it take $15,000 this coming year? It looks like giving the office a premium to make more discharges

Mr. RANDALL. We gave the Public Printer the amount that he asked, but it can not be expended except in the manner provided in the paragraph.

Mr. FARQUHAR. But is it not a fact that the proratings of the discharged printers for the current year came within $5,000?

Mr. RANDALL. I have no recollection about that. My recollection is that there are some adjustments yet to be made in that connection.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The House will recollect that there was $2,500 extra asked for which went into the deficiency bill, and which would have made a total of $7,500, but now the committee propose to give $15,000 for these pro rata payments. It certainly looks like putting a premium on discharges.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, the committee had no manner of calculating to a dollar the amount that would be required under this clause, and therefore we were compelled to take the figures of the Public Printer. He said that $15,000 would be required, and we put that amount in the bill.

Mr. FARQUHAR. There is simply a misunderstanding as to the two allotments of money in this paragraph. The $95,000 to pay for the fifteen-days' leave of absence is strictly correct and within the figures; but it is the second part of the paragraph that I am referring to, to pay pro rata leaves of absence. I claim that it did not take $7,500 to pay that in the last year, and here we are asked for $15,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

A MEMBER (to Mr. FARQUHAR). Do you want to reduce the amount?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I do not care particularly. I merely want to call the attention of the committee to this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman [Mr. FARQUHAR] withdraw his pro forma amendment?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I do.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire unanimous consent to return to line 14, page 3, of the bill, to offer an amendment, which will come in more appropriately there than elsewhere.

Mr. RANDALL. I have examined the gentleman's amendment, and while it might come in at the end of the bill, the more appropriate place is that which he has indicated.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 14, page 3, insert the following:

"For public building at Frankfort, Ky.: That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to ascertain and report to this Congress at its next session the names of the persons who furnished materials for, or performed labor on, the public building at Frankfort, Ky. (by reason of the Government taking the construction of the building from the original contractors), for which they have not been paid, together with the amount and reasonable value of such material and labor."

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to this amendment.

The amendment was, by unanimous consent, considered and adopted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask consent to have printed in the RECORD two letters explanatory of the amendment just adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the letters referred to by the gentleman will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The letters are as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT, September 22, 1885.

SIR: On the 24th day of April, 1884, a contract was entered into with Thomas J. Collins for furnishing and laying all the stone and brick work required for the superstructure of the court-house, post-office, etc., at Frankfort, Ky. The contract provided for the completion of the work on or before the 7th day of February, 1885.

On the 26th of December, 1884, the contractor reported that the building was ready for the roof, with the exception of the tower and two large gables, and that in consequence of pecuniary embarrassment he was unable to prosecute the work further. Thereupon the Government, after communicating with the contractor's sureties, took possession, in accordance with their wishes, of the contractor's plant and finished the work. The account with the contractor stands on the books of this office as follows:

Amount paid to contractor on account of work executed by him	$26,559.00
Amount paid by Government for labor and material completing building after work thereon was abandoned by contractor	11,336.65
	37,895.65
PER CONTRA.
Amount of contract for stone and brick work	30,911.00
Amount of proposal for pine joists	550.00
Amount proceeds of sale of old material	79.50
	31,540.50
Due the Government	6,355.15

The contract provides that if the contractor fails to complete the work within the time specified he shall forfeit the sum of $50 per day until completion, subject to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. It appears from the reports of the Government superintendent at the building that the work was finished June 1, 1885, and unless relieved by the Secretary of the Treasury the contractor is liable to a penalty of $5,650.

At the time Mr. Collins reported his inability to proceed with the work he was indebted in sums aggregating in amount, according to his own statement, $7,805 for moneys advanced and labor and material supplied for the prosecution of the work upon the building. As security for money borrowed by him from the Bank of Kentucky he gave a chattel mortgage upon all the machinery, tools, etc., constituting his plant at the building, which is dated January 8, 1885. The plant was taken possession of by the Government January 14, 1885.

The amount paid out by the Government to complete this work in excess of the amount named in contract has encroached upon the fund intended for the completion of other work, and in view of the recent decision of the Solicitor (September 15, 1885) as to the application of sums appropriated for specific purposes the completion and occupancy of the building will necessarily be delayed until further appropriation is made or the amount of money paid for this work in excess of the amount named in Collins' contract recovered by suit from the securities on his bond.

The propriety or expediency of entering suit against the bondsmen is one for consideration, in view of the facts as shown by the papers on file in this office, and as the case involves complicated questions of fact and several important questions of law I respectfully recommend that the matter be referred to the Solicitor of the Treasury for examination and opinion as to the proper action to be taken by the Department in the premises.

Very respectfully,

M. E. BELL, Supervising Architect.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, June 16, 1888.

SIR: In reply to your communications of the 29th ultimo, 4th and 11th instant, transmitting claims of sundry parties for labor and material supplied to Thomas J. Collins, contractor for stone and brickwork of superstructure of the court-house, post-office, etc., at Frankfort, Ky., I have to advise you that the Department entered into contract with Mr. Collins for the work in question on the 24th of April, 1884, and on the 26th of December, 1884, the contractor formally notified the Department of his inability to proceed with the work. On the 12th of January, 1885, the superintendent of the building was authorized to assume charge of the work, and complete the contract at the expense of the contractor.

In the several letters addressed you allusion is made to the alleged liability of the Government under the contract of Mr. Collins for payment for labor and material supplied for the work. The only foundation for this claim of liability is to be found on the fourth page of the specifications of contract, under the head of "subletting," a copy of which is herewith inclosed.

I also inclose for your information copy of letter addressed from this office to the Secretary of the Treasury on September 22, 1885, which recites the facts in connection with the matter, and embraces a statement of Mr. Collins's account with the Government under his contract.

I am unable to state definitely the aggregate of claims against the contractor for labor and material supplied in connection with this contract. A statement submitted by him to this office under date of September 29, 1884, gives as the amount of the indebtedness at that time, $7,805, but this amount is evidently in part estimated, as the bills which have since been presented to the Department through yourself and others differ in amounts from the sums given by the contractor in his statement, and the total indebtedness is doubtless in excess of the aggregate given.

The inclosed copy of a statement of obligations to laborers and mechanics employed upon the work shows a total indebtedness on this account of $1,488.44. A copy of the pay-roll of the contractor, forwarded to the Department by the superintendent of the building in June, 1885, shows the amount due $1,523.56, instead of the amount named.

The papers in this case are voluminous, but I think the inclosures herewith will give you all the essential information in possession of the Department upon the aspect of the case you desire to consider.

I return, as requested, the letters submitted with your several communications.

Respectfully yours,

WILL. A. FREERET,
Supervising Architect.

Hon. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE,
House of Representatives.

Mr. RICE. I move to amend by adding to the bill, as a new paragraph, the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For a survey of Indian reservations, required by law to be made under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $50,000.

For a survey of the lands mentioned in the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes, $50,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to going back to adopt that amendment.

Mr. RICE. I do not propose any recurrence to a previous part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Where does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. RICE] propose that this amendment come in?

Mr. RICE. I propose it as a new paragraph at the end of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. We have already considered that subject of surveys.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true; but the Chair thinks the amendment is in order at this time as a new paragraph.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. RICE, it was rejected.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments and a recommendation that it be passed as amended.

Mr. RANDALL. I call the previous question on agreeing to the amendments and ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not make any such request.

The SPEAKER. No separate vote being demanded, the question will be taken on the amendments in gross.

The amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXPENDITURES ON CUSTOM-HOUSE AT CHICAGO.

Mr. LAWLER. As some question has been raised in regard to the expenditures on the custom-house at Chicago, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD for information two documents on that subject.

There was no objection.

The documents are as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., June 19, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I respectfully inclose herewith a statement of the work done on the United States custom-house here since I have been in charge of the same. The statement, as you will see, gives a list of the different classes of work and the respective costs of the same. Many of the items represent new work, such as "renewing the tiling and concreting in corridors," "room for messenger boys," "flagging in boiler rooms and engineer's department," plumbing, sewerage, etc.; besides the work of bracing the building with iron tie-rods and repairing the exterior stone work. It will be seen that vouchers have been issued from this office aggregating $159,635.69, which includes the expense of running the office, an item of $13,190.03, which amount has been paid as salary to one superintendent, one clerk, one foreman (for part of the time), one watchman, labor of draughtsman, drawing material, traveling expenses, etc., for over three years. There is yet a small balance to the credit of the building, considerable expense having been incurred in the Supervising Architect's office for plans, specifications, advertising, disbursing agent's commission, etc.

The work which has been done has been well done and will stand inspection for a long time to come. But it is necessary that the building be thoroughly painted, both inside and outside. New driveways should be built and the cornices covered with copper, that the stone work may continue in its present good condition.

The building is in good condition in so far as the work which has been done.

Very respectfully,

M. B. BAILEY.

Hon. FRANK LAWLER, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

For reference.

A bill (H. R. 10267) granting a pension to William P. Gordon.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. MCCREARY in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10556) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

Mr. HERBERT. The Committee on Naval Affairs has made a very full report upon this bill, and I have no desire to consume any time in general discussion. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not object to dispensing with the first reading, but I hope that, as we proceed, the gentleman from Alabama will explain the salient points of the bill.

There being no objection, the first reading of the bill for information was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will now be read by paragraphs for amendment and discussion under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask that the report of the committee accompanying the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The report (by Mr. HERBERT) is as follows:

The total amount embraced in the bill is $19,991,074.24. The amount appropriated in the act making appropriations for the current fiscal year was $25,783,847.79. But that sum embraced $1,722,364 for public works and $11,048,362 for increase of the Navy. The present bill embraces $1,312,156.47 for public works and $6,000,000 for increase of the Navy, leaving for current expenses of the naval establishment proper $12,678,917.77, against $13,336,329.32 for the current year. This sum, which is deemed sufficient, is less, it is believed, than has been appropriated or expended since 1860 for similar purposes.

The appropriations made at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress for ordinary current expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, were less by $493,156.42 than for the previous year, and yet they were sufficient. The Treasury clerk answers a telegram by saying: "The deficiency estimates for naval establishments for 1888 aggregate only $3,882.03." The amounts suggested in our bill aggregate nearly $200,000 less than was appropriated for 1887, but we think them ample.

The building and repairs and preservation of yards and docks and of the Naval Observatory were, until the Forty-ninth Congress, embraced in the sundry civil bill, and are still estimated for as public works, separately and apart from the naval establishments. (See Book of Estimates, page 170.)

But if we include the amounts we propose to expend on these as part of the expenditures of the naval establishment the sum total is only (excluding increase of Navy) $13,991,074.24. Our appropriations for the repair and preservation of navy-yards and docks, which were many of them in bad condition, was last year very much more liberal than for many years, and the money seems to have been well expended and the public property much improved. We make a smaller but still a liberal appropriation this year for the same purpose.

We may obtain a fair idea of the economies of the present expenditures in the Navy Department if we glance back at those of the past. It will be interesting to go back for fifty years, taking a view of the expenditures every tenth year from the present.

In 1878, when the Navy was not being increased, the expenditures were $17,365,301.37, as given in the last annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury. In 1868 the expenditures were $25,775,502.72. In 1858 the expenditures were $14,053,264.64; in 1848, $9,408,476.02; in 1838, $5,131,580.53.

Counting in our estimate the full amount in the bill reported by your committee, including the $6,000,000 for increase of the Navy, say $20,000,000, and estimating our present population at sixty millions, the bill covers for purposes of defending our coasts and commerce about 33 cents per capita of our population. Estimated in the same manner, we were expending in 1868, 69 cents; in 1858, 46 cents; in 1848, 42 cents; and in 1838, 38 cents.

A mere glance at these figures will show that the statesmen of the past were far more liberal in their naval policy than we of this day, if we leave out of consideration the acts of the Forty-ninth Congress. This will become more apparent by considering the costliness of a modern vessel and its armament. In 1854 the Government appropriated $3,000,000 for six vessels. Five of these, the Merrimack, Minnesota, Wabash, Roanoke, and Colorado, were the best and probably the costliest ships of their day. The cost was estimated at $500,000 each. Now there are vessels costing with their armament as much as $5,000,000.

We do not advocate extravagant expenditures on a navy. It is unnecessary. By the observance of economy in the matter of ordinary expenditures we believe we have reached a point at which appropriations of, say, $20,000,000 per annum will allow us, for years to come, $6,000,000 each year toward building up our Navy.

Our old Navy is passing rapidly away. Its wooden ships, old-fashioned engines, and smooth-bore guns would be useless in combat with modern vessels. The chief of the Bureau of Construction reports that in six years we shall have but four of our present wooden vessels, and that in nine years the entire wooden navy will have disappeared. We are gradually reducing the amounts expended in repairing it. While reduction goes on here the amounts required to repair our new Navy will increase as new vessels come into service, yet we estimate that by the appropriation for a few years of $20,000,000 per annum we shall be able to gradually build up a marine which, though not among the large navies of the world, will nevertheless give us that position among maritime powers which the statesmen of the past of all parties thought America should take.

It is perhaps proper to add here that during the current fiscal year the Secretary has sold, under sections 3618, 3672, Revised Statutes, etc., old material no longer deemed useful to the Navy for sums amounting altogether to $352,037.30.

The work of building a new navy is progressing as favorably as could be expected under the conditions existing when it was taken in hand.

Under the appropriations made by the last Congress the Secretary of the Navy has succeeded in making contracts which will enable us to create in this country everything for the production of modern guns and ships. We are now in this regard absolutely independent of the world.

The first modern vessels we built were three steel cruisers—the Chicago, 4,500 tons displacement; the Atlanta, 3,190 tons; and the Boston, 3,190 tons—and the steel dispatch boat Dolphin, 1,483 tons. The Atlanta, Boston, and Dolphin are in commission, and the Chicago is completed, and as the last of her guns is nearly ready she will be commissioned in a few weeks. All these vessels may be classed as making 15 knots per hour. They carry first-class modern high-power great guns and modern secondary batteries. These vessels were authorized by the act of August 5, 1882, and were contracted for in July, 1883.

Next came the act of March 3, 1885, authorizing two cruisers and two gunboats. Under this, by William Cramp & Sons, at Philadelphia, are being built the Newark, 4,083, and the Yorktown, 1,700 tons. The other two boats authorized by this act are the Charleston, 3,730 tons, under contract with the Union Iron Works, San Francisco, Cal., and the Petrel, a small gunboat, being built by the Columbia Iron Works, at Baltimore, Md.

Next was passed the act to increase the Navy approved August 3, 1886. Under this act William Cramp & Sons, of Philadelphia, contracted to build the Baltimore, 4,413 tons, and the dynamite gun cruiser, 800 tons. The Secretary of the Navy has extended the time of completing certain of these vessels. The tests of steel prescribed by the Department are very rigid, and contractors have found difficulty in obtaining a supply that would answer the required conditions. But that difficulty no longer exists, and it is expected that contractors will progress more satisfactorily in future. Of the two armored cruisers authorized by the act of August 3, 1886, the Maine is building at the New York navy-yard and the Texas in the Government yard at Norfolk.

Not much progress has as yet been made on these vessels. The law requires that they shall be constructed entirely of American material. On the first day of May, 1887, the Secretary of the Navy contracted with the Bethlehem Iron Company, of Pennsylvania, for steel armor-plates and steel gun-forgings, prescribing tests which it is believed will secure material equal to any in the world. Under this contract the delivery of armor-plates is not to begin until October 1, 1889, from which date deliveries are to be at the rate of 300 tons per month. The company is to begin the delivery of gun-forgings in August of the present year, and it is believed will comply with its contract.

The Bethlehem Company is to furnish armor not only for the Maine and Texas, but also for the four monitors. Of these the Puritan, 6,000 tons, has her machinery in, has had her dock trial, and has been accepted. The Amphitrite, whose engines were built by Harlan & Hollingsworth, is ready for her steam-trial. The Terror has also had hers. The engines of the Monadnock, 3,815, have not yet been built.

The next act was that of March 3, 1887. Under this the Union Iron Works is building the San Francisco, 4,083 tons, to be completed October 26, 1889. William Cramp & Sons are building the Philadelphia, 4,324 tons, to be completed October 27, 1889, and N. F. Palmer, jr., & Co. are building the Concord, 1,700 tons, and the Bennington, 1,700 tons, the hulls at Chester, Pa., and the machinery in New York.

Thus it will be seen that when the vessels now building shall have all been completed the Government will have four 15-knot cruisers, three 16-knot cruisers (rating the 1,700 ton vessels as such), two 17-knot armored vessels, two 18-knot cruisers, and three 19-knot cruisers, besides the 20-knot dynamite cruiser. We append hereto a table showing the speed and number of armored and unarmored vessels building and built by the principal naval powers of the world. An examination of this table will show that other governments are now building, principally, very fast vessels.

Speed is a special requisite for an unarmored cruiser. To be of use in time of war it must be able to overtake merchant vessels and to get away from armored cruisers. England has and is building, as these tables will show, nineteen armored vessels with a speed of 16 knots and over. Seven of these make 18 knots. France has or is building four of 16 knots, two of 18 knots, and one 20-knot armored vessel. Armored vessels making 16 knots and more are very common. An unarmored cruiser upon the ocean, confronted by an armored vessel of superior speed which could choose its distance for fighting, would be absolutely helpless.

It would be a grave question whether in these days any administration, if we were at war with England, France, Germany, Spain, or other second-rate naval power, would take the responsibility of sending out upon the high seas an unarmored cruiser of no more than 15 knots' speed. Your committee believe that a navy has its uses in peace, yet they feel very sure that the American people are not willing to be taxed to support an establishment, necessarily expensive, unless it gives promise of usefulness in case of war. A few swift cruisers, capable of taking care of themselves in open conflict with vessels of their own class and of falling with celerity upon an enemy's commerce, would be of immense value.

Your committee, believing that speed is an indispensable requisite in a modern cruiser, and seeking to combine, as far as possible, this requisite with economy in size, have reported in favor of two cruisers of about 3,000 tons each. Size is essential to speed. Very small boats may be filled with machinery and thus secure great speed, as in the case of the Stiletto and other torpedo-boats, but this is done by a sacrifice of space necessary for coal and crew and armament.

The 3,000-ton vessels we provide for will be large enough to carry an efficient armament, provide comfortable quarters for officers and men, and fuel to steam ten or twelve thousand knots at 10 knots an hour. We hope to get in these cruisers 20 knots speed, but have fixed the guaranty of the contractor at 19 knots as a margin of safety. The other cruiser, being of 5,300 tons displacement, we hope will develop more than 20 knots. This speed has been recently attained by the Reina Regente, a vessel built by Thompson, at Clydebank, Scotland, for the Spanish Government.

The armored vessel we provide for in the bill is to be larger and more powerful than the Texas or the Maine. It is to be of 7,500 tons displacement, will carry a very powerful battery, and is expected to obtain a maximum speed of at least 17 knots an hour. As to how the Government should build its war vessels, we beg to repeat here what was said by your committee in its report on House bill 6664, first session Forty-ninth Congress.

Another question your committee have considered with great care was whether the ships provided for in the bill should be built by contract or in the Government yards. There seems to be no serious question as to having all repairs done in Government workshops. The difficulty of defining and valuing the work to be performed renders the contract system so impracticable that all important naval powers have repairs and refits done in their own shops. Some, as England, even established government workshops in their colonies. The plant necessary for repairs and refits is almost, if not quite, sufficient for the construction of vessels; and navy-yards and docks are certainly in better condition to do such work when also engaged in construction. The bill reported therefore provides that one or more of the new vessels contemplated by the bill shall be constructed in one or more of the navy-yards of the United States. Power is also given to the Secretary to build or complete in Government workshops all the vessels included in the bill, in case it shall become apparent to him that the contractors have made a combination against the Government. This provision will, it is believed, operate as a security for the Government, and will at the same time result in having most of our naval vessels procured by contract.

The weight of evidence is that contract ships are cheaper; but there is some very strong testimony tending to show that Government-built ships are better. In a table recently prepared by Maj. W. A. Jones, Engineer Corps, United States Army, it appears that the annual cost of repairs per ton of hull of British naval vessels built by contract is £1.2 per annum, and of vessels built in the Government dock-yards the cost is £0.8; but the report of a special mixed committee appointed by the English admiralty, in 1884, to inquire into the building and repair of ships, known as the Ravensworth committee, recites that the unanimous testimony of witnesses was that the quality of contract work in the construction of ships "as performed under admiralty supervision" was "in no way inferior to that performed in the dock-yards." Ships have heretofore been built in England, almost in equal numbers, by contract and in the Government dock-yards. This committee also found that it was "expedient to extend the practice of building ships of war by contract."

One of the desirable results to follow from this policy, with us, will be the encouragement of private building of naval vessels, and the consequent multiplication of the means of rapidly increasing our naval strength in case of need.

It will be seen that we provide that the President may build in navy-yards of the United States all the ships authorized by the act if contractors shall be found unwilling to undertake them at reasonable rates. Such a provision seems to us necessary for the protection of the Government. Only a few establishments have the plant necessary to build naval vessels. From them combination against the Government is easy, and to provide by law for the building of vessels by contract and contract only and entirely within the limits of the United States seems to us to be inviting combination. The Government should be willing to give contractors fair profits, but it should be nevertheless armed with the power to protect itself. We have therefore provided money enough to put three navy yards in condition to build modern ships.

The following information has been supplied by the Navy Department:

The tabular statements following contain the names and displacements of the fastest armored and unarmored vessels of the principal naval powers.

The vessels are classified according to speed, and those building are separated from those already built. The figures opposite to the names indicate the vessels' displacements.

The speeds given are the maximum trial speeds. The conditions under which these are obtained vary somewhat in different countries. Sometimes they are the result of six, four, or two hours' trial, and occasionally they may be the average speed obtained from several runs over the measured mile.

It is probable that the maintained sea speed of these vessels would be about 10 or 12 per cent. less than those obtained on trial, but the figures given furnish a sufficiently fair means of comparison to indicate the number of fast vessels in each service.

The want of time has not been sufficient to make the tables include all navies.

NOTE.—All the above except the Chicago, Atlanta, Boston, and Dolphin are building.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now proceed to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF ORDNANCE.

Ordnance and ordnance stores: For procuring, producing, preserving, and handling ordnance material; for the armament of ships; for fuel, tools, material, and labor to be used in the general work of the Ordnance Department; for furniture at magazines, at the ordnance dock, New York, and at the naval ordnance battery and proving-ground and for prizes to enlisted men for excellence in ordnance exercises and target practice, $130,000.

Mr. HERBERT. I move to insert, after line 128, the following:

For ammunition for the guns of the Vesuvius, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy Yard, Washington, District of Columbia: For one clerk, at $1,400; one messenger, at $1.76 per diem; one foreman-laborer, at $3.50 per diem.

Mr. COMPTON. I move to strike out, in line 354, "$3.50," and in lieu thereof to insert "$4."

Mr. Chairman, I find by reference to the bill that at every other navy-yard there is paid from $4 to $4.50, $5, and $5.50 per day, while at the Washington navy-yard the pay is fixed at $3.50 only. I do not see any reason why this yard should be discriminated against. I find by the letter of the superintendent of this navy-yard that the duties of this laborer are of as onerous and responsible a character, and even more so, than similar laborers in other navy-yards of the country. My amendment only provides that the pay shall be made at the lower rate provided in other navy-yards, that is, at $4 a day.

Mr. HERBERT. The wages of this laborer have been put at exactly the same rate they have been for many years. The committee did not think it proper to raise the pay, and they allowed it to remain at the same rate which it has been as far back as the committee have gone.

Mr. COMPTON. That may be true, but that is no good reason why the injustice should be continued.

My statement will be verified by reference to the provisions for other navy-yards in this bill, that similar officers get from $4 to $4.50, and from $5 to $5.50 a day, whereas this laborer receives only $3.50. I can not conceive for my life why discrimination should be made against the Washington navy-yard in this respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The noes seem to have it.

Mr. COMPTON. I ask for a division on my amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 14.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery: For freight or expressage on medical stores, tolls, ferriages, transportation of sick and insane patients; care, transportation, and burial of the dead; advertising; telegraphing; rent of telephones; purchase of books and stationery; binding of all bound books and pamphlets, postage and purchase of stamps for foreign service; expenses attending the medical board of examiners; rent of rooms for naval dispensary and museum of hygiene; hygienic and sanitary investigation and illustration; sanitary and hygienic instruction; purchase and repairs of wagons and harness; purchase of feed for horses and cows; trees, plants, garden tools, and seeds; furniture and incidental articles for the museum of hygiene; naval dispensary, Washington; naval laboratory, sick-quarters at Naval Academy and marine barracks and dispensaries at navy-yards; washing for medical department at museum of hygiene, naval dispensary, Washington, naval laboratory, sick-quarters at Naval Academy and marine barracks, dispensaries at navy-yards and naval stations and ships and rendezvous, and all other necessary contingent expenses, $25,000.

Mr. HERBERT. I move, in line 428, to strike out "all" and insert "un," so it will read, "binding of unbound books," etc., and not "binding of all bound books;" and, in line 433, I move, after the word "feed," to insert the words "of and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Labor and expenses of general store-houses, $85,000; in all, $1,061,000.

Mr. HERBERT. I move, in line 464, page 20, to strike out "$85,000" and insert "$90,000;" and in line 465, to make the total $1,066,000 instead of $1,061,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy-yard, Washington, D. C.: In general store-houses: One book-keeper, $1,200; one stationery clerk, $1,200; one bill clerk, $1,000; one shipping and receiving clerk, $1,000.

Mr. HERBERT. I move to strike out, in line 525, the word "stationery;" so it will read:

One clerk, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Erection of barracks and officers' quarters at Norfolk, Va., $30,000.

Mr. HERBERT. I move to strike out "and officers' quarters" and insert "towards the" before the word "erection;" so it will read:

Towards the erection of barracks at Norfolk, Va., $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HERBERT. I was about to move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House, but I will yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF].

Mr. GOFF. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to state, not for the purpose of making any objection at all to any of the amounts recommended here, or suggested as an appropriation for the various purposes set forth in this bill, nor in fact to criticise the bill as it has been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, but simply to call attention to the fact that during the last fiscal year, according to the report of the Department, according to the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs in his report, according to the suggestion of the Secretary of the Navy himself in his annual report, that the work heretofore authorized by the Department in the completion of vessels heretofore commenced, and commenced under acts passed at the last session of Congress, has been progressing in a favorable manner. And my object in so calling attention is to state that during the last Congress we were repeatedly told that it was utterly impossible for the Secretary of the Navy to construct the new vessels then to be authorized by act of Congress under the system of organization as it then and now and has for over a quarter of a century existed.

It will be remembered, sir, that it was claimed upon this side of the House that the present organization was perfect; that each, every, and all of the bureaus of that Department were essential to a successful operation of the whole; and that if it was necessary or desirable to concentrate any of the officials of these departments under the bureaus as it then existed, or transfer them, or abolish any of the bureaus it could be done by a stroke of the Secretary's pen; and that he had authority under the law, as it existed, to abolish virtually any bureau by transferring the duties performed by one of them to another which in his judgment was more necessary for the successful accomplishment of the work in hand assigned to it.

Gentlemen of this committee will remember that we had a bill offered during that Congress abolishing the existing system, a system which we were assured had brought about all of the extravagance and abuses under which we were told a Republican administration had wantonly disposed of the people's money, or had perpetrated frauds, as some gentlemen chose to assert—a system under which the Department had been controlled for a number of years. That bill was offered, by which the eight bureaus of the Department were, in the first place, to be concentrated into three bureaus, or failing in that an effort was made to concentrate them into five; and it was then insisted that if the bill then offered should become a law—insisted upon this side of the House—that the Secretary of the Navy would find it absolutely essential to issue an order by which he would in fact restore the bureaus that were so abolished.

I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that all that was claimed on this side of the House during that controversy has been virtually conceded by the report of the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Whitney, to this House in December last, and I read from page 11 of that report. Permit me to state first that he does not fail to call the attention of the Congress to the fact that he suggested that these changes should be made, and the committee will bear me out in the assertion that the Secretary of the Navy and the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs stated, and it was claimed on that side of the House, that it would be absolutely impossible to carry on the work without wasteful extravagance unless the bureaus were consolidated.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from West Virginia may be extended.

There was no objection.

Mr. GOFF. I shall not probably consume the five minutes allotted to me. The Secretary says:

In the last two annual reports of the Department, the necessity for a better system of handling the stores and supplies and for making the purchases of the Department has been fully explained. During the last year a new system has been inaugurated.

Inaugurated by virtue of what authority? How was it inaugurated? It was not by virtue of any legislative enactment. It was not by authority of any statute of Congress, unless it be the authority of legislative enactment existing previous to the criticisms that had been submitted upon the organization of the Department as it has heretofore existed. Then I say, sir, that the Secretary, when he calls the attention of Congress and the country to the fact that a new system has been inaugurated, admits it to be true as it was stated on this side of the House, I myself, among others, making the statement, and my colleagues on this side, as well as a member of the Naval Committee on the other side, that this system could be inaugurated under the much-abused organization of that Department as it had existed from 1846 down to the present time.

My honorable friend from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] stated persistently and eloquently that it was impossible for this change to be made. He argued it well in his report, and argued it better on the floor of the House. And, sir, I am glad that he is here now to substantiate, as I have no doubt he will substantiate, this admirable statement of the Secretary of the Navy upon this particular branch of the law.

And I am very frank to say, Mr. Chairman, that my motive in this formal amendment and in making this statement to the House, calling the attention of the country and of this committee to these facts, is because of the very statements of my friends on the other side of this Chamber, which they have been in the habit of making for years past, of abusing the system of organization there, which they have criticised and abused so long, that they are so fond and anxious on all and every occasion of denouncing, and have even made it a pretext to hold up to the scorn of the country as a system by which repeated Republican administrations have repaired old ships and failed to construct new vessels and squandered millions of money, and that thereby the faulty organization of the Department was demonstrated beyond all question to exist.

I have no idea that the honorable chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs will take issue with the Secretary of the Navy on this proposition. I read further:

During the last year a new system has been inaugurated. There will hereafter be accountability for the property and a responsible head to the business.

My friends, do you not, on that side of the Chamber, remember how the word "accountability" was played upon; that there had been no responsibility; that there had been no accountability in the Department; that it was absolutely impossible to have that accountability or responsibility under the existing organization? And yet we are told now that we have a perfect system of organization, that we have a superb system organized in the last year, inaugurated since the adjournment of Congress, by which we have to-day absolute accountability. I congratulate the chairman; I congratulate the Secretary; I congratulate my friends on the other side of the House.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition now and shall not attempt at this time to discuss the question which the gentleman raises, whether the bill for the reorganization of the Navy, introduced by myself, so earnestly pressed on this side and so persistently fought on the other side of the House, ought to have passed or not. I am not at all surprised that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] should feel like making some excuse to the country for being so largely responsible for the defeat of that bill, as he was resorting, as his party did, to parliamentary tactics, although two of the intelligent members of his party belonging to the Naval Committee had favored the bill.

But I desire to correct the gentleman in this. If he will look back to the RECORD he will see I did not state that it was impossible for a reorganization to be made by the Secretary. I admitted then, as I say now, that under the power the Secretary had to distribute among the eight bureas the authority vested in him he could easily do what he has done.

Mr. GOFF. I concede that that was your argument; but it was coupled with this proposition: That it could not be done and at the same time secure a proper accountability.

Mr. HERBERT. I think I could easily demonstrate, if this were the proper time and place, that even under the present organization there are grave defects. They were continually cropping out while we were preparing the appropriation bill. I shall not be tempted, however, to go back and discuss that question.

Mr. GOFF. You will take issue with the Secretary if you do.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not take issue with the Secretary. I am satisfied the Secretary believes now, as he believed then, that it would be better to pass that bill. If the bill had become a law it would have put at rest many questions that must rise hereafter. We could have framed under that bill, if it had become law, quite a different bill from that we have just passed. The Secretary made the present organization simply because we were not permitted to reorganize by law, although I know he thinks, and I entirely agree with him—and I am glad the gentleman from West Virginia does also—that the reorganization which he has made by his order has worked a great reform in this bureau system.

Mr. GOFF. I have stated no such thing as that. I have simply stated that reform and reorganization has been consummated under existing law when we were told it could not be accomplished.

Mr. HERBERT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCCREARY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10556) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HERBERT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, returning bills of the following titles, with the statement that the bills having been presented to the President on June 7, 1888, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which they originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, they had become laws without his approval:

An act (H. R. 6899) to incorporate the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. 7263) for the erection of a public building at Bay City, Mich.;

An act (H. R. 7264) for the erection of a public building at Bridgeport, Conn.;

An act (H. R. 7340) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Hickman, Ky.;

An act (H. R. 1184) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek, and at the Woodley Lane Road, in the District of Columbia; and

An act (H. R. 6845) granting a pension to John Witham.

The message further announced that the President had approved bills of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 183) authorizing the loan of tents and tent equipage to the veteran organizations of the Society of the Army of the Potomac;

An act (H. R. 6545) to increase the pension of Henry T. Bridges;

An act (H. R. 6552) to increase the pension of James R. Porter;

An act (H. R. 7688) granting a pension to John Glenning;

An act (H. R. 7721) granting a pension to Martha Linton;

An act (H. R. 7829) granting a pension to Thomas McGuire;

An act (H. R. 7944) granting a pension to Ann V. Ferguson;

An act (H. R. 7974) granting a pension to Herman Rankins;

An act (H. R. 8159) granting a pension to Jane Brown Dunn;

An act (H. R. 8217) granting a pension to Raphael Fowler;

An act (H. R. 8260) granting a pension to Lydia A. Hicks;

An act (H. R. 8629) granting a pension to Mrs. Abbe E. Jackson;

An act (H. R. 8798) granting a pension to Nettie Ellicott;

An act (H. R. 8884) granting a pension to Emily McClure;

An act (H. R. 9170) granting a pension to James W. Poag;

An act (H. R. 5378) for the relief of Tillman Faux;

An act (H. R. 6245) for the relief of William Burk;

An act (H. R. 6574) for the relief of William Compton;

An act (H. R. 6840) for the relief of Hiram M. Goss;

An act (H. R. 6973) for the relief of Enoch Weathers; and

An act (H. R. 2174) granting a pension to Lewis Fichthorn.

AMENDMENT OF LAND LAWS.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I now call up House bill No. 7901, which is the unfinished business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to secure to actual settlers the public lands adapted to agriculture, to protect the forests on the public domain, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. When the bill was last before the House certain amendments were adopted. There are a large number of amendments pending. It is for the consideration of these amendments I desire to have the bill taken up as unfinished business.

I wish to say by way of explanation that the gentleman from Illinois, Judge PAYSON, who is a member of the Committee on Public Lands, and a very valuable member, authorized me to say to the House that he was extremely desirous that this measure should go right on whenever the opportunity should present itself, whether he was present or not.

Mr. BURROWS. In a conversation with Judge PAYSON after this matter was called up before, he expressed himself as very much gratified that I had called attention to it and had its consideration postponed until his return. He said he was very anxious to be here when the bill was considered. It certainly is a very important bill, and, while I have no feeling about it one way or the other, it seems to me that, considering the slimness of the House, it had better lie over until his return.

Mr. HOLMAN. I can only say that Judge PAYSON came to me, I think the same afternoon that he left the city, and said that while he wished to be here when the forfeiture bill came up, as he had a substitute to propose for that, he desired that this bill should go right on whenever there was an opportunity.

Mr. BURROWS. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that it is the wish of Judge PAYSON that this bill shall be taken up at the first opportunity, even in his absence, I will not interpose any objection.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] give way for a moment to let the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McADOO] take up a little bill from the Committee on Naval Affairs? [Laughter.]

Mr. McADOO. The bill has been reported unanimously from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I ask that it be taken up and considered now. It will occupy only a few minutes.

Mr. OATES. Will not the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] consent to allow this bill to go over until to-morrow?

Mr. HOLMAN. It will take a day to consider the amendments to this bill, and I want every minute I can get. If this bill is not passed I want it understood that it is not the fault of the Committee on Public Lands. Although the bill has been pending before the House for three months or more, we have had altogether an hour and a half for its consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment to the bill.

Mr. WILKINS. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is the regular order.

Mr. WILKINS. How is it the regular order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is unfinished business.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill is properly before the House. It is unfinished business.

Mr. RANDALL. And has the right of way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And has the right of way.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the House should take a recess now would this bill have the right of way in the morning?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is unfinished business.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is unfinished business, and has the right of way all the time until disposed of.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening. We have been in session here almost six hours in a sweltering atmosphere.

Mr. SOWDEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to know what effect the consideration of this bill would have upon the special order assigning to-morrow for the consideration of business from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will be for the Speaker to decide when the question comes up in the House to-morrow. [Laughter.] The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] moves that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I hope the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McADOO].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BUCHANAN; and there were—ayes 30, noes 40.

Mr. SOWDEN. No quorum.

A MEMBER on the Republican side. Let us have tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] will act as tellers.

Mr. SOWDEN. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of no quorum is withdrawn.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now I ask that the Clerk proceed with the reading.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Speaker, tellers were demanded by two gentlemen on this side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not understand that tellers were demanded. The Chair understood that the point of no quorum was made, which made it the duty of the Chair to appoint tellers.

The question was taken on ordering tellers, and they were refused—only 19 members voting in favor thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Tellers are refused; the noes have it, and the House refuses to take a recess.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now let the Clerk read.

Mr. RYAN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] whether the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] has not an amendment pending to this bill which he considers quite important?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the pending amendment, which is to section 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

But no patent shall issue except to a citizen of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To the amendment just read, an amendment was proposed, to add the words which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Or who has declared his intention to become such.

Mr. HOLMAN. The first proposition just read was submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], the other, I believe, by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. The question presented is a very important one, and I am anxious that the gentleman from Illinois should be present when it is considered. I therefore ask unanimous consent that this amendment be passed over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, these amendments will be passed over for the present, with leave to return hereafter to this part of the bill. The Chair hears no objection. There is another amendment pending to the third section—an amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON]. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 3, by striking out all after the words "Revised Statutes" in line 2, and inserting the words "is hereby repealed."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock. The gentleman who proposed that amendment is not here. This is a privileged matter, and can be brought up in the morning.

Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as there does not seem to be a quorum present, and gentlemen have some reports they desire to make, I will not insist on the further progress of the bill just now, but give notice that I shall call it up in the morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, gentlemen having reports to make can hand them to the Clerk.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I withdraw the motion for a recess.

Mr. HOLMAN. Without allowing this bill to lose its place, I yield for a moment to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McADOO].

CADET ENGINEERS.

Mr. McADOO. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1484) to fix the status in the Navy of certain cadet engineers.

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of placing certain cadet engineers (graduates) in their proper grade and rank in the Navy, the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, commission as assistant engineers in the Navy the cadet engineers of the classes of 1881 and 1882 now in the Navy: Provided, That the commissions of the class of 1881 be dated from July 1, 1885, and their names be placed on the Navy Register immediately after the name of William D. Weaver, and that they take precedence in their grade and corps according to their proficiency as shown by their order of merit at the date of graduation; and that the commissions of the class of 1882 be dated from July 1, 1884, and their names be placed on the Navy Register immediately after the name of Charles E. Rommell, and that they take precedence in their grade and corps according to their proficiency as shown by their order of merit at the date of graduation: Provided, That any of such cadet engineers who failed to pass the physical examination at the Naval Academy made at the time of their graduation shall be subjected to further examinations before receiving their appointments, as above authorized.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BURROWS. I think we ought to have some explanation of it, the right to object being reserved.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been passed by the Senate and is indorsed by the unanimous report of the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House. It does not add one man to the official roster of the Navy. The circumstances are simply these: There were two kinds of cadets at the Naval Academy, engineer cadets and naval cadets. The course of engineer cadets was four years; that of naval cadets, six years. Mr. Chandler, while Secretary of the Navy, construed the law as requiring that engineer cadets should serve two years at sea before finally graduating. They demurred to this decision and took the case to the Court of Claims, which decided in their favor; and upon an appeal the Supreme Court of the United States decided that Mr. Chandler was wrong; that at the end of four years these engineer cadets should be enlisted in the Navy. By the action of the Department they lost two years. This bill simply gives them the advantage which they otherwise would have had.

Mr. HERBERT. There is a unanimous report in favor of it from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to know whether this bill applies simply to certain cadets who have graduated in the past, or whether it is prospective in its provisions.

Mr. McADOO. It relates entirely to these cases in the past; it is not prospective.

Mr. McMILLIN. How many persons will be affected by it?

Mr. McADOO. About ten, I think.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. It proposes to right a wrong which was done to them.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McADOO moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, House bill No. 6947, similar in its provisions to the Senate bill just passed, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

AMENDMENT TO LAND LAWS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not yielded the floor. I ask that the amendment which was submitted by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON], who is not now present, be passed over.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I suppose that is with the understanding that it does not lose its place.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Of course.

Mr. MCRAE. And with the further understanding that it is not to delay the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana can recur to this part of the bill at any time. In the absence of objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] will be passed over for the present.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

GETTYSBURGH.

Mr. LODGE. I ask, by unanimous consent, to call up for consideration from the House Calendar joint resolution (H. Res. 178) granting leave of absence to certain persons employed in the service of the United States.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the heads of Departments are hereby authorized to grant to all persons employed in the service of the United States who were present at the battle of Gettysburgh, either in the Union or Confederate forces [be, and hereby are, granted], sufficient leave of absence, without loss of pay, to attend the reunion to be held at Gettysburgh on the 3d day of July next.

The Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service recommended the following amendments:

Strike out "be, and hereby are, granted" and add, "such absence not to be taken from the allowance made by law."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. There is objection. I call for the regular order. I move the House take a recess to 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. HOLMAN. I had the floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman from Indiana yielded, and I have moved to take a recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House, according to previous order, takes a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 8 o'clock p. m.) was called to order by Mr. MAISH, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 22, 1888.

SIR: Hon. LEVI MAISH is designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House this evening.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK,
Clerk House of Representatives.

ANN ATKINSON.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Calendar for present consideration the bill (S. 1844) granting an increase of pension to Ann Atkinson.

Mr. MATSON. Unless there is some special reason for that I shall be compelled to object.

Mr. ROBERTSON. This bill, if the gentleman will permit me to state, provides for a pension for an old lady now in her eighty-fourth year. She is the widow of a veteran of the war of 1812, and is now dependent entirely upon charitable institutions for her support. She is, as I have said, quite aged, and unless we do something now for her I think she will never be able to receive any of the benefits granted under our pension laws. I will state further that this is a Senate bill which has been upon the Calendar for some time. It is very far down upon the Calendar, and will probably not be reached this session. It only increases the pension from $8 to $16 a month.

Mr. MATSON. I do not insist upon the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ann Atkinson, late widow of Hopeful Toler, late a soldier in Capt. Henry Saint George Tucker's company of Mounted Virginia Rifles, in the war of 1812, and pay her at the rate of $16 per month, in lieu of that which she is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. BANKHEAD) was read, as follows:

The soldier, Hopeful Toler, was a soldier in the war of 1812, and was paid for twenty-eight days' service, nine and one-half days' travel. The claimant, Mrs. Atkinson, a widow, was pensioned at the rate of $8 per month by act approved April 25, 1882.

She is now in needy circumstances, dependent upon the assistance of a charitable institution and her pension. Her age is seventy-eight years. Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I may state, Mr. Speaker, that this report was made some time ago, and I have heard since from a kinsman of this old lady that she is eighty-four years of age instead of seventy-eight.

There being no objection the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROBERTSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REBECCA MANLOVE.

Mr. HIRES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9808) granting an increase of pension to Rebecca Manlove, and put it upon its passage.

Mr. MATSON. I will interpose the same objection in that case.

Mr. HIRES. I would like to say a word in reference to this bill. This is quite an aged lady, eighty-nine years old, and is the widow of a service revolutionary soldier. If relief is not granted shortly it can be of no service to her, and I hope, this being the widow of a soldier, there will be no objection to considering the bill.

Mr. MATSON. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Mrs. Rebecca Manlone, widow of David Manlone, who served in the United States Navy in the war of 1812, from $12 per month to $30 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The claimant is the widow of David Manlove, who was sailing master of the Delaware flotilla from November 5, 1813, to April 8, 1815, in the war of 1812 with Great Britain. She has been in receipt of a pension at the rate only of $8 per month from March 9, 1878, and $12 from March 19, 1886, under the general laws.

It is shown by the certificate of Downs Edmunds, judge of common pleas, and John Spencer, mayor, both of Cape May, N. J., where claimant also resides, that Mrs. Manlove is almost totally blind; is in her eighty-ninth year, and has no means of support beyond her small pension. She is a very worthy woman.

Your committee are of the opinion that the pension should be increased to $30 per month, and therefore return the bill to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass, amended, however, by changing the word "Manlone," wherever it appears in said bill, to "Manlove."

Mr. MATSON. I would like some member of the Committee on Pensions to explain why it is that in this case an increase of pension to $30 a month is made, while in a similar case, just passed by the House, $16 a month was considered sufficient?

Mr. HIRES. Well, I suppose that $16 was all that was asked in that case. Thirty dollars certainly is not too high a pension.

Mr. MATSON. It strikes me that $16 a month is a very good pension.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman reserved his objection?

Mr. MATSON. I did.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman insist upon the objection?

Mr. MATSON. Unless there is some explanation, I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill is not before the House for consideration.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. I now demand the regular order.

I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the special order; but pending that I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SAWYER], who desires to have a bill recommitted.

RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask to have the bill of the Senate 2375, granting a pension to Joseph McGuckian, which was reported to the House with an adverse recommendation, recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

There being no objection, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The motion of Mr. MATSON was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the order of last Friday evening be followed to-night, giving the privilege of calling up any bill which has been passed over, but proceeding with the Calendar from the point where we left off before.

There being no objection, the order was agreed to.

ROSANNA K. GRIFFIN.

Mr. FARQUHAR. As my own case is the first on the call and under the regular order, I call up the bill (H. R. 4785) granting a pension to Rosanna K. Griffin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rosanna K. Griffin, widow of James Griffin, late of Company I, One hundred and fifty-fifth New York Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

The beneficiary named in the bill is the widow of James Griffin, who served in Company I, One hundred and fifty-fifth New York Volunteers, from September 3, 1862, until July 15, 1865, and died February 26, 1885, of aneurism of arch of aorta. The widow's claim has been rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the evidence fails to show the connection of the fatal disease with the military service.

Soldier, as shown by the testimony of commissioned officer and comrades, while in battle of Cold Harbor, was struck over the left breast with a musket-ball, which penetrated through the folds of a rubber and woolen blanket, which he carried over his left shoulder, the ball lodging in his clothing, pressed against his breast. This injury was, in the opinion of the widow, the immediate cause of the soldier's death, complicated with rheumatism also contracted in the service. It being clearly shown that soldier received an injury to breast, while the evidence as to origin of rheumatism was not satisfactory, the case was submitted to the medical referee for his opinion as to whether the death-cause could be accepted as a result of the former. The opinion of the medical referee, however, was adverse to that theory.

Upon a re-review of the case, it was held by the legal branch of the office that rheumatism was fairly established, and thereupon the medical referee gave the following opinion: "The rheumatism being admitted as due to the service, the aneurism of the aorta causing death will be accepted as due to disease of the heart, the result of rheumatism."

Before final action on the claim another re-reviewer differed with the former reviewer, as to the origin of rheumatism in the service, and the case was sent out for special examination.

The special examination failed to add to the testimony already in the case as to the existence of rheumatism in the service, but strengthened that relating to soldier's rheumatic condition at date of discharge and his suffering therefrom thereafter.

Two special examiners were favorably impressed with the merits of the case, but the third examiner, who was directed to examine a comrade, reported against the case upon that comrade's negative testimony only, who at the same time is shown by the special examiner to be unreliable because of his unsoundness of mind due to a wound received in service.

The judgment of this examiner was accepted and the widow's claim rejected.

Your committee have carefully examined the evidence in the case, and arrive at the conclusion that the soldier's death was due to his military service, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EDWARD HEALY.

Mr. LANE. I call up the bill (H. R. 6057) to place on the pension-roll the name of Edward Healy, being one of the bills passed over heretofore on page 61 of the Calendar.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edward Healy, late of the Sixth United States Infantry.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

His medical examination February 24, 1870, shows about the same condition found on first examination. June 14, 1873, his examination shows same disabilities increased, and a rating of $18 per month. Examination September 4, 1873, shows same condition as previous examination. Examinations November 11, 1873, November 18, 1874, show steadily increased disability. Examination June 7, 1875, shows progress of rheumatic trouble and heart disease. Examinations September 5, 1877, April 14, 1881, June 14, 1883, August 20, 1884, December 2, 1884, and April 7, 1887, show progress of both diseases, rheumatism and resulting heart disease. Last examination shows "joints and fingers of both hands slightly enlarged, toes of both feet distorted, stiffness of joints of lower extremities; locomotion very difficult; area of cardiac dullness increased; action of heart excited, forcible, and irregular; a rough throb over region of mitral valves; has valvular lesion, with cardiac hypertrophy, no doubt the result of rheumatism. Is incapacitated for performing any manual labor."

Drs. Draper and Eliott testified October 27, 1874, that the condition of claimant's feet, resulting from rheumatism, was such as to render walking impossible at times.

Thomas T. Smith testified June 10, 1886, that claimant "is frequently confined to his bed on account of rheumatism and heart disease, and that he is unable to dress or undress himself."

Julius Emmons testifies June 10, 1886, that claimant's disability has steadily increased during the ten years that he has known him, "and that he is unable to dress or undress himself, and is frequently confined to his bed from diseases of heart and rheumatism."

Grove Douglas testified March 28, 1877, to several years' intimate acquaintance with claimant, and "that he is afflicted in a most terrible manner with chronic rheumatism in feet and legs, and directly affecting his heart to such an extent that he is utterly incapacitated for business and all labor."

Dr. Garnett testifies that claimant's "feet are in such a condition as to render locomotion almost impossible." Dr. D. W. Bliss gives testimony fully corroborating that of Dr. Garnett. While the disability clearly shown to result from the claimant's rheumatism and heart troubles may not actually require the constant aid and attendance of another person, it is shown by facts, as well as testimony most reputable in character, that the aid and attendance of another person is an absolute necessity for considerable portions of the time.

It is further shown that the claimant's heart trouble is such as to render continuance of existence very uncertain, and that death may result almost instantly from some trivial cause or excitement or improvident exercise.

The bill is reported favorably with amendments, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The claimant served in the Sixth Regiment United States Infantry from June 6, 1860, to January 20, 1866, when he was discharged on account of disability because of "chronic rheumatism' with distortion of toes of both feet." He was granted pension August 23, 1869, for rheumatism of both feet, at the rate of $6 per month. Increase was granted from January 7, 1875, to $18 per month for rheumatism and resulting heart disease. Pension was again increased under act of March 3, 1883, to $24 per month, and on December 2, 1884, pension was increased to $30 per month for rheumatism and heart disease as a result. His medical examination August 13, 1869, shows "distortion of both feet, the toes being flexed by muscular action, causing great deformity and difficulty in progressive locomotion."

The committee recommend the following amendments: Strike out the words "placed on" in the first line and insert in lieu thereof the word "increase," and also to strike out the words "roll the name" in the same line; also to strike out the words "placed on the pension-roll" in the fourth line of said bill, and to insert in lieu thereof the words "increase the pension;" and also to add, after the word "infantry" in the sixth line of said bill, the following words, "and to pay him a pension of $45 in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FRANK H. REED.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 9346) granting a pension to Frank H. Reed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frank H. Reed, non compos son of George W. Reed, late a private in Company C, Thirty-first Regiment Maine Volunteers, at the rate of $18 per month, payable to his legally constituted guardian.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The facts in this case are, that claimant is the son of George W. Reed, a private in Company C, Thirty-first Maine Volunteers, who was killed in battle at Spottsylvania, Va., in May, 1864. The son was pensioned until he reached the age of sixteen years. He is now a complete imbecile, being adjudged insane and placed under guardianship. The facts are all thoroughly established, and a petition signed by 69 citizens of the town of Harmony, Me., is on file, setting forth the pitiable condition and necessities of claimant.

The bill submitted to the committee is defective in form, and a substitute bill is reported. As both Houses of the present Congress have passed bills in form precisely like the substitute, your committee recommend that it do pass, and that the original bill lie on the table.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY NEVELS.

The next business on the Private Calendar which was called up for consideration (by Mr. HOVEY) was the bill (H. R. 7162) for the relief of Mary Nevels.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Nevels, a blind orphan, whose father, Thomas Nevels, of Company G, Twelfth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteers, was killed in battle in October, 1863, at the rate of $18 per month, during the term of her natural life.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7162) for the relief of Mary Nevels, submit the following report:

The claimant is the blind orphan daughter of Thomas Nevels, of Company G, Twelfth Regiment of Kentucky Cavalry, who died from the effects of wounds received at the battle of Philadelphia, Tenn., October 28, 1863, while on the way to the hospital from the battle-field. His widow drew a pension from date of soldier's death, but died on the 6th day of April, 1874, leaving the claimant unprotected and wholly dependent on the charity of friends for support.

The claimant was born December 25, 1853, and in March, 1864, was taken with spotted fever, which settled in her eyes and produced total blindness in both eyes. She has no home, no money, or means of any kind to make a support, and petitions Congress to afford her relief.

A petition accompanies this bill signed by many prominent citizens of Warrick County, Indiana, who are personally acquainted with the claimant and the facts set forth in the case.

Your committee have established many precedents of this kind for relief, and recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY A. GIBSON.

Mr. MAISH. I now call up the bill (H. R. 7247) to increase the pension of Mary A. Gibson, widow of Commander William Gibson, with an amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary A. Gibson, widow of Commander William Gibson, United States Navy, and pay her a pension of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act; and this pension shall be in lieu of that which she is now receiving.

The committee recommend, in line 6, the correction of the name. Strike out the letter "A" and insert the letter "M."

Mr. MAISH. I move to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 2129, which was reported from the committee, and will be found on the Calendar on page 90, and substitute it for the House bill.

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2129) to increase the pension of Mary A. Gibson, widow of Commander William Gibson, have had the same under consideration, and beg to adopt and submit the following report:

The applicant is the widow of William Gibson, late a commander in the United States Navy. She is now drawing a pension of $30 per month since the death of her husband, which occurred October 23, 1887. Such is the amount provided for by the general law in such cases. The deceased officer seems to have been appointed midshipman February 11, 1841, and to have been promoted by gradual steps until March 5, 1879, when he reached the grade of commander.

During this long service, although it seems he was advanced and deservedly promoted, yet the progress was so slow that at the death of her husband, after twenty-nine years' actual service, she is left with only $30, the pension of a commander. The husband served in the Mexican war, being closely engaged in the Reefer with the batteries and troops of the enemy in the two attacks upon Alvarado by our forces, and being present also with his vessel at Tobasco. In 1849, while serving on the Ewing, in the Coast Survey, in California waters, he was assaulted by a mutinous crew, rescued from drowning, and thanked by his superior officer for "characteristic gallantry." He was complimented by Admiral Rodgers, commanding the squadron in the sea of Japan in 1854–'55, "for zeal, energy, and the courage with which he endured the hardships of a dangerous cruise."

During the war of the rebellion he commanded the United States war steamer Yankee, of the Potomac flotilla. He was present during all the operations upon the James River during the campaign of General McClellan against Richmond, and was thanked for his services by Commodore Wilkes upon capturing several vessels of the enemy. He was engaged in three attacks against Fort McAllister, and was mentioned by Admiral Dupont in his dispatches for his "great spirit and vigilance."

He was engaged against the Confederate batteries at Charleston, was officially commended by Admiral Dahlgrens and Rowan, and was thanked by Major-General Newton "for able co-operation with the land forces" in the expedition against St. Mark's.

In October, 1866, he rode out a hurricane near the Bahamas, and was thanked by the British Government for aid rendered those islands after the catastrophe.

We think such a record demands special consideration. He seems to have been exceedingly deserving of the rank at least of a commodore—never attained—doubtless prevented by some "rules of the service."

The widow, allowed now $30, asks an increase to $50 per month.

In distinct recognition of her husband's long and faithful service we recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. CHEADLE. I understand the desire is that this bill shall go over until Thursday night, July 12.

Mr. MAISH. I understood objection would be made, and I therefore move that the same order be made in this case as was made in all similar cases—that the bill be put on the Calendar for Thursday night, July 12, for consideration after the bills heretofore set for that evening, fifteen minutes' debate to be allowed on each side, and the previous question to be ordered, with the right to offer amendments.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. House bill 7247 will be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have a similar case, in which I desire the same course taken. I ask that the Senate bill be made the special order, and that the House bill No. 3155 lie on the table.

Mr. MATSON. I insist on the regular order. This bill has never been passed yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to know the status of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is a Senate bill on the Speaker's table. The House bill has been reported by the Committee on Pensions. I ask that the Senate bill be made the special order.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the Senate bill been reported by the Committee on Pensions?

Mr. SPRINGER. It has not.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MATSON. Yes; I demand the regular order.

PHILOMELIA L. DARTT.

The next business on the Private Calendar which was called up for consideration (by Mr. MACDONALD) was the bill (S. 1827) granting a pension to Philomelia L. Dartt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Philomelia L. Dartt, widow of Josiah R. Darrt, late captain of Company A, Fifth Regiment Minnesota Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1827) granting a pension to Philomelia L. Dartt, submit the following report:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions in this case is adopted, and the passage of the bill recommended.

[Senate report.]

The husband of the beneficiary under this bill was Josiah R. Dartt, captain of the Fifth Minnesota Infantry Volunteers, who died September 11, 1874. After his death his widow made claim for a pension on the ground that such death was occasioned by piles contracted in the service. The application was granted, and the widow drew the pension allowed from the date of her husband's death until September 4, 1884, after which her name was dropped from the rolls.

The records in this case are so voluminous that only the most general statement can be made. The testimony supporting the original application was clear, ample, and uncontradicted. Between the dates of allowance and suspension controversies arose involving a portion of the dead soldier's estate, which engendered much bitterness, and which induced a brother of the deceased to represent to the Pension Office that Captain Dartt was afflicted with piles before entering the service. The investigation made by agents of the Pension Office brought out a mass of conflicting testimony of equal positiveness, making the case before the committee rest entirely upon the credibility of witnesses. An analysis of the testimony of a hundred witnesses can not, of course, be given here.

The committee, however, partly from the personal knowledge of one of its members, and from the credence due some of the witnesses who had special means of information, among whom were the colonel of the regiment (afterward governor of the State), the regimental surgeon, and others of unquestioned standing and repute, do not hesitate to report that the real weight of such testimony is in favor of the widow, and they therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JULIUS C. MONSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar which was called up for consideration (by Mr. SAWYER) was the bill (S. 808) granting a pension to Julius C. Monson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Julius C. Monson, late a sergeant in Company D of the Fifteenth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 808) granting a pension to Julius C. Monson, submit the following report:

That the committee think that the facts as stated in the Senate report hereto attached and made a part hereof show that this is a meritorious case, and they therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

SENATE REPORT.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 808) granting a pension to Julius C. Monson, have examined the same and report:

The claimant made application for a pension in 1879, and received notice of his final rejection in 1887, on the ground that he had epileptic fits before he enlisted. As to prior soundness, Annis Nelson, Gelbrand Jenson, Andrew Frederickson, and Henry Jacobs all testify to their acquaintance with him, to his robust health, and that he never had epilepsy or any other disease.

The second lieutenant of his company testifies that he appeared well from January, 1862, to September, 1862, when he had a fit or fainting spell. Had none after that that he knew of. He was a good soldier, prompt and active.

Two brothers of the claimant testified to a special examiner that the claimant was sound, never had epilepsy, and that there never had been epilepsy in the family. In reference to one of these witnesses the examiner says he had great difficulty in getting him to testify. He insisted upon knowing what questions would be asked before being sworn, a circumstance which the examiner intimates is disparaging to his veracity. The man's repugnance is nothing extraordinary. There are few persons who take kindly to these somewhat inquisitorial investigations.

There have been eight special examinations, and the bulk of testimony collected shows that the claimant was sound before enlistment. Such witnesses as testify to the contrary were doubtful as to their knowledge. They had heard or got an impression that he had fits before he entered the service, but they had no positive information.

The certificate of his discharge is one of those peculiar documents often found in pension files. It says "he was incapable of doing the duties of a soldier because of epilepsy. Had epilepsy when a boy; mother had epilepsy."

Such statements are not evidence; they carry no weight, because they are not based upon knowledge and they are contrary to the sworn testimony of respectable and trustworthy persons.

It is proved that the man was sound. It is a fact that he was accepted after critical examination—that he was a faithful soldier, "prompt and active;" that he was discharged for disability; that he has been disabled since—is disabled now.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY J. M'GREGOR.

The next business on the Private Calendar which was called up for consideration (by Mr. SAWYER) was the bill (S. 2331) granting a pension to Mary J. McGregor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary J. McGregor, widow of William McGregor, late sergeant of ordnance, United States Army.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2331) granting a pension to Mary J. McGregor, submit the following report:

This is a remarkable case. The soldier first enlisted in December, 1828. He enlisted eleven different times, and died in the service in July, 1880.

Under our pension laws the claimant could receive no pension for the reason that she was unable to show that his death was due to his military service. On the expiration of his several enlistments his character as an honest, reliable, faithful man and soldier was in almost every case fully indorsed by his superior officers.

On the expiration of his tenth enlistment the certificate of his superior officer was that the soldier was "a tried and experienced soldier in different branches of the service."

The committee believe that this old and destitute widow of a soldier who had served his country for over half a century should be relieved in her destitution, and they therefore adopt the Senate report hereto attached as their own, and recommend that the bill do pass.

SENATE REPORT.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mary J. McGregor, have examined the same, and report:

The petitioner is the widow of William McGregor, who enlisted eleven times, and served fifty years in United States military organizations. His record is one of almost unexampled faithfulness and integrity. In every position in which he served he received commendation. His last service was at Kennebec (Me.) arsenal. In 1878 he was relieved from all but nominal duty. In notifying him of his relief the major commanding says:

"Notwithstanding your advanced age (eighty-two years) it gives the commanding officer pleasure to state that soldierly instincts and integrity of character have, to the last day of your valuable service, won for you the best wishes and intentions of your commanding officer."

The surgeon at Kennebec arsenal certifies that—

"He died of paralysis of the brain, at the age of eighty-four. He had been in the service fifty years. His death was caused by long-continued, confined work as clerk in the Ordnance Department, in connection with his age."

In all the time of his connection with the Army he had received the wages of a soldier, from which, correct as were his habits, he had not been able to put by anything. His aged wife is destitute.

The committee think that she should have relief, and to this end the accompanying bill is reported, with a recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH A. WILCOX.

The next business on the Private Calendar which was called up for consideration (by Mr. HAUGEN) was the bill (S. 802) granting a pension to Sarah A. Wilcox, now Roberts.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $12 per month, the name of Sarah A. Wilcox, now Roberts, who was a nurse in the United States hospitals during the late war. That the said pension of $12 per month shall be lieu of any pension heretofore granted her.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 802) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Wilcox, now Roberts, submit the following report:

The above claimant is now receiving a pension, heretofore granted by special act, at the rate of $8 per month for services rendered and disabilities incurred in the hospital service of the United States during the late civil war. Being fixed by special act the same can not be increased at the Pension Office.

For the reason that persons having acted as nurses in the late civil war are now growing more infirm by reason of age and the increased results of disabilities incurred in the service, Congress has adopted the rule of granting pensions to nurses for at least $12 per month.

The committee therefore adopt the report of the Senate committee, hereto attached, and recommend that the bill do pass.

SENATE REPORT.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 802) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Wilcox, now Roberts, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant was an army nurse. She was pensioned at the rate of $8 per month by special act. In December, 1886, she applied for increase at the Pension Office, but was rejected on the ground that the rate having been fixed by Congress it could not be changed by the Department.

This bill increases her rate to $12. Inasmuch as the former rate was too low, and she is much disabled by her hospital service, the bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY HEAP NICHOLSON.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. SAWYER) was the bill (S. 1831) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Heap Nicholson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Heap Nicholson, widow of James W. A. Nicholson, late rear-admiral (retired) of the United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask that that bill be laid aside, or rather that it go over to Thursday evening, July 12, under the same order that has been made with reference to several other bills.

Mr McMILLIN. Let us have that report read.

The report was read in part.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the further reading of that report be dispensed with, because we do not expect to consider the bill this evening.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am willing that it shall go over without the previous question being ordered upon it, but if it is to go over with the previous question ordered as in the other cases, I think the report ought to be read, and ought to appear in the RECORD.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read in full, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1831) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Heap Nicholson, submit the following report:

That the beneficiary under this bill is the widow of Rear-Admiral James W. A. Nicholson, one of the most distinguished officers of the Navy. For forty-five years he was in the active service of his country, until 1883, when he was placed upon the retired-list by operation of law, having reached the age of sixty-two years. Being upon the retired-list his widow is not entitled to a pension under existing laws. A. C. Rhoads, medical inspector United States Navy, certifies that—

"The disease causing his death originated in the line of duty from exposure incident to long and faithful service in the United States Navy."

The committee think that this case comes within the principle recognized by Congress in many cases where pensions for the sum of $50 per month have been granted. The Senate committee report is hereto attached and made a part hereof.

The committee believing the case to be a meritorious one would report favorably and recommend that the bill do pass.

[Senate Report No. 679, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1831) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Heap Nicholson, have examined the same and report.

The claimant, Mrs. Mary Heap Nicholson, is the widow of Rear-Admiral James W. A. Nicholson, who, at the time of his death, October 28, 1887, was upon the retired-list of the Navy. The following certificate sufficiently identifies the cause of death as the result of the long service of Admiral Nicholson:

"140 WEST FORTY-FOURTH STREET, NEW YORK,
"December 14, 1887.

"I hereby certify that James William Augustus Nicholson, who was a rear-admiral in the United States Navy, died on the 28th day of October, 1887, of albuminuria, and that the disease causing his death originated in the line of duty from exposure incident to long and faithful service in the United States Navy.

"A. C. RHOADS,
"Medical Inspector, United States Navy."

Admiral Nicholson was engaged in active service for forty-five years, the illustrious character of which is attested in the following sketch of his life.

The passage of the bill is recommended.

Admiral Nicholson was born at Dedham, Mass., on March 10, 1821. He entered the Navy as a midshipman in 1838, and till 1852 (from midshipman to acting lieutenant) served in the Mediterranean, Mexican war, West Indies, and Pacific station. From 1853 to 1855 he was lieutenant on the Vandalia, in the Japanese expedition under Commodore Perry. He was stationed on shore for several months with a guard at Shanghai, China, to protect the foreign settlement during the Chinese rebellion. From 1857 to 1860 he was on duty on the African coast.

Early in 1861 he became executive of the Pocahontas in the engagement with Confederate batteries on Aquia Creek and the Potomac River, and aided in the protection of Washington. His first command was the gun-boat Isaac Smith, in the Du Pont Port Royal expedition. During the battle of Port Royal, November 7, 1861, he evinced two of his characteristic traits—coolness and courage. When the Seminole and other vessels came to offer aid, as his ship was enveloped in clouds of steam, he thanked them, saying he could take care of himself, and told them to keep to their own line in the battle, and he continued fighting until the battle was won. He rendered important service at Fort Pulaski, Fernandina, St. Mary's, and Jacksonville.

In the spring of 1862 he was assigned the command of St. Augustine. After turning it over to the army of occupation, he went to the St. John's River, and while in command of a division of gun-boats on that river was attacked by Confederate infantry and defeated them with considerable loss to the enemy. He kept the river and coast clear of batteries and guerrillas. In February, 1862, he was in engagement with a Confederate flotilla on the Savannah River. In 1862 and 1863 he was ordnance officer at the New York station, the department at that time being one of vast importance. He was known as an able and practical officer of ordnance. In 1863 and 1864 he commanded the Shamrock, on duty in the South Atlantic Blockading Squadron before Charleston.

In 1864, in the West Gulf Blockading Squadron, under Rear-Admiral Farragut, he commanded the monitor Manhattan, and was at the battle of Mobile Bay forts and the capture of the Confederate ram Tennessee, August 5, 1864. Prior to the attack upon the forts the little monitor Manhattan arrived off the bay, and shortly after steamed inside and anchored in a position under fire from the forts, and where no wooden vessel, during the three years of the blockade, had ever been placed; also in such a position that the ram Tennessee could have attacked her at any time with impunity from any interference on the part of the wooden vessels, as they were all outside the bar. The Manhattan was the first to emerge from the cloud of smoke that enveloped the vicinity of the forts, and as she steamed away she took a course directly for the rebel fleet, opening her guns upon it as soon as she passed the forts.

When the rest of the fleet formed a circle about the rebel craft the Manhattan appeared directly in front of the ram to head her off; the shots which penetrated the armor of the Tennessee and caused her surrender were fired from the guns of the Manhattan; and while the entire fleet did good service, the conduct of Commander Nicholson, in the management of the Manhattan alone, in the opinion of many officers of the Navy, saved the Federal fleet from either being driven out of Mobile Bay or being sunk beneath its waters. The Manhattan's boats having been shot away, Commander Nicholson was unable to get on board the Tennessee to receive her surrender, but Captain Johnson, of the Tennessee, afterward stated that he wished to surrender to Commander Nicholson, of the Manhattan, as the latter vessel had conquered him. The Manhattan was also engaged in the bombardment of Fort Morgan.

Commander Nicholson, from 1865 to 1866, commanded the Mohongo, Pacific Squadron, and was present at the bombardment of Valparaiso by the Spanish fleet. From 1867 to 1868 he commanded the Wampanoag, the fastest steamer in the world at that time. From 1868 to 1870 he was navigation officer at the New York yard. In 1871 and 1872 he was captain of the flag-ship Lancaster, Brazil Squadron, and brought home the Portsmouth. He was commissioned commodore November 8, 1873. In 1873 and 1874 he was a member of, and in 1875 and 1876 was president of, the board for examination of officers for promotion and for retirement, which board also revised the Navy Regulations of 1876. On September 1, 1876, he took command of the Brooklyn navy-yard, which station he commanded till May 1, 1880.

On September 1, 1881, Admiral Nicholson was assigned to the command of the European Squadron. On June 27 of the following year he anchored his flag-ship in the harbor of Alexandria, and awaited the exciting events that were to follow. When he received official notice, July 10, at 4 a. m., from Admiral Seymour, commanding the British naval forces, that hostilities might occur within twenty-four hours, and requesting him to move the vessels under his command out of the line of fire, Admiral Nicholson sent the information at once to the consulate, and prepared to receive any and all refugees who might seek protection. At 3 p. m. he moved outside the bar with the squadron, having one hundred and three refugees on board. At 7 a. m., the 11th, the English opened fire upon the forts, and at 5 p. m. the forts were silenced. Fires raged in the city for two days and nights.

On the 14th Admiral Nicholson again crossed the bar and anchored in the lower harbor. He sent to the Khedive, stating his desire to re-establish the consulate. The Khedive granted the request, and begged that the admiral would aid in extinguishing the fires, and also in preserving order. Admiral Nicholson landed one hundred marines, guarded the consulate, aided in extinguishing the fires and burying the dead lying about the streets, himself visiting the consulate and the burning district. Throughout the whole Alexandria episode Admiral Nicholson's conduct was prompt, energetic, and efficient, and he received the general commendation of all Europe and the approval of his own Government.

In February, 1883, Admiral Nicholson was relieved of the command of the European Squadron by Admiral Baldwin, and on March 11 was placed on the retired-list by operation of law, having reached the age of sixty-two years.

Mr. SAWYER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that this bill take the same course as other bills of the same character; that is, that it go over until the evening of Thursday, July 12, that the previous question be ordered upon it, and that debate be limited to fifteen minutes with the right to amend.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Why was this man relieved from his command?

Mr. SAWYER. I do not remember the facts of the case.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Then ought we to order the previous question upon the bill unless somebody here knows the facts of the case?

Mr. SPRINGER. There will be fifteen minutes for debate.

Mr. SAWYER. Let it go over subject to amendment. This officer was one of the most distinguished officers in the Navy.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. But why was he relieved from his command?

Mr. SAWYER. That will appear later.

The motion of Mr. SAWYER was agreed to, and the bill was laid over until Thursday evening, July 12, under the order indicated above.

JUDSON KNIGHT.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (called up for consideration by Mr. HAUGEN) was the bill (S. 1192) granting a pension to Judson Knight.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Judson Knight, late chief of scouts at headquarters of the armies operating against Richmond, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, as though he had been regularly mustered into the United States Army with the rank of captain of volunteers.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1192) granting a pension to Judson Knight, submit the following report:

The evidence shows very conclusively that the claimant served for a long time during the war with the Army of the Potomac as scout, and part of the time was chief of scouts in that Army; that he rendered very valuable services, and enjoyed the confidence of such officers as Generals Rosecrans, Phil. Kearney, Butterfield and Sharpe, and that he is now suffering from disabilities incurred while acting as scout.

The committee believe that, in consequence of his valuable services, his disabilities, and poverty, this is a meritorious case, and they therefore adopt the Senate report hereto attached, and recommend that the bill do pass.

SENATE REPORT.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill granting a pension to Judson Knight, have examined the same and report:

This is a bill to pension Judson Knight, whose services are identified by the best possible proof, and whose disabilities and need are equally apparent.

A particular account of his services is given by Bvt. Maj. Gen. George H. Sharpe, who says:

"During a considerable part of the time that I served on the general staff of the Army of the Potomac, and afterwards on the general staff of the armies operating against Richmond, in Virginia, Judson Knight was employed at these headquarters as a scout. He enjoyed an enviable reputation as a man to whom a bold enterprise could be intrusted without endangering the confidence of his superior officers. At times he rendered services that received signal praise of the major-general commanding the Army of the Potomac and of the lieutenant-general commanding the armies operating against Richmond.

"When he came to headquarters he brought high testimonials of his services with the late General Phil. Kearny. He was immediately engaged by me to serve with us. In 1864 he was made chief of scouts of the Army of the Potomac, and in that capacity, and until the close of the war, rendered most efficient service. At a later date, and in preparing for the last campaign, he gave substantial aid in establishing lines of communication between Richmond and our headquarters. Throughout his service his reports were always relied on, and I take pleasure in saying he is a man who deserves well of his country. He is now crippled from the effects of these services, and it affords me pleasure to make this testimonial in behalf of one who was always faithful and gallant in the performance of his duty."

In a letter to the Secretary of War General Rosecrans said:

"Capt. Judson Knight's services in the late war laid the foundation of his present grave disability; but he has hitherto forborne to ask a pension. After reading the high testimonials he has of service as scout and chief of scouts, and knowing the rare combination of courage, intelligence, and fidelity demanded in that service, I feel a warm interest in his case, and shall introduce a bill for pensioning him. I unite with Senator Sewell in asking you to interest yourself in securing him some suitable employment by which he can support himself until he gets legal relief."

In a letter to Captain Knight the late General Winfield S. Hancock says:

"I can state with pleasure that I knew you in the Army as one of the chief of scouts, and recall one occasion when you came to me on duty. My remembrance of you is that you were a meritorious person and performed good service."

Dr. Bronson, of the District of Columbia, testifies to his acquaintance with and treatment of the claimant. He began to treat him in 1865 for varicose veins and varicose ulcers, and his disabilities are such that he can only perform such duties as can be done in a sitting posture.

The committee have more testimony to the same effect. The pension laws do not cover his case, but it is evident that he has earned a pension and needs it.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

AMANDA W. BEACH.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (called up for consideration by Mr. SAWYER) was the bill (S. 2255) granting a pension to Amanda W. Beach.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Amanda W. Beach, dependent mother of Henry H. Beach, late a private in Company D, Seventh Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2255) granting a pension to Amanda W. Beach, submit the following report:

The evidence clearly shows that the son of the claimant lost his life in the service of his country; that he sent home to his parents while in the Army money for their support, and that the widowed mother is now poor and dependent.

Your committee therefore adopt the Senate report, hereto attached and made a part hereof, and recommend that the bill do pass.

[Senate Report No. 468, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Amanda W. Beach, have examined the same and report:

The petitioner prays for the passage of a bill granting her a pension as the dependent mother of Henry H. Beach, a private in Company D, Seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, who died at Warrenton, Va., January 22, 1864. The claim was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground of non-dependence, and on appeal to the Secretary the decision of the Commissioner was sustained.

In this case only a brief statement of the facts is necessary. When the son enlisted the father had no property, no income from any source save his daily earnings and the contributions of this son. They had three other sons, all of whom were in the Army. At the time of Henry's enlistment it is stated, as a justification for denying the mother relief, that the father was able to work at his trade of mill-wright, and that he earned $2 a day and upwards; and some witnesses testify that they think he may have earned $450 a year, but they do not know. He had nothing but his earnings; all his sons had left him and gone to the war; he lived in a village, paid house rent, experienced the hardship of high war prices for all the comforts of life, to be paid for with a depreciated currency.

One or two of his neighbors give a somewhat rose-colored view of his circumstances, founded upon his ability at that time to earn a mechanic's wages; but, judging from the son Henry's advice, it seems that the family knew more about the pressure they were under than those who described their circumstances as comparatively prosperous. He wrote from the Army that he had sent them help in money from his pay; that he had received no pay in four months, or he would have sent it more promptly; that it would probably be four months before he would be paid again, and in the mean time he says:

"I had a letter from Captain French, of Berkeley, a short time ago, and he told me to write to you and tell you if you were to write to the selectmen of Berkeley and tell them how you are situated, you could draw from the State through them $1 a week, perhaps $2. Tell them how you are situated."

The family knew their own need, and the neighbors did not. There was no income but the product of his day's work. He was then advanced in years; he grew older and more infirm; he died, and his death deprived the widow of her last support. Husband and sons were gone, and she had no alternative but to appeal for a pension.

As to property, it appears that two years after the son's death they bought a house. The purchase price is not stated; and this is the way they succeeded in getting a roof over their heads. They obtained $130 bounty after their son's death, and $50 that he had saved, and $200 from oldest remaining son after his discharge from service. These sums amounted to $380, and it probably covered the cost of the house, for it does not appear that there is any incumbrance upon it. This house has been variously estimated at $315, $400, and last as high as $750. There was no personal property, no income but that resulting from the father's day's work and the soldier's contributions.

There is not a doubt that these old people had a struggle with poverty from the day their four sons went to the war down to the time of the death of the husband; not a doubt that there has not been a day that they have not been more or less dependent, and upon whom if not their son?

The committee report the accompanying bill with a recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN R. WHEELOCK.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (called up for consideration by Mr. HAUGEN) was the bill (S. 1193) granting a pension to John R. Wheelock.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John R. Wheelock, dependent father of William H. H. Wheelock, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1193) granting a pension to John R. Wheelock, submit the following report:

The evidence shows that the son of the claimant was killed in the Wilderness May 5, 1864; that the claimant is now poor and dependent, and for these and other reasons set forth in the Senate report adopted as part hereof and hereto attached, the committee recommend that the bill do pass.

[Senate Report No. 425, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The claimant is the dependent father of William H. H. Wheelock, who was a private in Company E, Seventh Wisconsin Infantry, and was killed at the Wilderness, Virginia, May 5, 1864. The Commissioner of Pensions rejected the claim on the ground that the father was not dependent at the time of his son's death. Appeal was taken, and the Pension Office decision was sustained.

There is evidence proving the dependence of the father at the time of enlistment and death of his son and ever since; that he was physically disabled to an extent that prevented him from earning sufficient for his own and his family's support; and there is a bundle of letters in the file from his son showing that he contributed to their necessities from his soldier's pay.

Silas B. Rist, sr., testifies that he knew claimant since they were boys. They lived in the same vicinity in Wisconsin, and their families visited each other all through and subsequent to the war. Claimant's financial condition was limited; he was hard pressed to meet his engagements; his transactions in real estate were trading one piece of barren, sandy land for another. He was a farmer, but his physical condition was such that he had to quit farming. He did not speculate or make money, for he had but little capital.

H. von Lilienthal lived at Harrisonville, the claimant's home, from 1851 to 1881; was all this time engaged in merchandise; had dealings with claimant, and knew his financial condition, which was very limited. He did some team work for affiant, but was physically unable to do much. He traded one piece of poor, sandy land for another a few times, but he did not speculate to amount to anything.

Walter Bissell testifies that he was greatly dependent upon his son at the time of his enlistment and death.

Michael Finnegan, assessor of the town in which claimant lived and afterwards register of deeds, says he does not believe claimant's income from real estate has been but little more than enough on an average to pay the taxes; that from his physical condition he was not able to do hard work; and that his income from all sources would not much exceed $100.

Jason Shurtleff gives similar testimony, and adds: Claimant is a man of steady habits; that claimant's opponents at Harrisonville are men of doubtful veracity: that he has lived in Harrisonville from 1860 to 1871, and knows whereof he speaks.

James Tarleton has been acquainted with claimant more than thirty years; knows that the small property owned by him with his own labor was not sufficient for his support in and during the year the soldier died; that he is still dependent upon those not legally bound for his support.

In 1864 the assessment rolls show that the claimant owned some unproductive village lots, the assessed value of which was about $400. There is no evidence that he had productive property or that he was a speculator.

There are many more affidavits, to which the committee do not think it necessary to refer. It is shown beyond question that he was dependent. As to his physical incapacity at the time of his son's death and since, Dr. Meacher, examining surgeon, says:

"This man sustained a fracture of lower end of ulna of left arm twenty years ago. There is considerble deformity, with more or less impairment of function. He sustained at same time an injury to right shoulder, causing anchylosis of shoulder-joint to a considerable extent, though not total. When he was a boy he received a cut with a scythe on right knee, which evidently severed the ligamentum patella and injured the joint more or less; its movements are impaired to some extent, and I have no doubt it is weak and incapable of much exercise, as walking. I think the wound of the knee disabled him about one-third since boyhood, and the injuries of wrist and shoulder one-third more for the past twenty years, or since he received the injury."

The evidence is conclusive as to his dependence, as to his physical incapacity, as to his son's contributions.

There were two special examinations, at which several witnesses gave strong testimony in favor of the claim.

In his report the special examiner speaks of the enmity existing against the claimant, and of the bad reputation of those who testify against him—all notoriously bad citizens, he says. The chief ground of prejudice is political. To show the extent of it, he says:

"I was notified by an anonymous letter that if a pension was granted him I would never be able to appear in that community again without danger to my life."

He reported in favor of allowance, and notwithstanding this and the ample testimony in support of the claim it was rejected.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANNIE GIBSON YATES.

Mr. MAISH. Now, Mr. Chairman, I beg leave to call up House bill No. 7708 to increase the pension of Annie Gibson Yates, which has been passed over.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Annie Gibson Yates, widow of Capt. George W. Yates, late of the United States Army, and pay her a pension of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act, and this pension to be in lieu of that which she is now receiving.

Mr. MAISH. I move now to take up from the Speaker's table the Senate bill and substitute it for the House bill.

Mr. MATSON. I object to that. The Senate bill has not been reached for consideration.

Mr. MAISH. It is true that it has not been reached on the Calendar.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7708) to increase the pension of Annie Gibson Yates, having considered the same, report as follows:

Capt. George W. Yates came from a family distinguished both in Army and State. His great-grandfather, Colonel Barber, of the Revolutionary army, was killed in action while at the head of his regiment.

Captain Yates was a distinguished soldier and served during the rebellion first as a lieutenant in Fourth Michigan Volunteers, then successfully as aid-de-camp on the staff of Maj. Gen. Alfred Pleasonton, with whom he served for about four years, participating with him in all the great cavalry fights of the Potomac. He accompanied that officer to the West and served with him in the campaign against General Price, who invaded Missouri in 1864. He was appointed captain in the Thirteenth Missouri Cavalry, but remained on the staff of General Pleasonton till the close of the war, when he was appointed by the President captain in the Seventh United States Cavalry. He received the appointment of major for gallant and "meritorious services" during the war, and was appointed lieutenant-colonel for "conspicuous gallantry at Gettysburgh."

At Fredericksburgh Captain Yates was dangerously wounded by a shell which exploded in the stomach of the horse he was riding.

Captain Yates was mustered out of service January 11, 1866, and accepted commission as second lieutenant Second Cavalry May 5, 1866, and served as such until August 19, 1867, when he accepted appointment as captain Seventh Cavalry.

He was killed June 25, 1876, in action with Sioux Indians, on Little Big Horn River, Montana, the same battle in which General Custer fell.

The extraordinary sad details of this unfortunate battle are too fresh in the minds of the American people to require repetition here.

Mrs. Yates is the only widow of a captain in the Custer disaster. She is greatly dependent on her own exertions for a living, having for ten years labored untiringly for the support of her three children.

Although her children are at present receiving $2 per month, yet even the youngest will shortly arrive at the age at which her pension will cease, and in consideration of this fact, and also that she is in delicate health, unable to work, and having no relatives able to give her pecuniary assistance, Mrs. Yates asks for a special act of Congress granting her $50 per month.

Your committee are of the opinion that the widow of this valiant officer ought to be granted an increase of pension, and they therefore recommend the passage of the bill, with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "to" in line 4, and insert in lieu thereof the words "increase the pension of $20 now received by Mrs. Annie Gibson Yates, widow of Capt. George W. Yates, to $30 per month, to take effect from and after the passage of this act."

Mr. MAISH. I move to amend the bill by striking out "$30" and inserting "$40." The original bill as introduced by me provided for a pension of $50 a month. The Senate reduced the amount to $40, and the House reduced it to $30. Afterwards the Senate bill came over to the House and was reported favorably, and now the Senate bill as reported to the House recommends a pension of $40. That is the reason I offer this amendment, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending reported by the committee. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] is an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions what is the usual pension allowed by the committee to widows of this class?

Mr. MATSON. The committee on Invalid Pensions has never increased the pensions of widows of captains so far as I know. I have never known of an instance. The Committee on Pensions have done so in some instances—not many.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But the Committee on Invalid Pensions has declined to do so?

Mr. MATSON. I can not recall an instance in which that committee has done it.

Mr. MAISH. I understand that this bill has been reported favorably by the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MATSON. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been reported with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "directed to" and insert "increase the pension of $20 now received by Mrs. Annie Gibson Yates, widow of Capt. George W. Yates, to $30 per month, to take effect from and after the passage of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] propose to amend that amendment?

Mr. MAISH. I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MATSON. I did not listen very attentively to the reading of the report in this case, but if there is any strong reason given why the widow of this captain should have her pension increased it has escaped my notice.

Mr. MAISH. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MATSON. But the proposition of the committee is to increase her pension from $20 to $30 per month. The bane of our pension legislation is this increasing of the pensions of the widows of officers. The Committee on Invalid Pensions, so far as I remember—there may be some exceptional cases—has refused to recommend such increases, except in the cases of general officers, and those increases were wrong. I admit that. I do not stand upon that action of the committee as fair, nor have I advocated it, although in one or two instances I have been disposed to tolerate it for special reasons. There is a case pending now in which I would be disposed to tolerate an increase, the case of the widow of General Stannard, of Vermont, whom we all knew as a very gallant man, and whose widow has been bedridden for years. But to increase the pensions of the widows of officers generally to these large amounts is an outrage upon the other pensioners, an outrage which the House ought not to commit, and whenever I am called upon to speak of it at all I must speak in this way, because it is my honest conviction and sincere belief that such action is a very great wrong and outrage upon the other pensioners, and especially upon the widows of the private soldiers. The proposition in this case, as I understand it, is to give this widow $30 a month instead of $20, and if there is any strong or good reason for the increase I would like to hear it.

Mr. MAISH. I quite agree with the sentiment which the gentleman who has just taken his seat has expressed upon the question of granting pensions; but I think this an unusually meritorious case. I have no personal acquaintance with this applicant. She is the widow of Captain Yates, who was one of the victims of the Custer massacre. By the death of her husband she was suddenly left almost penniless, a widow with three children to support.

Now, I maintain that if large pensions are granted to general officers, cases like this present a very strong appeal to our consideration. If I am not mistaken, the pensions of widows of officers who were killed in that disastrous engagement have been increased. I am not quite certain about that, but such is my recollection.

This being, as it seems to me, a very meritorious case, I trust the bill will pass, as recommended by the committee. It seems to me that the increase of $10 is a very small boon, which the House may very well grant. This man was a gallant soldier, who served during the war, and lost his life in the massacre to which I have referred.

Mr. CHEADLE. I trust the Committee of the Whole will not agree to the increase asked in this case. This claimant is already drawing a pension of $20 a month, the full amount allowed to the widows of officers of the rank of her husband. I grant that this man was a gallant soldier; but that is no reason why Congress should discriminate in this way and give to the widow of one soldier who died in the defense of the Government a greater pension than that authorized by law. Suppose the widow is poor; we are all very well aware of the fact that there are one hundred thousand other claimants whose cases are pending and who are equally poor. We ought to be just before we are generous.

The question being taken upon agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee, it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANN VERNEUIL.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut. I desire to call up a bill which has been passed over—Senate bill 1004, granting a pension to Ann Verneuil.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ann Verneuil, widow of Francis Verneuil, late of the Ordnance Department, United States Army.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1004) granting a pension to Ann Verneuil, have considered the same, and report it back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The facts in the case are correctly set forth in the following Senate report:

[Senate report No. 342, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The claimant, Ann Verneuil, is the widow of Francis Verneuil, who enlisted January 19, 1858, in Company G, Second United States Infantry, and served continuously until April 16, 1881, when he was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability for "epilepsy contracted in the service." At the time of his death Verneuil was drawing a pension of $50 a month on account of this disability, which resulted from an injury to the head incurred while the soldier was on duty at Philadelphia, during the Centennial, November 15, 1876. As a further consequence of this injury he became insane, and was subject to such frequent attacks that he was discharged as above. May 23, 1882, he was admitted to St. Elizabeth Government Insane Asylum, near Washington, and continued there until his death, January 7, 1885.

The widow's claim for pension was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the fatal disease (pneumonia) did not result from the service of the soldier. On this point Dr. W. W. Godding, superintendent of the asylum, submitted the following statement:

"The immediate cause of his death was pneumonia, supervening upon an attack of acute hepatitis, the latter due probably to a general enfeebled condition of the general health, and possibly malarial poisoning. Epilepsy, combined with the necessary indoor life when accompanied with furore (mania), as in this case, has a powerful depressing effect on all the organs of the body, rendering them peculiarly susceptible to and ill able to resist any intercurrent disease."

The statement is also made that the pneumonia resulted from a cold taken while the patient was in a nearly naked condition, as, during an attack, he had torn nearly everything off himself.

This soldier served more than twenty years in the United States Army, faithfully and well. The cause of his death would seem to have been a very reasonable result of the injury received and the various diseases he suffered from during this long period of service, and it is only just for his widow to receive a pension.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. AURELIA HILLYER.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. HAUGEN) was the bill (S. 2151) granting a pension to Mrs. Aurelia Hillyer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Aurelia Hillyer, mother of Lucius W. Hillyer, late a private in Company E, Fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The committee believing the above to be a meritorious claim, the fact of the death of the son in the service, and the present dependence of the claimant being shown, would adopt the Senate report hereto attached as their own and recommend that the bill do pass.

SENATE REPORT.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2151) granting a pension to Mrs. Aurelia Hillyer, have examined the same and report:

The claimant is the mother of Lucius W. Hillyer, Fourth Wisconsin Cavalry, who was mustered into service July 2, 1861, and died in Charity General Hospital, New Orleans, August 8, 1862. The claim was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground of non-dependence. To arrive at this decision a special examination was made, which brought out testimony relating to the business transactions of the father.

John L. Chapin, a neighbor of the Hillyers, and who has known the father of the soldier-son, testifies as to the pecuniary condition of the former. From this it appears that in 1862 the father made his living by purchasing produce, his brother furnishing the money. He had no personal property of any value. He had a small house, valued at $600, in which the family lived. He had another house, valued at $1,500, on which there was a mortgage of $1,400, and a warehouse, valued at $600, mortgaged for $500. This statement shows that he had no income from his heavily incumbered property, which was finally sacrificed to the incumbrances. His income was solely from his daily attendance to the business with which he was intrusted, and amounted to $2 a day, which the Pension Office regards as an ample support. Finally he was deprived of this, and his family were obliged to depend upon contributions from their children.

It is distinctly stated in the evidence that the revenue from the mortgaged property barely covered interest and taxes.

In his testimony, taken by the special examiner, Hillyer, the father, tells a straightforward story, covering all the years from 1862 down to 1887. He had a hard struggle, and came out of it an old man, with nothing—no resources whatever upon which he could depend for support for himself and wife. There is evidence that the son recognized his obligation to his mother, and that during his short service he contributed to her relief.

The reputation of the family is conceded to be good in every respect by all who testify. The conclusion suggested by all evidence bearing upon the point of non-dependence is that the father made a courageous struggle to succeed in various ventures; that he was unfortunate in all; that he was never free from embarrassment; that from his best efforts his income was inadequate to a comfortable support; that at the present time they are very aged people, without means except such as comes in contributions from a son-in-law.

It may not be a case to which the pension laws are strictly applicable for relief, but it is evidently one to which Congress may extend the small pittance for which the bill provides.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

RACHEL PLUMMER.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. SAWYER) was the bill (S. 2183) granting a pension to Rachel Plummer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rachel Plummer, mother of Charles Plummer, late a private of Company B, Seventh Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The evidence shows that the beneficiary is now "advanced in years, struggling with poverty, and takes in washing that she may have bread." Her son was killed in the battle at South Mountain, Maryland, September 4, 1862, and while living contributed to the support of his parents. The Pension Office rejected the claim solely on the ground that the beneficiary was not dependent at the time of her son's death, although two special examiners reported in favor of her claim.

The fact of death of son, his contributions to the mother's support, and her present poverty fully appear, and the committee believe that this case comes within the rule universally recognized by this committee and indorsed by Congress, as well as by Executive approval, and they therefore report favorably and recommend that the bill do pass.

The Senate report is hereto attached and made a part hereof.

[Senate Report No. 651, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2183) granting a pension to Rachel Plummer, have examined the same, and report:

This is a bill for the relief of Rachel Plummer, mother of Charles Plummer, who was a private in Company B, Seventh Wisconsin Regiment, and was killed at South Mountain, Maryland, September 14, 1862.

The ground of rejection by the Pension Bureau is that the claimant was not at the time of and prior to his enlistment dependent upon her son.

It is in evidence that for some time previous to the soldier's death he at least in part, if not wholly, supported his mother; that he sometimes spoke of her dependence for support upon him; that he always considered it his duty to aid and assist her to as great an extent as was in his power, always having careful regard for comfort and welfare; that he contributed regularly to her support for at least four years prior to his decease, and the details are given as to the manner of his efforts in her behalf.

And there is ample proof to show that his assistance was necessary. The husband was a wagon-maker. He was not in good health, and his earnings amounted to about $70 a year for several continuous years. He had a shop and some tools. He took a partner; the latter says he worked and divided the proceeds, which was enough to support the Plummer family, with what the mother could earn by taking washing.

There is a reference to the county record to show that the husband owned real property, which was the case, amounting to a few hundred dollars, but it was encumbered. Again it is urged against her claim that they bought and sold, which the mother admits they did, but there was no accumulation. They bought with the proceeds of sales and money realized on her husband's tools when he was no longer able to work. It does not appear that they had any revenue from property, only from his struggle in working, when he could, at his trade, and the mother's washing.

The Commissioner of Pensions says the claim was rejected after a careful special examination on the ground of non-dependence. There were two special examinations. In his report one of the examiners says:

"It is my opinion, formed from a review of the testimony and from the general demeanor of the claimant and witnesses, hat there is clearly a case of dependence, and that pension should be granted."

The other special examiner says:

"It is my opinion that the case is made and should be admitted."

The husband was not apparently diseased, but it is in evidence, and so reported by both the special examiners, that he was a feeble man at the time of his son's enlistment, and that he continued so. He could not support his wife, faithfully as he tried to do so. The son knew this, and he recognized his duty to make his mother comfortable, and in doing so he performed the part of a dutiful and loving son. He was killed; they were deprived of his sympathy and assistance, and the mother, who gave her son to save her country, advanced in years and struggling with poverty, takes washing that she may have bread.

The committee agree with the special examiners that the pension should be granted, and they regard it as unfortunate that the Commissioner of Pensions was not of the same opinion.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY M. BRIGGS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 899) for the relief of Mary M. Briggs.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary M. Briggs, a volunteer nurse during the war of the rebellion, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The committee think, from the statements contained in the Senate report hereto annexed and made a part hereof, that the claimant is entitled to a pension as army nurse. It appears that she is now sixty-seven years of age, a widow, her husband serving as a soldier, and that she acted as nurse nearly four years. But the committee see no special reason why the same be allowed for a sum greater than the usual sum allowed.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass, with an amendment striking out the words "twenty-five," in the seventh line, and inserting in the place thereof the word "twelve."

SENATE REPORT.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a bill for the relief of Mary M. Briggs, have examined the same, and report:

Mrs. Briggs was a volunteer nurse, recognized and employed by the Military Department. She served one year at the hospital in St. Louis, and at Ironton, and again at Harvey Hospital, Madison, where she remained until the close of the war.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The amendment reported by the committee, to strike out "twenty-five," in the 7th line of the bill and insert "twelve," was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Bills of the following titles (reported adversely from the Committee on Invalid Pensions), being the next pension business on the Private Calendar, were severally laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that they be indefinitely postponed:

A bill (S. 1041) granting a pension to Mary E. Walker, M. D.;

A bill (S. 822) granting a pension to Sarah Errickson, widow of James S. Errickson, late seaman United States Navy;

A bill (S. 817) granting a pension to Peter Stusse;

A bill (S. 830) granting a pension to David Williams; and

A bill (S. 897) for the relief of Rev. Corydon Millard.

ANN CLARY.

Mr. MACDONALD. I call up the bill (H. R. 7253) granting a pension to the widow of Samuel Clary.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of the widow of Samuel Clary, late a private in Company I, Twenty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, war of 1861.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

Samuel Clary was enrolled in Company I, Twenty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, June 20, 1861, and was discharged March 1, 1863.

William Ashen, captain commanding company, in his certificate of disability for discharge, says:

"The above-named person (Samuel Clary) has been unfit for duty from the above-mentioned time (sixty days) by a chronic affection of the spine, caused by exposure and hard labor in the service of the United States as teamster."

William Walton, assistant surgeon of the Twenty-fifth Ohio Regiment, says:

"I certify that I have carefully examined the said Samuel Clary, a private of Capt. William Ashen's company, and find him incapable of performing the duties of a soldier because of lumbago of about one year's duration, accompanied by continual pain in the lumbar region, brought on by exposure while on march. He has been under treatment at intervals during the greater part of the time. Latterly the system has become considerably debilitated, so much so that he has been unable to perform military duty of the lightest character."

The evidence on special examination shows that the soldier was a confirmed invalid from the date of his discharge until the date of his death, February 12,

1879. Dr. Metly, who visited the soldier three or four times before his death, is also dead, and there is no medical evidence on file as to the immediate cause of death. John D. Clary, son of the soldier, says he lived at home during the last sickness and death of his father; that he was confined to the house from October 15, 1878, to the date of his death, February 12, 1879; that Dr. Metly called his disease affection of spine and kidneys; recollects that he said it was caused from exposure in the service; he was not so sick as to cause alarm, for he could help himself and get around the house up to the last five minutes before his death, which was produced from choking with a hemorrhage.

E. S. Weymouth says he lived near neighbor to soldier from spring of 1871 till he died, and during that time never saw him when he was able to do any hard work. He was always complaining of a pain in his back. He told him a number of times he had disease of spine, and claimed he got it in service.

Mrs. Anna Wellman says she was neighbor to soldier from spring of 1871 to death; was frequently at his house; heard him complain of pain in his spine and kidneys; never knew him to do a day's work, as he was unable to work; continued to grow worse until he died. During the last four months of his life he could scarcely lie down an hour on account of severe pain in his back.

All the testimony, and there is an abundance of it from neighbors and others who knew the deceased soldier, corroborates the statements above given. While there is no medical evidence before us as to the immediate cause of death, yet the committee are forced to the conclusion that the death of the soldier was caused by the diseases contracted in the Army and in line of duty.

Your committee believe this to be a very meritorious case, and therefore submit a favorable report, and recommend the passage of the bill, with the following amendment: In line 6, after the word "of," insert the words "Ann Clary."

The amendment reported by the committee, to insert, after the word "of," in line 6, the words "Ann Clary," was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PETER THOMPSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar (the consideration of which was requested by Mr. DOCKERY) was the bill (S. 1997) granting a pension to Peter Thompson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, directed and required to place on the pension-rolls, subject to the laws and regulations, the name of Peter Thompson, late a private of Jeremiah Smith's company, Second Regiment Illinois Mounted Militia in Black Hawk war.

The report (by Mr. WALKER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1997) granting a pension to Peter Thompson, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to submit the following report:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions is as follows:

"Claimant enlisted in the Black Hawk war, in Capt. Jeremiah Smith's company, Second Regiment Illinois Mounted Militia, as a sergeant, April 20, 1832, and was discharged with the company May 27, 1832.

"The claim was rejected May 23, 1884, on the ground of no record evidence and claimant's inability to furnish satisfactory testimony connecting the alleged rheumatism with the service and line of duty.

"The testimony in the claim is as follows:

"The claimant states that he is now seventy years of age, and is suffering from sciatic rheumatism contracted by exposure in the service, in line of duty, May or June, 1832; that he is unable to furnish testimony showing origin of rheumatism in the service for the reason that he has been unable to ascertain the whereabouts of either the officers or enlisted men of his company; that the rheumatism was contracted by sleeping on the ground in wet weather, and mainly affects his left leg; that his occupation is that of a farmer, and he is unable to do but little work of any kind; that he is credibly informed that all of the officers of his company are now dead.

"In affidavit filed September 25, 1883, John W. West, of Lamonte, Mo., testifies that claimant is the identical Peter Thompson who served in Captain Jones's company of Illinois Volunteers in the Black Hawk war.

"Millie Boon, of Barnetts, Mo., testifies that claimant was lame upon his return home from the war, caused by exposure incident to the service; that his lameness was caused by sciatic rheumatism, which has continued to the present time.

"Thompson M. Howser, of Eldon, Mo., testifies that he has been acquainted with claimant since 1850, and that the said claimant has suffered from injury in the left hip during all the time of his acquaintance with him.

"Malinda Howser, of Aurora Springs, Mo., testifies to a crippled condition of claimant's leg since 1850.

"G. M. Bandy, of Eldon, Mo., testifies that claimant has been lame in his left leg from rheumatism contracted in the Black Hawk war since 1854.

"Henry Wrafford, of Litchfield, Ill., testifies to continuance of chronic rheumatism since 1858.

"Howard Jackson testifies to the continuance of rheumatism since 1867, greatly disabling claimant for manual labor.

"Moses Kelsy, of Eldon, Mo., testifies that claimant has been disabled for manual labor since 1867, by reason of disability causing lameness.

"Samuel T. Harrison corroborates the testimony of Moses Kelsy.

"Dr. L. M. Camp, of Aurora Springs, Ill., in affidavit filed May 26, 1886, testifies that he has known claimant for four years; that upon examination finds the joints of his left leg quite stiff and growing worse all the time, incapacitating him for manual labor, and that the said stiffness of joints is caused by chronic rheumatism.

"The examining surgeon, under date of September 5, 1883, gives claimant a total rating for disability caused by rheumatism.

"Although there is no evidence showing the existence of rheumatism in the service, it is quite clearly established that claimant was affected by rheumatism on his return from the war in 1832, and has suffered from the same disability to the present time.

"The facts in the case seem to warrant favorable action, and your committee, therefore, recommend the passage of the bill."

Your committee concur in the conclusion reached therein, and return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MATILDA BLEUMNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1906) granting a pension to Matilda Bleumner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Matilda Bleumner, dependent mother of Charles McL. Bleumner, late a private of Company K, Eighth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. WALKER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1906) granting a pension to Matilda Bleumner, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to submit the following report:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions is as follows:

"The claimant is the mother of Charles Bleumner, who was a private in Company K, Eighth Regiment of Kansas Volunteer Infantry, in the war of the rebellion. He enlisted at St. Louis, Mo., October 1, 1861, and served until February 12, 1864, when he died at Danville, Va.

"The soldier was at the battle of Chickamauga, and after the engagement is charged with deserting at Chattanooga, Tenn. This charge of desertion, as appears from the records of the Adjutant-General's Office, was afterwards removed, we must presume for good reasons. The soldier was then, October 20, 1863, captured at Philadelphia, Tenn.; taken as a prisoner of war first to Richmond, then to Danville, Va., where he died at the time above stated, while yet a prisoner. The circumstances of his capture are not shown, but nothing being proven to the contrary, we necessarily conclude that he was taken in the line of his duty while in service. The enemy treated him as a prisoner of war; that is, as one taken in arms against them. We must, therefore, deem him to have been so taken as belonging to and engaged with the military forces of the United States at the time of his capture, imprisonment, and death.

"The evidence shows that the soldier died unmarried, never having been married; that his father died before the war; that he lived with the claimant, his mother, before and up to the time of his enlistment, and that he contributed to her support and maintenance both before and after the date of his enlistment. The claimant is eighty years old, in very poor and dependent circumstances.

"We think the claim meritorious, and recommend the passage of the bill."

Your committee concur in the conclusions reached, and return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MACDONALD moved that the committee rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 9, noes 11.

So the committee refused to rise.

Bills of the following titles were passed over, no one asking for their consideration:

A bill (S. 2137) for the relief of Rosalvo Sage; and

A bill (S. 1922) for the relief of Thaddeus S. Stewart.

CHARLES TIDMARSH.

The next business on the Private Calendar (the consideration of which was requested by Mr. HUNTER) was the bill (S. 2100) granting a pension to Charles Tidmarsh.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles Tidmarsh, late of Company C, First Kentucky Regiment Frankfort Battalion Capital Guards.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2100) granting a pension to Charles Tidmarsh, have had the same under consideration and make the following report:

This claim was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that at the time of receiving his disabilities the claimant was a member of a State organization, and so, under the provisions of section 4693, Revised Statutes, the claim should have been completed by July 4, 1874, whereas it was not filed until June 24, 1886.

Tidmarsh enlisted May 20, 1864, under the name Charles Williams, as a member of Company C, First Regiment Kentucky Capital Guards, and was honorably discharged February 28, 1865. While in the line of duty, during an attack by guerrillas, the claimant was wounded in the left side, the left shoulder, and the left arm, and also slightly in the breast. His disability is rated at total, and his suffering is great. During the winter season he suffers intense pain in his wounds, and has had to remove South to escape the Northern winters. The only question is whether there is sufficient merit in the case to warrant its allowance, notwithstanding the statutory limitation. The claimant says:

"The reason I did not appiy for a pension years ago was I was making a very good living, and as my expenses were small, I did not need it."

The claimant has a wife and four children to support, and is certainly a worthy object of relief. He thought he could make a living without asking the Government for what was due him, and now that his wounds are troubling him more and more and he is getting old, this self-sacrifice ought not to stand in the way of his receiving his equitable deserts.

Your committee deem this case an exceptional one, and recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MACDONALD moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MAISH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the special order, had directed him to report to the House sundry bills with various recommendations.

BILLS PASSED.

House bills of the following titles, reported without amendment, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 4785) granting a pension to Rosanna K. Griffin;

A bill (H. R. 9346) granting a pension to Frank H. Reed; and

A bill (H. R. 7162) for the relief of Mary Nevels.

Amendments reported to bills of the following titles were severally agreed to; and the bills as amended were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 7708) to increase the pension of Annie Gibson Yates;

A bill (H. R. 6057) to place on the pension-roll the name of Edward Healy;

The title was also amended to read "A bill to increase the pension of Edward Healy;" and

A bill (H. R. 7253) granting a pension to the widow of Samuel Clary.

LAID ON THE TABLE.

A bill (H. R. 7247) to increase the pension of Mary A. Gibson, widow of Commander William Gibson, was, in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole, laid on the table.

SENATE BILLS PASSED.

Senate bills of the following titles were severally ordered to a third reading; and they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. 1827) granting a pension to Philomelia L. Dartt;
A bill (S. 808) granting a pension to Julius C. Morison;
A bill (S. 2331) granting a pension to Mary J. McGregor;
A bill (S. 802) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Wilcox, now Roberts;
A bill (S. 1192) granting a pension to Judson Knight;
A bill (S. 2255) granting a pension to Amanda W. Beach;
A bill (S. 1193) granting a pension to John R. Wheelock;
A bill (S. 1004) granting a pension to Ann Verneuil;
A bill (S. 2151) granting a pension to Mrs. Aurelia Hillyer;
A bill (S. 2183) granting a pension to Rachel Plummer;
A bill (S. 1997) granting a pension to Peter Thompson;
A bill (S. 1906) granting a pension to Matilda Bleumner; and
A bill (S. 2100) granting a pension to Charles Tidmarsh.

An amendment to the bill (S. 899) for the relief of Mary M. Briggs was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BILLS POSTPONED.

The consideration of bills of the following titles were postponed till July 12 under the same order as in other cases:

A bill (S. 1831) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Heap Nicholson; and
A bill (S. 2129) to increase the pension of Mary W. Gibson, widow of Commander William Gibson.

Bills of the following titles, in accordance with the recommendation of the committee, were indefinitely postponed:

A bill (S. 1041) granting a pension to Mary E. Walker, M. D.;
A bill (S. 830) granting a pension to David Williams;
A bill (S. 817) granting a pension to Peter Stusse;
A bill (S. 887) granting a pension to Robert Foss; and
A bill (S. 822) granting a pension to Sarah Errickson, widow of James S. Errickson, late seaman United States Navy.

Mr. DOCKERY moved to reconsider the several votes; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

J. T. VINCENT.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10356) granting a pension to J. T. Vincent, and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of J. T. Vincent, of Clinton County, Kentucky, late a private in Company D, Twelfth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

It appears from the evidence before your committee that claimant was enrolled as a private in Company D, Twelfth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, at Albany, Clinton County, Kentucky, on the 15th day of October, 1861. That on the 1st day of November, 1861, while on a march with said command from Albany to Somerset, Ky., he contracted measles and was left at Seventy-Six, and taken from there to his home in Clinton County, Kentucky, where he remained in a precarious condition for some months with said malady and resulting lung complication. On his partial recovery from the acute stages of this attack it was discovered that his lungs, which were deeply involved during his sickness, had become permanently affected, rendering him thereby unfit for further military duty, in view of which he did not report to his command, and was not therefore mustered into the United States service.

Claimant has been unfit for any kind of active manual labor whatever since leaving the Army, by reason of the shattered condition of the system, consequent on the sickness referred to, and now, being a physical and financial wreck, rendered so in defense of his country, he appeals to the generosity of Congress.

Your committee find that this is a meritorious claim, and report back the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Amend by adding the letter "D" after the word "Company" in the seventh line.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit that bill. The report does not set forth any testimony at all, and nothing upon which the House can act. It is only pretended that he was enlisted. The report ought to set out the facts shown by the testimony, so that we may be able to render proper judgment upon the bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope that motion will not prevail.

The motion to recommit was agreed to.

JOHN TAAFFE.

Mr. CARUTH. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill (H. R. 6220) granting a pension to John Taaffe.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Taaffe, late a member of Company F, Sixth Kentucky Infantry.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The claimant, John Taaffe, was a private soldier in Company F, Sixth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, having enlisted in November, 1861. He served until January 5, 1865. At the battle of Stone River, in December, 1862, he received a gunshot wound in the groin, and was under medical treatment from December 31, 1862, the day he received his wound, until May 1, 1863. Notwithstanding this wound, he recovered sufficiently to serve with his company until his discharge, in January, 1865.

In the month of October, 1866, having suffered from the gunshot wound, and thinking that the Government which he had faithfully served should care for him when he was disabled and unable to help himself, he asked for a pension. After litigating his rights for years in the Pension Department, and constantly becoming more and more disabled, the case was finally rejected, in 1886, because the medical board could not rate the case, the wound having apparently healed; but it is in proof that the claimant can not retain his urine, and that the gunshot wound had the effect to completely destroy his manhood. It has also been so debilitating to his system that he is unable to engage in any business. The medical board certify that at the examination "his underclothing are wet; there is a urinous ammonical odor about him indicating leakage." Dr. H. H. Gwinn, who examined him, swears, under date of March 8, 1887:

"I certify that I have this day carefully examined John Taaffe, and find him laboring under impotency, a total loss of power, an irregularity of action in the generative organs; laboring under the deepest depression, caused by an old wound of the scrotum and testes, with neuralgia of the testical cord as a sequence of said wound. * * * I also find him very despondent, and a total loss of manhood, all of which, in my opinion, is caused by said old wound."

Your committee think that this man, who is now over sixty-eight years of age, should be pensioned, and report this bill with an amendment, fixing the rate at $8 a month, and, as amended, recommend that the bill do pass.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CARUTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REBECCA MANLOVE.

Mr. HIRES. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9808) granting an increase of pension to Rebecca Manlove.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Mrs. Rebecca Manlove, widow of David Manlove, who served in the United States Navy in the war of 1812, from $12 per month to $30 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The claimant is the widow of David Manlove, who was sailing-master of the Delaware flotilla from November 5, 1813, to April 8, 1815, in the war of 1812 with Great Britain. She has been in receipt of a pension at the rate only of $8 per month from March 9, 1878, and $12 from March 19, 1886, under the general laws.

It is shown by the certificate of Downs Edmunds, judge of common pleas, and John Spencer, mayor, both of Cape May, N. J., where claimant also resides, that Mrs. Manlove is almost totally blind; is in her eighty-ninth year, and has no means of support beyond her small pension. She is a very worthy woman.

Your committee are of the opinion that the pension should be increased to $30 per month, and therefore return the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, amended, however, by changing the word "Manlone" wherever it appears in said bill to "Manlove."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to conform.

Mr. HIRES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PERRY D. MARTIN.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3772) granting a pension to Perry D. Martin, and put it upon its passage.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Perry D. Martin, formerly a member of Company G, Third Regiment Minnesota Volunteers (Infantry), on the pension-roll, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month during the rest of his natural life.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3772) granting a pension to Perry D. Martin, and beg leave to recommend that the same do pass.

Said Perry D. Martin entered the United States service in October, 1861, as a member of Company G, Third Minnesota Volunteers; that prior to his enlistment he was a man of sound health and a member of the legal profession; that while in the United States service, in July, 1862, he was stricken down by sunstroke, from the effects of which he apparently partially recovered soon after. But as time went on there has not been any improvement; on the contrary, he has grown worse, and from the effects of said sun-stroke he is a mental and physical wreck beyond hope of recovery or improvement.

That he was sound and healthy, mentally and physically, when he entered the service, and that he is now physically and mentally a wreck, is shown by the affidavits of Sarah L. Cross, Dr. Vilas, Dr. Lewis, Dr. Cary, and Dr. Adams, as well as by his own affidavit. The member of this House, too, from the First district of Minnesota, being the district in which Martin lived prior to the war, and in which he now lives, certifies of his own knowledge to these facts. The records of the United States in the Adjutant-General's Office show the date of his enlistment and discharge, and that he was discharged for disability. The certificate of the examining board of surgeons at Wabasha, Minn., shows that while he was a bright and intelligent man before the injury complained of, he is now of defective intelligence and that there is now mental impairment and loss of memory.

The certificate and report also show that his present disabilities "may be the result of sun-stroke and it is very probable that they are."

The obstacle to obtaining relief under the law in the Pension Office is the loss of memory and mental impairment of said Martin by the sun-stroke and its effects. Your committee recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment striking out all after "pension-roll," in line 6, and inserting "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

FRANCIS MARION WALKER.

Mr. GEST. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill (S. 2168) granting a pension to Francis Marion Walker.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Francis Marion Walker, late private in Company I, Sixteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at $18 per month from and after the passage of the act, and in lieu of the pension at present received.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The report of the Committee on Pensions in the Senate sets forth fully the facts in this case, and is adopted, and the passage of the bill recommended.

[Senate Report No. 333, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of 115 ex-soldiers and citizens of Dallas City, Ill., and vicinity, praying that Francis Marion Walker, who is now entirely disabled as a result of his military service, be placed upon the pension-rolls, have examined the same and report:

The petitioners, ex-soldiers and citizens of Dallas City, Ill., pray that Francis M. Walker, who now receives a pension of $8 a month, may be granted such an increase as would be just on behalf of the soldier, who is poor, with a dependent family, who can move about only with the aid of crutches, and has become totally disabled for manual labor. The pension to soldier was granted for fracture of right clavicle and injury to back, incurred in the derailment of a railroad train on which he was engaged in the line of duty. An application to the Pension Office for increase within the past year was rejected.

The question in the case is one of rating. A medical board in March, 1887, pronounced the soldier totally disabled from injury to back, or rheumatism—while another medical board in November, 1887, gave him a rating of twelve-eighteenths of third grade, divided equally between fracture of clavicle, diarrhea, and disease of heart, ignoring injury to back or rheumatism altogether. Meantime, according to the representations of over a hundred of his neighbors, while the medical men disagree about the cause and extent of his disabilities, the soldier remains unable to move except by aid of crutches, continues disqualified for labor, and by petition shows that he would gladly compromise the whole medical question for aid enough to assist him in some material degree in furnishing necessary food and raiment for his family and himself.

This, your committee think, he is entitled to; and they report by bill granting him a pension for total disability of the grade in which he was rated, or $18 a month from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GEST moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN A. GRIFFEY.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill (H. R. 6783) to place the name of John A. Griffey on the pension-roll.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of John A. Griffey, dependent father of —— Griffey, late private of Company D, Second North Carolina Regiment, subject to the limitatations and conditions of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) is as follows:

Soldier enlisted October 1, 1863, was mustered December 9, 1863, as a private in Company D, Second North Carolina Mounted Infantry Volunteers, and was killed March 22, 1865, near Jacksborough, Tenn.

The claim made by John A. Griffey, father of the soldier, was rejected January 25, 1886, upon a report made by A. B. Cassellman, special examiner; not in line of duty when killed. Soldier served creditably from day of enlistment until death, which occurred, as nearly as can be ascertained, as follows:

The regiment was on the march from Cumberland Gap to Knoxville, Tenn. Colonel Bartlett was absent from the regiment, which was under command of Major Bainly, who put the regiment in charge of Lieut. Charles Hartzell, of Company C. The regiment marched to Jacksborough, while Major Bainly remained back at Cumberland Gap. By the time it got to Jacksborough Lieutenant Hartzell was drunk and was arrested.

It seems that Lieutenant Hartzell sent a detail out and Griffey was one of the detail. What the detail was for is not explained. While Griffey was out on this detail he was shot and killed. There is no evidence except hearsay and gossip as to how he was killed, or exactly what he was doing at the time. Some of the witnesses say that they heard that Griffey was, at the time he met his death, attempting to take a horse by force. If this were true it would have been easy to have furnished the testimony of the person upon whom the attempt was made. It seems, for some unexplained cause, that the only person who could give the exact cause which led to the death was not called as a witness by the special examiner.

It is true that Griffey was a good soldier; that he was detailed as above set out by Lieutenant Hartzell; and also that Hartzell was at last censured for his conduct, if not dismissed the service.

When the case is carefully examined it will be found that a good soldier, of long service, was ordered by his superior officer to do certain duty and was shot and killed by an unknown man, and in an unaccounted for manner, while executing those orders.

Your committee is disposed to give the benefit of the doubt which exists in this case to the claimant, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. There is an amendment to this bill. In the fourth line, after the word "place," insert the words "on the pension-roll."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARY FITZMORRIS.

Mr. DE LANO. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9520) for the relief of Mary Fitzmorris.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Fitzmorris, widow of Edmund Fitzmorris, late of Company K, Twelfth New York Volunteers, and pay her a pension under the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

The beneficiary named in the bill is the widow of Edmund Fitzmorris, who enlisted in the Twelfth Regiment New York Volunteers May 13, 1861, and was discharged from Company K, of said regiment, May 17, 1863. He was wounded at Second Bull Run fight, necessitating the amputation of his right leg about 8 inches above the knee. The widow's claim has been rejected by the Pension Bureau because the fatal disease of lungs is not clearly shown to be due to the wound, as alleged.

The evidence in the case shows that the soldier suffered amputation, after having remained on the battle-field six days without attention. The wound was in the right shin, but when reached, the condition of the leg was such that amputation at the point above stated became necessary. His constitution became undermined and weakened, and in consequence thereof his lungs became affected. He died February 15, 1874.

Dr. John P. Shumway, who attended the soldier during his last illness, and who had personal knowledge of his condition for some years previous thereto, testifies that about February 1, 1874, he made an examination of the soldier and found his left lung studded with tubercles, some discharging, producing copious purulent expectoration, lower lobe of right lung hepatised, body very much emaciated, and physically excessively debilitated, arising no doubt from the condition of left lung. Affiant did not see the stump of the leg, and does not know its condition further than that it was claimed at the time that the stump did suppurate and discharge at intervals.

The claimant is quite old and an object of charity, as shown by an officer of the poor office at Syracuse, N. Y., who testifies that she has been assisted by the authorities ever since her husband's death.

Your committee are clearly of the opinion that the soldier's death is directly traceable to his military service, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DE LANO moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN ETZELL.

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I have a bill here which will take but a moment to pass as it is simply to amend a pension already granted.

Mr. MATSON. Regular order.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the title of the bill be read, and then it can go over.

Mr. MACDONALD. There still remain a few moments of the hour, and I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill now.

Mr. MATSON. If gentlemen on the other side do not object, I have no objection.

Mr. MACDONALD. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill (H. R. 10212) to amend an act granting a pension to John Etzell, approved March 3, 1879.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act approved March 3, 1879, granting a pension to John Etzell, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

That a pension be, and is hereby, granted to John Etzell, late a private in Company B, Second Minnesota Regiment Infantry, and that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of said John Etzell on the pension-roll at the rate of $6 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, including the right to an increase of the same if he shows himself entitled thereto.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MACDONALD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask now to consider a bill.

Mr. MATSON. Regular order.

Mr. LAIDLAW. I thought this side was also to have a chance, as there was no objection made to the other request.

And then (the hour of 10 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. having arrived) the Speaker pro tempore declared the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. ABBOTT: A bill (H. R. 10597) for the relief of Emily J. Rowe and Elizabeth Patton—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BURROWS: A bill (H. R. 10598) granting a pension to Olive J. Stoughton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LODGE: A bill (H. R. 10599) granting a pension to Polly A. Gammons—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROWLAND: A bill (H. R. 10600) for the relief of James V. Symons—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. VOORHEES: A bill (H. R. 10601) granting a pension to Louisa Selden—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10602) providing a charter for the city of Colfax, Wash.—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. J. B. WHITE: A bill (H. R. 10603) for the relief of Julia Bodley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS WILSON: A bill (H. R. 10604) to authorize the Winona and Southwestern Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at Winona, Minn.—to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE: Petition of Rev. H. H. Williams and others, for the relief of Elizabeth Dobyns—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KENNEDY: Petition of the Grand Army of the Republic, for an appropriation of $200,000 for the purchase of headstones for deceased soldiers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McCREARY: Petition for the reference of the claim of John W. Vance, of Kentucky, to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SIMMONS: Petition of Leah Ward, of Craven County, North Carolina, for reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. VOORHEES: Papers in the pension claim of Louisa Selden—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER: Petition of Hugh B. Hudson; of T. G. Greenhill; of Elizabeth A. Card; of Mary L. Payne, executrix; of Armstead Payne, and of G. G. Lilly, of Alabama, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

The following petition for the proper protection of the Yellowstone National Park, as proposed in Senate bill 283, was received and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

By Mr. KENNEDY: Of citizens of Springfield, Ohio.

The following petition, praying for the enactment of a law providing temporary aid for common schools, to be disbursed on the basis of illiteracy, was referred to the Committee on Education:

By Mr. VOORHEES: Of 182 citizens of Washington Territory.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 23, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MARY F. HARKINS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 3016, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mary F. Harkins."

The husband of this beneficiary was discharged from the military service in 1865, and was pensioned for a gunshot wound in the right foot at the rate of $6 per month.

He died in 1882, seventeen years after his discharge, "from rupture of the heart, caused by the bursting and parting of the fibers of the right ventricle."

The claim is now made that the death was the result of the wound in the foot.

An application to the Pension Bureau was rejected on the ground that the death cause was not the result of the wound.

I am satisfied that this was a just conclusion.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 22, 1888.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the message be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MARY MINOR HOXEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 600, entitled "An act increasing the pension of Mary Minor Hoxey."

The husband of the beneficiary named in this bill was, while on military duty, wounded in the left hand and afterwards in the thigh. He was pensioned in 1871 on account of these wounds, and in 1879 was allowed arrearages from time of his discharge. He died in December, 1881, of consumption, being at that time in the receipt of a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

In 1884 his widow was allowed a pension at the same rate, with $2 a month each for two minor children. The children have now attained the age of sixteen years, but the widow still receives the pension awarded to her, which is the same as that allowed to all widows of her class.

I discover no reason of any substance why this pension should be increased; and if it should be done it would only be a manifestation of unjust favoritism.

I can not forget the thousands of poor widows with claims superior to this beneficiary, but with no interested friends to push their claims for increase of pension, who would be discriminated against if this proposed bill becomes a law.

It seems to me that there is a chance to do injustice by unfair caprice in fixing the rates of pension, as well as by refusing them altogether when they should be granted.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 22, 1888.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the message be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

JAMES G. W. HARDY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 8231, entitled "An act for the relief of Lieut. James G. W. Hardy."

It is proposed by this bill to award a pension to the beneficiary above named.

In the month of January, 1864, he was on recruiting service in the State of Indiana. On the 15th day of that month he was traveling between Indianapolis and La Fayette in a railroad car, and he alleges that he raised a window of the car to obtain air, and placed his arm on the window sill, when it was struck by something from the outside and one of the bones of his arm broken.

In February, 1865, he resigned on account of disability caused by the accident above mentioned, the medical certificate then stating that he had a fracture of the right humerus of ten months' standing, which had not been properly adjusted.

He made an application for a pension to the Pension Bureau, which was rejected.

Although it is stated in a general way that he was traveling on business connected with his recruiting service at the time of his injury, he has given no information as to the precise purpose of his journey; and it is conceded that he was guilty of such negligence that he had no right of action against the railroad company.

It also appears by the medical certificate upon which his resignation was permitted that the fracture, not necessarily serious, was never properly treated. It seems, too, that he remained in the service ten months after the injury.

I am unable to discover why a pension should be granted in this case, unless the Government is to be held as an insurer of the safety of every person in the military service in all circumstances and at all times and places.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 22, 1888.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the message be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ELLEN SEXTON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 8174, entitled "An act granting a pension to Ellen Sexton."

The husband of the beneficiary served in the Union volunteer army from October, 1862, to June, 1864, having been during the last seven months of his service in the Veteran Reserve Corps. He was discharged for a disability which, to say the least of it, certainly had no relation to his military service, unless the Government is to be held responsible for injury arising from vicious indulgence.

He died in the city of Cork, Ireland, May 29, 1875, of consumption, certified by the health authorities there to have been of seven years' duration.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 22, 1888.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the message be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CHARLES GLAMANN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 2215, entitled "An act granting a pension to Charles Glamann."

This beneficiary served in an Illinois regiment from September, 1864, to July, 1865, and his record shows no injury or sickness except an attack of remittent fever.

He filed a claim for pension in 1880, alleging that he was struck accidentally with a half brick by a comrade and injured in his left arm.

There is no doubt that whatever disability he thus incurred was the result of a personal altercation between himself and the man who threw the brick.

The extent to which the power to grant pensions by special act has been made to cover all sorts of claims is illustrated by the fact that, in the light of many pensions that have been allowed, this case, though presenting an absurd claim, does not appear to be much out of the way. The effect of precedent as an inducement to increase and expand claims and causes for pensions is also shown by the allegation in the report of the House committee, as follows:

"Your committee and Congress have, however, frequently relaxed the rule, and granted pension for injuries and disabilities incurred in such circumstances."

I believe that if the veterans of the war knew all that was going on in the way of granting pensions by private bills they would be more disgusted than any class of our citizens.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 22, 1888.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the message be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

DEFICIENCY IN APPROPRIATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates to supply deficiencies of appropriations for the various Departments of the Government and for the postal service; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent an indefinite extension of leave of absence was granted to Mr. HATCH, on account of sickness in his family.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Mr. ROWLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union may be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 8721 to provide for the erection of a public building at Charlotte, N. C., and that the House now proceed to consider the same in the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I call for the regular order.

MARINE CONFERENCE.

Mr. BELMONT. I desire to present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. Conference reports are in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1851) providing for an international marine conference to secure greater safety of life and property at sea, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

1. In section 1, in lines 3, 4, and 5, strike out the words "in the city of Washington on the 1st day of October in the year 1888, or at such other" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at such."
2. In line 5, after the word "designate," insert the word "and."
3. In line 6 strike out the word "five" and insert the word "seven."
4. In line 6 strike out the word "one" and insert the word "two."
5. In line 6 strike out the word "officer" and insert the word "officers."
6. In line 7, after the word "service," insert "two masters from the merchant marine (one from the sailing marine and one from the steam marine), and two citizens familiar with shipping and admiralty practice."
7. In section 2 strike out the words "rule of the road at sea," in line 2, and insert the words "rules, regulations, and practice concerning vessels at sea and navigation generally."
8. In section 3 strike out the word "fifteen," in line 1, and insert "twenty."
9. In line 2 strike out the word "funds" and insert the word "money."
10. In line 10, after the word "necessary," insert a paragraph as follows:

"The powers and authority conferred by this act upon the persons appointed by the President by force thereof, shall terminate on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1890, or sooner at the discretion of the President."

PERRY BELMONT,
JOHN E. RUSSELL,
WILLIAM W. MORROW,
Managers on the part of the House.
GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
WILLIAM P. FRYE,
JOHN T. MORGAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The following statement under the rule was submitted by the conferees on the part of the House:

The managers on the part of the House submit the following statement to accompany the conference report on the bill providing for an international marine conference to secure greater safety for life and property at sea:

The bill as now amended leaves the place of meeting of the conference, as well as the time of meeting, discretionary with the President; it increases the number of delegates for the United States from five to seven, two of whom are to be officers of the United States Navy, one an officer of the Life-Saving Service, two masters from the merchant marine, and two citizens familiar with shipping and admiralty practice. The total amount appropriated, which in the Senate bill was $30,000, is restored to $20,000, the sum named in the bill originally reported to the House by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and it is provided that the powers and authority conferred by this act on the persons appointed by the President shall expire on the 1st day of January, 1890, or sooner at the discretion of the President.

PERRY BELMONT,
WM. W. MORROW,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BELMONT. I move the conference report be agreed to.

The report was adopted.

Mr. BELMONT moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The bill (S. 27) to prevent the obstruction of navigable waters and to protect public works against trespass or injury was erroneously referred to the Committee on Commerce. If there be no objection that committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and it will be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, which has the same subject under consideration.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BELMONT. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] I understand will yield a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE is the gentleman who demands the regular order, and he does not yield. The regular order is the special order of the House providing for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds under the special order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman from South Carolina perhaps does not wish to cut off reports from committees. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] wishes to submit a report.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection all gentlemen having reports to make from committees can hand them to the Clerk for reference.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. BELMONT, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back bills of the following titles; which were laid on the table:

A bill (H. R. 9534) to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 9613) to execute certain treaty stipulations prohibiting Chinese immigration.

Mr. BELMONT also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for the foregoing, a bill (H. R. 10605) to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EDSON SAXBERRY.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6193) for the relief of Edson Saxberry; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELIZA SETTLE.

Mr. LANE also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2990) granting a pension to Eliza Settle; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS R. STURMAN.

Mr. LANE also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2872) granting a pension to Thomas R. Sturman; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. SARAH MARTIN.

Mr. LANE also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2871) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah J. Martin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSE, BALLAST POINT, SAN DIEGO BAY, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. CLARDY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 1228) making an appropriation for establishing a light or lights and a fog-signal on or near Ballast Point, entrance to San Diego Bay, California; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TRANSPORTATION OF DUTIABLE GOODS, PORT OF LINCOLN, NEBR.

Mr. CLARDY also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. 7903) to extend the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," to the port of Lincoln, in the State of Nebraska; which was laid on the table.

He also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for the foregoing, a bill (H. R. 10606) to extend the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," to the port of Lincoln, in the State of Nebraska;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH O'LAUGHLIN.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10634) to grant a pension to Elizabeth O'Laughlin, the helpless and invalid daughter of Dennis O'Laughlin, late a member of Company I, Ninth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] that it would be well to postpone this special order to some time in July and allow the more important business to be transacted now.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. Last evening, when the House adjourned, the general homestead bill was before the House as unfinished business, and it is therefore, I think, entitled to consideration in preference to all other bills, except appropriation bills and bills in relation to the revenue. But if that bill is not entitled to priority, I submit that, as the gentleman representing the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has had two or three days already during this session, and as the Committee on Public Lands have been able to obtain only an hour and a half for the consideration of this bill, although they have had it before the House for the last three months, it seems to me the gentleman from South Carolina ought not to press his measure, even if it is entitled to priority.

Mr. DIBBLE. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] must understand that this order under which I make the motion is not a continuing order; that it is limited to to-day only; whereas the Committee on Public Lands is a committee which has the privilege of reporting and bringing up its measures at any time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has already, I believe, two days set aside for its business——

Mr. DIBBLE. Three.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the order for whatever time may still remain to that committee be made a continuing order, so that they may bring in their business at some future time, enabling us to-day to consider the land bill, a matter of the very highest public importance.

Mr. DIBBLE. If unanimous consent can be obtained that the special order in reference to business of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be made a continuing order for the number of days to which it is now limited, I am perfectly willing to assent to that arrangement.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that will be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the situation of the question. Under the order of the House two days have been set apart for the consideration of business of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds——

Mr. DIBBLE. Three days.

The SPEAKER. Three days were set apart originally, but two days still remain, one having gone by lapse of time. On the days set apart the business of this committee was to begin immediately after the reading of the Journal. The gentleman from South Carolina now asks consent——

Mr. DIBBLE. The gentleman from Indiana——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] now asks consent that the order with reference to this committee be continued until two days are actually occupied by the committee. The gentleman from Indiana makes this proposition, as he states, with the view of having the House proceed to-day with the consideration of the public-land bill. Is there objection?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is intended to give the committee two more days.

The SPEAKER. There are two days remaining under the order already made. The proposition is now simply to make the order a continuing one.

Mr. McMILLIN. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be no objection. We desire to go on with the land bill to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] has objected.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman does not, I understand, object to the committee having two days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can state his purpose in objecting. The Chair stated the request for unanimous consent, and objection was made.

Mr. DIBBLE. What gentleman objects?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN].

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, it is proper I should say that there is a measure pending before Congress which I think of more importance than any other. The business now proposed to be assigned to two future days will necessarily come into competition with the revenue bill. Until that is disposed of, I do not propose, so far as I can prevent it, to allow any measure to be thrust in front of the revenue bill.

Mr. DIBBLE. So far as the revenue measure now pending is concerned, that is already excepted by the order; and I do not propose to antagonize it, if this be made a continuing special order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, it is all right; let the gentleman withdraw his objection.

Mr. McMILLIN. I know that the order now existing is in the form which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] states; but I know what difficulty often arises in respect to questions of consideration. Such questions have heretofore been raised——

Mr. DIBBLE. I will not raise that question.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds go on to-day, if they propose to go on at all, and work out this business.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills under the special order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina be voted down, will it then be in order to call up the homestead bill?

The SPEAKER. If the motion to go into Committee of the Whole be not agreed to, the regular business of the House will proceed: first, the morning hour for the call of committees, unless it should be dispensed with; then the hour for the consideration of bills called up by committees; and when the time for general legislation is reached, it will be in order to consider the bill referred to by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope, then, that the House will not go into Committee of the Whole.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. DIBBLE, there were—ayes 73, noes 26.

Mr. HOLMAN. As no quorum has voted, I must ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DIBBLE and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The House proceeded to divide.

Mr. HOLMAN (before the result of the count by tellers was announced). Mr. Speaker, it is quite apparent there is no quorum present, and as the House seems to be inclined to give priority to the business of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds over that of the Committee on Public Lands, I will not press the point of order further.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana withdraws the point of order that no quorum has voted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the Chair will announce the vote.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I insist on the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is insisted upon by the gentleman from Illinois, who will take the place of the gentleman from Indiana as a teller. Gentlemen desiring to vote will please come forward and do so.

The tellers continued the count; and after some time reported—ayes 119, noes 45.

Mr. LANE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, one-fifth not voting in favor thereof.

So the motion of Mr. DIBBLE was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills under the special order.

PUBLIC BUILDING, PORTLAND, OREGON.

Mr. DIBBLE. I call up the bill (S. 20) to provide for the construction of a public building at Portland, Oregon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the custom-house at the city of Portland, in the State of Oregon; and plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed, for the site and building complete, the sum of $500,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site of said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Oregon shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $500,000 for site and building.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds recommended amendments striking out the words "five hundred" where they occurred in the bill and inserting "three hundred and fifty;" so as to make the amount appropriated $350,000.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. DIBBLE. I will have the report read as a part of my remarks.

The report (by Mr. POST) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred House bill 1757 and Senate bill 20, providing for the construction of a public building at Portland, Oregon, and for the purchase of a site therefor, have had the same under consideration and submit the following favorable report, with amendments:

Portland, Oregon, has a population of about 40,000, with an additional population of 10,000 in the suburban towns adjoining. The report of the Supervising Architect demonstrates the urgent necessity for such a building. There is now crowded in the present building the post-office, with twenty-four employés, the custom-house, collector's office, surveyor-general's offices, the United States district and circuit court-rooms, with bailiff rooms, jury and witness rooms, postal agent's room, judges' chambers, and clerks' rooms, and the United States marshal's and United States district attorney's offices. Other rooms are rented in various parts of the city for the offices of collector of internal revenue, United States appraisers, local inspectors of steam-vessels, light-house inspectors, light-house engineer of the Department of the Columbia, the quartermaster and chief paymaster of the Department of the Columbia, the marine-hospital surgeon, the United States Signal Service.

It is proposed that all these various offices, including the offices of the customs district, shall be in the new building, and thus save a present annual rental of over $6,000, and at the same time adding to the safety of the records and with greatly increased convenience to the public. It is proposed to leave to the present old building the post-office, with its various divisions, which will crowd the first floor; the second floor to be used by the United States district and circuit courts, marshals, with bailiffs, jury, witness, clerks, and district attorney's rooms, while the third floor, attic, to be used by the surveyor-general's division. All the room to be provided in the new building will at once be needed and fully occupied, with great saving and safety to the Government.

It is the opinion of this committee that in view of the damp and wet winters at Portland said building should be of enduring and substantial material. This city is the entrepot largely for the entire northeast, including Oregon, Idaho, Montana, and Washington Territory. Its domestic and foreign exports for 1887 were valued at $5,135,945, and the exports of wheat to foreign countries are valued at $2,651,070, and flour to the value of $1,152,854. These were chiefly to England, China, Japan, Peru, Sandwich Islands, British Columbia. The imports are valued at nearly half a million dollars for 1887. The aggregate capital involved in the actual business establishments of Portland, not including that in banking and railway enterprises, is $54,000,000. There are eleven banks, with a capital of $7,307,348.82. There are six railroads tributary to Portland, of which four are transcontinental lines. The real estate transfers of last year equal $6,000,000 in value, being three times that of the preceding year. The amount expended last year in buildings, streets, and suburban improvements equals $3,000,000 in value. The local manufactures of last year are valued at $7,000,000, being an increase of 30 per cent. over the preceding year. The largest of ocean steamers and sailing vessels, flying the flags of every maritime nation, reach her wharves.

The postal needs for additional room are urgent. The business and receipts are rapidly increasing. The receipts for the past year (ending March 31) were $75,142, and for the year ending September 30, $82,201. The customs receipts for 1887 (fiscal year) were $197,921.15. The internal-revenue receipts for the same period were $150,757.81.

Your committee recommend the passage of Senate bill 20, with the following amendments: Strike out the words "five hundred" wherever they occur in the bill and insert the words "three hundred and fifty."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the Senate bill proposed, I believe, an appropriation of $500,000.

Mr. DIBBLE. Yes; the Senate bill proposed $500,000, and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reduced the amount to $350,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by making the amount $300,000.

Mr. LANE. I move to amend the amendment so as to reduce the amount to $200,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Portland, I believe, is a city of 40,000 people.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "five hundred" and insert "three hundred and fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] moves to amend this amendment by striking out the words "and fifty," thus making the amount $300,000.

Mr. LANE. And I move to amend that so as to make the amount $200,000.

Mr. DIBBLE. That is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], being an amendment to an amendment, no other is in order until it is disposed of. The question is first on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to the amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HOLMAN. In order that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE] may be voted on first, I withdraw mine for the present.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. LANE, striking out "350,000" and inserting "200,000;" and it was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass as amended.

The question was taken, and the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

A division was called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 16.

Mr. LANE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] will please act as tellers.

The tellers took their places, and the count proceeded.

Mr. WILKINS (pending the count by tellers). Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILKINS. Is it in order to move that the House do now adjourn?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not. It is in order to move that the committee rise. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and the tellers are taking a vote; when their report is made it will then be in order to make any motion that can be made under the rules.

Mr. WILKINS. With the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. DIBBLE. I am not prepared to give that consent, Mr. Chairman, at this time.

Mr. WILKINS. Then I withdraw the motion.

Mr. WHITTHORNE (pending the count by tellers). Mr. Chairman, if the tellers have not reported I insist upon their reporting.

The CHAIRMAN. If all members in the Hall have voted the tellers will make their report.

Mr. DIBBLE. I think there are several who have not yet voted who desire to vote.

Mr. BUCHANAN. How many are lacking of a quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that 59 additional votes are required to make a quorum.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the Clerk call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Adams,	Cutcheon,	Kean,	Russell, Conn.
Allen, Mich.	Dalzell,	Kelley,	Scott,
Anderson, Kans.	Davenport,	Kerr,	Seney,

The committee rose; and Mr. MCCREARY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union finding itself without a quorum had caused the roll to be called, and had directed him to report the names of the absentees to the House to be spread upon the Journal.

Mr. DIBBLE. How many members have answered to their names?

Mr. MCCREARY. One hundred and sixty-five, which is more than a quorum.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

Mr. LANHAM. I desire to state, on behalf of my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON], that he is absent from the sessions of the House on account of sickness.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes the consideration of the bill (S. 20) to provide for the construction of a public building at Portland, Oregon. The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. CRISP. Was not the committee dividing when the want of a quorum was developed?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee was dividing by tellers, the point of no quorum having been made and tellers having been appointed by the Chair; but the roll having been called and the names of the absentees having been reported to the House and a quorum having appeared, the Chair is of the opinion that the appointment of tellers is vacated and the question must be put again to the committee.

Mr. DIBBLE. What is the question?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 7.

Mr. LANE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appoints as tellers Mr. DIBBLE and Mr. LANE.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 89, noes 6.

Mr. LANE. No quorum.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCCREARY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (S. 20) to provide for the construction of a public building at Portland, Oregon, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. DIBBLE. As this day has been specially assigned by the House for the consideration of these public-building bills, I now ask, by unanimous consent, the order be made a continuing one, not to exceed two days, and not to interfere with appropriation or revenue bills. The Committee on Rules allowed the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds three days for this purpose, and we have already lost one of those days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LANE. I object.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope not.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We will do the business assigned for this day or none.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 20.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. There is no quorum.

Mr. HOLMAN. Give us this afternoon. There is no trouble about the amendments.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 66, nays 59, not voting 199; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOMPSON]. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I have voted "no" on this question, although I am paired with Judge PAYSON. I know if he were present he would vote in the same way, and consequently I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I voted "no" on this motion, but am paired with my colleague from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], and hence withdraw my vote.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MORGAN] upon all political questions. I do not consider this such a question, but will withdraw my vote in order to be on the safe side and avoid any cause of complaint.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I am paired with the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX]; otherwise I should vote "no."

Mr. DOCKERY. I am paired with Mr. WARNER. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. WISE. I am paired with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], and hence withdraw my vote.

Mr. LANDES. I am paired with Mr. YOST. If he were present, I would vote "no."

Mr. BYNUM. I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON]; otherwise I should vote "no."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I find that I am paired on all questions with the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN]. I voted in the negative on this question, but I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I am paired with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FLOOD], and withdraw my vote. Otherwise I should vote "no."

The following pairs were announced on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. FORAN with Mr. ADAMS.
Mr. HALL with Mr. WHITING, of Massachusetts.
Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. PHELPS.
Mr. TAULBEE with Mr. SHERMAN.

Mr. ABBOTT with Mr. HITT.
Mr. DUNN with Mr. SYMES.
Mr. BRYCE with Mr. HOPKINS, of New York.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I find that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER], with whom I understood I was paired, has voted, and I therefore desire to let my vote stand.

Mr. BIGGS. My colleague [Mr. THOMPSON] is detained at home on account of illness. He is paired, as announced, with Mr. MCKENNA.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I find I am still paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], and withdraw my vote. I thought my pair had expired.

Mr. MCSHANE. I find that I am paired with Mr. GUENTHER; but that pair is only intended to refer to the tariff bill. I shall therefore vote on this question.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

And accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. HOOKER: A bill (H. R. 10607) granting a pension to Rachel Morgan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAGAN: A bill (H. R. 10608) granting a pension to Mary I. Maltby—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HAUGEN: Petition of J. A. Fisher and 49 others, citizens of Pierce County, Wisconsin, for amendment to the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. MCRAE: Protest of the Dalark Wheel, of Arkansas, against appropriations for funeral expenses of judges, etc.—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. WASHINGTON: Petition of Thomas G. Hardy, of Davidson County, Tennessee, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WISE: Petition of George P. Loehr, of heirs of John McCormick, and of heirs of Mathew McCormick, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

MONDAY, June 25, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a request of the Adjutant-General that an appropriation be made for the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Surgeon-General of the Army requesting that provision be made in the Army appropriation bill for the Army and Naval Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Surgeon-General of the Army setting forth the necessity for the appropriations requested for the building for the Army Medical Museum and Library; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COURT OF CLAIMS REPORTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate communications from the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation claims of the sloop Farmer, the schooner Elizabeth, the brig Sally, and the ship Speculator; which were referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Washington Monument Commission stating that thirty-seven memorial tablets have not been inserted in walls, and recommending an appropriation of $1,500 therefor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the reading of the communication. It is from the President, and ought to be read, by the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE JOINT COMMISSION FOR THE COMPLETION OF THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT,
Washington, D. C., June 23, 1888.

SIR: By the inclosed communication from Col. John M. Wilson, United States Army, lieutenant-colonel Corps of Engineers, engineer in charge, it will be seen that there are thirty-seven memorial blocks yet to be inserted or attached to the interior walls of the Washington Monument, the cost of doing which is estimated by that officer at $1,500. This commission respectfully ask that the appropriation for filling and grading the grounds around the monument and for other expenses connected with the shaft, as it appears on page 64, line 11, of the sundry civil bill as reported to the House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, be increased that amount for the purpose named.

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

GROVER CLEVELAND,
President of the United States,
J. C. DUANE,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army,
WILL. A. FRERET,
Supervising Architect,
EDWARD CLARK,
Architect United States Capitol,
JOHN SHERMAN,
Vice-President Washington Monument Association,
Commissioners.

To Hon. JOHN J. INGALLS,
President pro tempore United States Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose that the communication, together with the accompanying papers, will be referred. There is a report from the commission referred to, giving a statement of liabilities, a statement of expenditures, and asking to be discharged from the duty imposed upon them by act of Congress. I suppose the whole matter had better go to the Committee on Appropriations, because an appropriation is asked for. Let it be so referred and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of Roger A. Tubbs, late of the Eleventh Regiment Vermont Volunteers, praying for the passage of a bill extending the time for filing claims for arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. REAGAN presented the petition of George W. Jacobs and 96 other citizens of Goliad County, Texas, and the petition of B. S. Purcell and 27 other citizens of Fayette County, Texas, praying for the passage of a law to prevent common carriers from transporting commodities in cars and other means of conveyance owned by the shipper, and to give informers the fines imposed for violations of the interstate-commerce law; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate-Commerce.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of members of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio, of Lebanon, Ohio, praying that an appropriation be made to purchase headstones for the graves of deceased soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BECK presented the petition of Crittenden Reeves and other citizens of Todd County, Kentucky, praying that certain amendments be made to the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. MORGAN presented the petition of W. F. Baker, J. B. Collins, and other citizens of Alabama, praying that certain amendments of the interstate-commerce law be made; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. McPHERSON. I present the memorial of Mr. Hiram Berdan, with respect to some improvement in seacoast defenses. Mr. Berdan has been a very successful inventor and operator in the construction of arms which have been of great use to the Government, and he proposes a scheme by which the coast defenses can be made most adequate and successful. The memorial is very short, and I should like to have it read from the desk, because I intend to base upon it a request to the Committee on Appropriations to make an appropriation of money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be read, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, as follows:

To the Senate:

Your memorialist, Hiram Berdan, of the city of New York, at present residing at 1820 N street, Washington, D. C., respectfully represents that in his opinion all of the means now in use for defending seacoast cities would prove to be ineffective, for the following reasons:

First. No ship now in use can stand the recoil of a gun that is large enough to sink a heavily-armored ship in the short time required to burn any city in reach of her guns.

Second. Guns in ships attacking our cities would have the very great advantage over guns in our forts of much larger targets; therefore they would open fire at ranges which would render the firing from the forts of little or no importance.

Third. The nets now employed in all of the European navies have proven to be a perfect defense against all mobile or fish torpedoes, and that the loss of speed caused by the use of these nets would not prevent them in any way from approaching our seacoast cities or entering our harbors.

Fourth. That the trials made with the pneumatic guns are deceptive, for the reason that the vessel was placed at the very spot where the shells had dropped in former trials.

A single trial of, say, fifty shots at full ranges at an object in motion at unknown distances will prove that it can never hit a ship (in consequence of the very great curve of the trajectory) except by mere accident. For burning cities they would be very good but for their short ranges, but not for defending cities, either from forts or ships.

Your memorialist represents that the defense of our seacoast cities demands means for sinking an enemy's ship at once and before they are even in range of our cities.

Your memorialist represents that he has, after several years of study, perfected such means, which are, briefly stated, a ram (plated at the bows to deflect the shots), with what may be called pendulum torpedoes attached at the bows and so arranged that after the ram has struck the ship or is broadside to her the torpedo is swung under the nets to the bottom of the ship by means of arms which are driven by steam-power, making the motion positive and therefore infallible.

Your memorialist having just perfected all the details, is now engaged making working drawings for six European Governments with which he has preliminary contracts, and he would be glad to explain the system to the Naval Committee at its next meeting. He would also be glad if the committee would ask Admiral Porter (who is admitted to be the best authority in this country on such matters) to be present, and to give his opinion as to the importance of this system for the defense of our coast.

Your memorialist prays that you will authorize the Secretary of the Navy to contract for a ram with guards for protecting the spur, armed with machine guns and torpedo attachment at the bows, that is capable of circumventing the nets and placing the torpedo, containing 200 pounds of gun-cotton, under the bottom of a ship, including forty torpedoes, at a cost of $2,500 each, the total cost not to exceed $500,000; that the system and plans shall be approved by a board consisting of the Admiral of the Navy, the Chief Constructor, and Chief Engineer of the Navy Department; the payments to be made as the work progresses for all save the torpedoes, which shall not be accepted or paid for until they have been tested by practical trials and accepted by this board.

This will not only give our Government a perfect ram (without any risk), which, in the opinion of the Coast Defense Board, was necessary (as expressed by its chairman in his report to the Secretary of the Navy), but will, in the opinion of our ablest authorities, by the employment of the pendulum torpedo, entirely solve the problem of our coast defense. On the other hand, if the torpedoes do not operate satisfactorily they will not be paid for, and the ram can be used as perfectly as it could have been had it not been arranged for the trial with the torpedoes.

Your memorialist will ever pray, etc.'

H. BERDAN.

Mr. GIBSON presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of New Orleans, La., praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of Bayou La Fourche, Old River, and Bayou Terre Bonne; also other rivers and bayous in the State of Louisiana; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the board of directors of the Produce Exchange of New Orleans, La., praying for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, signed by the president, Hugh McCloskey, and the secretary, Hy. H. Smith; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the heirs of the estate of Louis L. Ferriere, late of Jefferson Parish, Louisiana, praying that their claim against the Government for damages sustained by the deceased may be referred to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON presented a joint memorial of the Board of Trade, the Commercial Exchange, the Maritime Exchange, and the Drug Exchange, of Philadelphia, and the Vessel-Owners and Captains' Association, representatives of the commercial and maritime interests of the city of Philadelphia and the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 1448 and House bill 4923, and suggesting the establishment of a permanent board of United States engineers to examine and revive, if necessary, all projected improvements and constructions, and annually recommend the sum to be appropriated for river and harbor work; the Secretary of War to be intrusted with the expenditure of the sum annually appropriated; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GEORGE presented a petition of Buena Vista Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Buena Vista, Miss., praying that certain amendments of the interstate-commerce law be made; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I present the petition of Edwin D. Chadick, representing the Denison and Little Rock Railroad Company, stating that the passage of Senate bill 2929, granting the right of way to the Paris, Choctaw and Little Rock Railway Company interferes in some way with rights previously granted to the company which he represents, and praying that the bill be recalled for the purpose of allowing him a hearing before some committee of the Senate to present the wrongs that he thinks he has suffered by the passage of the Paris and Choctaw bill.

I move that the petition lie on the table, and that the President of the United States be requested to return the bill which has been passed, for the purpose of allowing this gentleman a hearing.

Mr. VEST. When did the bill go to the President?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I think about eight days ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2929) to authorize the Paris, Choctaw and Little Rock Railway Company to construct and operate a railway, telegraph, and telephone line through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the President of the United States be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

Mr. COKE. I ask whether the request is to be treated as a joint resolution or as a resolution relating solely to the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would require a concurrent resolution, to be passed by both Houses.

Mr. COKE. This, then, is not such a resolution. It is simply a petition, and I propose to resist the action proposed. It being a petition, and neither a bill nor a resolution, I ask that it simply lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas presents a petition as the basis of the resolution which he offers, requesting the return of the bill. The petition will lie on the table. The Senator from Arkansas will reduce his resolution to writing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will have to go over. It involves a good deal of difficulty.

Mr. HARRIS. The resolution will go over on objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That undoubtedly will be the ruling of the Chair when it is presented. The Senator from Arkansas can reduce his resolution to writing and present it hereafter.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8989) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

INTERNATIONAL MARINE CONFERENCE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the message of the House concerning the marine conference bill be taken from the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 23, 1888.

Resolved, That the House concur in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1851) providing for an international marine conference to secure greater safety for life and property at sea.

Attest:

JNO. B. CLARK, Clerk.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present from the Senate conferees the report of the conference committee, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1851) "providing for an international marine conference to secure greater safety for life and property at sea," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

1. In section 1, in lines 3, 4, and 5, strike out the words "in the city of Washington on the 1st day of October, in the year 1888, or at such other," and insert in lieu thereof the words "at such."
2. In line 5, after the word "designate," insert the word "and."
3. In line 6 strike out the word "five" and insert the word "seven."
4. In line 6 strike out the word "one" and insert the word "two."
5. In line 6 strike out the word "officer" and insert the word "officers."

6. In line 7, after the word "service," insert "two masters from the merchant marine (one from the sailing marine and one from the steam marine), and two citizens familiar with shipping and admiralty practice."

7. In section 2 strike out the words "rule of the road at sea" in line 2, and insert the words "rules, regulations, and practice concerning vessels at sea, and navigation generally."

8. In section 3 strike out the word "fifteen," in line 1, and insert "twenty."

9. In line 2 strike out the word "funds" and insert the word "money."

10. In line 10, after the word "necessary," insert a paragraph as follows:

"The powers and authority conferred by this act upon the persons appointed by the President by force thereof shall terminate on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1890, or sooner at the discretion of the President."

And the House agree to the same.

GEO. F. EDMUNDS,
WM. P. FRYE,
JNO. T. MORGAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

PERRY BELMONT,
JOHN E. RUSSELL,
WM. W. MORROW,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1182) to amend the military record of Levi H. Figard, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7491) granting a pension to Lewis Telyea, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back with sundry amendments the bill (H. R. 9377) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes. I will state to the Senate that I make this report in print, and I shall be glad later in the day to call up the bill for consideration if there is no objection, as the printed bill will probably be laid upon the desks of Senators within an hour or two.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Meanwhile the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3163) to provide for the erection of a public building for the use and accommodation of the post-office at Mammoth Hot Springs, in the Yellowstone National Park, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. 1523) for the establishment of a light-house at Cob Point Bar, at the mouth of Wicomico River, in the State of Maryland, reported it with amendments.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2949) granting a pension to the widow of G. K. Warren, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9678) for the relief of William N. Robb, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 3204) for the relief of Azariah Bartholf; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3205) for the relief of Adam Kirkwood; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3206) for the relief of Henry G. Healy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3207) granting a pension to Catherine P. Kesting; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3208) granting a pension to William S. Bradshaw; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 3209) for the increase of the Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3210) for the relief of Lieut. Jerome E. Morse, of the United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3211) to regulate the pay of certain retired officers of the United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS introduced a bill (S. 3212) for the relief of the estate of James M. Wayne; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BATE introduced a bill (S. 3213) for the benefit of William Watkins; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3214) for the relief of Laura S. Norvell, widow and administratrix of Henry L. Norvell, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 3215) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Cummings's Landing, Arkansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BLAIR. By request of the American Federation of Labor I introduce a bill.

The bill (S. 3216) for the further regulation of vessels engaged in domestic commerce was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 3217) to prevent the sale, manufacture, or transportation of adulterated articles of food, drink, and drugs manufactured or made in one State and intended to be sold in another, or intended for export or for sale in the District of Columbia or any Territory or reservation of the United States, and to prevent the exportation or importation of adulterated food, drink, or drugs, and for creating a pure-food division in the Department of Agriculture; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BLAIR. This is a bill pending in the House of Representatives which I introduce by request of persons representing certain agricultural societies. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 3218) for the relief of W. I. Smith and D. M. Wisdom; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PADDOCK introduced a bill (S. 3219) to increase the pension of Keyes P. Cool; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted four amendments intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN, Mr. CALL, and Mr. HAWLEY submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN. In support of the amendment which I have offered to the sundry civil appropriation bill, I beg leave to present the petition of a number of prominent citizens of Augusta, Ga., praying that an appropriation of $20,000 be made for the construction of an artesian well at the United States arsenal at or near Augusta, Ga. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BATE and Mr. GEORGE submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which were referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the statement of the Court of Claims, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARRIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLATT. I am instructed by the Committee on Territories to report an amendment which is intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; and I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations without printing.

The motion was agreed to.

COMPLEMENT OF NAVAL VESSELS.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to furnish to the Senate a statement showing the full complement of men which will be required for the Chicago and each of the other fourteen vessels named on page 236 of the Department Report for 1887; also a similar statement showing the full complement of men which will be required for the Puritan and each of the other ironclads mentioned in the upper table on page 234 of the report; also similar statements showing the full complement of officers which will be required for each of the above ships.

CLARK'S DEFLECTIVE TURRETS.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to inform the Senate what progress has been made in investigating and testing the practicability of the deflective turrets designed by Chief Engineer N. B. Clark, for which investigation the sum of $20,000 was appropriated by act of March 3, 1883; what reasons, if any, exist for further delay, and how soon the tests are likely to be made.

RAILROAD IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I present a concurrent resolution, which I ask the Senate to consider now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2929) to authorize the Paris, Choctaw and Little Rock Railway Company to construct and operate a railway, telegraph, and telephone line through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COKE. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the concurrent resolution lies over under the rule.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Let it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed.

THE FISHERIES TREATY.

Mr. MORGAN. A resolution was submitted by myself some time since—two resolutions indeed—in regard to the fisheries treaty. On the 4th of June consent was had that the resolutions, not losing their attitude before the Senate, should go over for consideration to-day. There was also consent at the last time the fisheries treaty was considered in open executive session that the treaty should also go over till to-day; and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] had the floor upon it. I propose that both of these subjects, without any loss of their attitude before the Senate, shall go over for such length of time as may be suggested, a week from to-day, or go over to be called up by unanimous consent, inasmuch as the Senator from Massachusetts is not here.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider the resolutions and also the treaty on next Monday, in their appropriate places and times in the order of business, the resolutions to be considered, of course, at the close of the routine business or as a part of the routine business, and the treaty to be considered in open executive session, say at 2 o'clock this day a week.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Massachusetts being absent, I would rather have the matter go over informally until he returns. He may be entirely prepared to go on upon his return, and I should not like to embarrass him. I have no objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama, if the Senator from Massachusetts concurs when he arrives.

Mr. MORGAN. I will agree to that. I have no objection to that course, it being understood that I have the right to call up the resolutions any day.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it all stand over just as before.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; just as before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is understood, then, that, by unanimous consent, the resolutions to which the Senator from Alabama has referred, and also the fisheries treaty, stand over informally, their rights respectively in priority of time and assignment to be retained as at present. It is so ordered, if there be no objection.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. TURPIE. I give notice that on Monday next I shall move to take up the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to refer the President's annual message to the Committee on Finance, for the purpose of submitting some remarks.

OREGON RAILWAY AND NAVIGATION COMPANY BRIDGES.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that the action of the House of Representatives on Senate bill 2601 be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2601) authorizing the construction of railroad bridges across the Snake River and across the Clear Water River by the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was, on page 3, after line 22, to insert a new section as follows:

SEC. 4. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same and over the approaches thereto upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use, and in case the owner or owners of such bridge and the several railroad companies or any so desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives concurring in some and non-concurring in other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8989) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. PLUMB, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The bill (H. R. 10556) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first Order of Business on the Calendar under Rule VIII, being Senate bill 1365, will be stated.

The bill (S. 1365) for the erection of a public building for the use of the custom-house and post-office at Newport News, in the district of Yorktown, Virginia, and making an appropriation therefor, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 4, after the word "purchase," to insert "or acquire by condemnation;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase or acquire by condemnation a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the custom-house, internal-revenue offices, and post-office, at Newport News, in the county of Warwick, Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICHMOND AND DANVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY.

The bill (S. 2774) authorizing the Richmond and Danville Railroad Company to lay tracks, and so forth, in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It seems to me that that bill involves the disposition of certain other railroad matters now pending before the Senate, and therefore, while I have no objection to the bill, I shall object to its present consideration. It seems to me that it should not be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over under objection and take its place on the Calendar under Rule IX.

ESTABLISHMENT OF LIGHTS.

Mr. DOLPH. I reported a bill this morning by direction of the Committee on Commerce in regard to the establishment of certain light-houses, it being a House bill, with amendments providing for light-houses, bills for which had already passed the Senate. I am directed to call up the bill for present consideration. I therefore ask that the bill be taken up for consideration at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1523) for the establishment of a light-house at Cob Point Bar, at the mouth of Wicomico River, in the State of Maryland.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 5, to add:

And the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for such purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add after the amendment just adopted:

That the sum of $15,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury in the purchase of a site and the construction of a suitable wharf at Astoria, Oregon, for the use of the Light-House Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to the bill:

That the sum of $40,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the erection of a light-house on the high land (main land), to the westward of Crooked River, in Franklin County, Florida, said amount to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add:

That the sum of $500,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the erection of a light-house on or near Diamond Shoal, off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina: Provided, That such contractors for doing this work may be selected by the Light-House Board as may, in the judgment of the board, be best fitted, by reason of skill, experience, possession of plant, and control of means, to do the work, payments to be made in the discretion of the board, upon the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add:

That the sum of $25,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of pier lights at Duluth, Lake Superior, Minnesota; Kewaunee, Lake Michigan, Wisconsin; Charlotte Harbor, Lake Ontario, New York; Port Washington, Lake Michigan, Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause a light-house to be constructed at Holland's Island Bar, near the entrance to Kedge's Straits, in the Chesapeake Bay, Maryland, and $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for this purpose from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause a light-house to be constructed at or near St. Joseph's Point, in Florida, and $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for this purpose from any money not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add:

That there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $40,000, for establishing a first-class light-ship, with steam fog-signal, in duplicate, on or near Bush's Bluff Shoal, entrance to Elizabeth River, Virginia, and that so much of the amount of $20,000 already appropriated and not used for establishing a light-house at that point be added to and used for the establishment of the light-ship; providing that the entire cost of constructing and establishing this light-ship shall not exceed $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add:

That the sum of $80,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase of a site and the construction of a first-order coast light-house on the headlands near the mouth of the Umpqua River, in the State of Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add:

That there be constructed and established a first-class light-ship, with a steam fog-signal, off False Cape, seacoast of Virginia, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $60,000: Provided, That the construction of said light-ship shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder after advertisement, and that said light-ship shall be built in American ship-yards. And the sum of $60,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for such purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask if there is a report accompanying the bill. If there is, I desire to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no written report accompanying the bill. It was reported this morning.

Mr. DOLPH. I can state in a moment to the Senator from Kentucky that this is a House bill which was reported favorably from the Committee on Commerce. All the amendments except two are provisions for light-houses, bills for which have already passed the Senate, and the object in putting them on this House bill is to get them into conference and to secure action upon them by the other body.

Mr. BECK. The reason why I asked for the reading of the report is that on the sundry civil bill there are great numbers of light-houses provided for, perhaps three times as many as ever before have been provided for in any one year. The Light-House Board generally comes and reports those which are actually necessary, and those which can be postponed. I desired to know to what class these belong, because the Light-House Board generally makes very elaborate reports and sets forth very urgent cases and some not so urgent and some which may just as well as not be postponed. As all these items seem to carry their own appropriation, I desired to see the report as to the absolute necessity for them.

Mr. DOLPH. These items have all been carefully considered by the subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce, and then by the full committee. The various bills have been reported separately by direction of the committee, and now they are placed on this House bill as amendments by the committee with the request that the bill be taken up for immediate consideration. They have received the careful consideration of the committee. I presume there are reports with the special bills. They are all strongly recommended by the Light-House Board and by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. I have not paid much attention to this bill. I do not know but that it is all right, but I think we are likely to get into confusion by proceeding in this way. As I understand, the bill as amended authorizes the construction of light-houses and appropriates money for them. I think we are likely to get into confusion by having this class of bills passed in this way. The usual mode, I think, has been to authorize light-houses to be built, and then let the Light-House Board scrutinize them and recommend the proper appropriation, and on their report we make the appropriation. I do not know but that all this may have been done, but I can see readily, as does the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], that we are likely to get into great confusion in respect to light-houses unless we pursue the usual course.

Mr. DOLPH. I think many of the bills for light-houses have carried their own appropriation and others have not. It is evident that any bill passed after this time must carry its own appropriation, or the work will be postponed until after the next session of Congress. It is for that reason that the Committee on Commerce directed this report to be made and that each one of these bills should contain its appropriation.

As I say, each one of these bills has received careful consideration, both as an individual bill and as an amendment to the present bill, by the Committee on Commerce. None of these items is provided for in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The usual course pursued by the Appropriations Committee is to examine carefully the various light-houses proposed through the Light-House Board. If the Committee on Commerce, with which I do not wish to interfere, has examined the bill carefully——

Mr. FRYE. The cases have all been referred to the Light-House Board and reported on by the board to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ALLISON. The point I make is that the Light-House Board of course recommend a great number of lights, and undoubtedly there are a great many places where light-houses should be constructed; but it is not practicable to construct all the light-houses in a single year, and therefore the Appropriations Committee have concluded to take up those most important and which can be constructed within a reasonable period.

Mr. BECK. I should like to make a suggestion. This bill was only reported this morning, and it is accompanied by no written report. The sundry civil bill has already passed the House and come to the Senate. Without desiring to have this bill lose its place on the Calendar, I should be glad to have it lie over until we can see the number of urgent cases reported by the Light-House Board and make some comparison of them, in the absence of a report, when the bill is taken up to-morrow or the day after.

Take the Senator's own coast. There was a light-house ordered at Tillamook. It is a very important matter. The United States has lost perhaps $100,000 by making small appropriations, as, in order to give enough for the Tillamook light-house, we cut down others; and so it has been in a dozen other cases. I would like to see together a list of all the light-houses proposed, and have the views of the Light-House Board, see what they have sent to us, and the relative importance of one compared with the others as to which we should make appropriation for this year if we can not appropriate for all.

I do not make any objection in order to delay the bill improperly or to throw any obstacle in its way, but I think the Senate can see that there may be other works much more important than those named here, in the view of the board, although these may be advantageous; but some are more necessary than others, and a few days' delay perhaps may not injure it, but rather facilitate it.

Mr. DOLPH. Of course if any Senator desires to examine the bill, I have no objection to its being laid over for that purpose, but I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that the light-houses provided for in this bill are quite as important as, if not more important than, those which have had the good fortune to get through and be provided for in the appropriation bill. I have learned that the passage of a bill in Congress does not always depend upon its importance. It depends on whether it has friends on the committees who are favorable to its consideration by the committees and the House. But I adopt the suggestion of the Senator to let the bill go over until to-morrow.

Mr. BECK. I desire to correct one statement made by the Senator from Oregon in regard to the way light-house items come before the Appropriation Committee in the sundry civil bill. I do not think we have ever considered the pressure of either Senators or Representatives or their views as to which ought to be pushed, but we have deferred to the Light-House Board, and to the facts furnished by them, as to the urgency of the case and the needs of commerce at a particular place as determining the question, regardless of anything else.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator did not understand my remark. I may be in error, but I supposed, of course, in providing for light-houses the course pursued was that bills were introduced in either House of Congress and passed frequently without carrying an appropriation, and it then was the practice of the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate the necessary money to carry out the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BECK. Under the direction of the Light-House Board.

Mr. DOLPH. What I had reference to and what I said was that I thought some of the bills which had not been fortunate enough to get through both branches of Congress were quite as important as those which had passed earlier in the session both branches of Congress and were therefore now properly before the Committee on Appropriations. The object in providing the appropriation in this bill for each of these light-houses is that when the bill passes there may be an appropriation so that the work may be commenced and prosecuted before another session of Congress.

Mr. BECK. I have only one remark to make. If the Senator from Oregon allows the bill to lie over without prejudice for a day, we will send for the Light-House Board and have a conference with them in regard to this and all other bills on the subject.

Mr. DOLPH. I will state that, if necessary, I will furnish to the Senate the reports of the Light-House Board and of the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to each of these light-houses. All of them but two have passed the Senate before. The Senate has acted upon them. They have been reported by the Committee on Commerce, have received the consideration of the Senate, and have passed the Senate. The object now in putting them on this House bill is to secure consideration in the other House.

Mr. BECK. I will make no objection to the bill probably, if it is passed over to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be informally passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that the bill be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed with the amendments of the Committee on Commerce.

WASHINGTON AND SANDY SPRING RAILROAD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill on the Calendar in regular order will be announced.

The bill (S. 1631) to incorporate the Washington and Sandy Spring Narrow-Gauge Railroad and Street Railway Company was announced, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 30, after the word "Columbia," to strike out—

And said corporation is hereby authorized to construct and lay down a single or double track railway to be operated by horse, cable, or electric power within the city of Washington, commencing at the intersection of New York avenue and the northern boundary of Boundary street, thence along the line of New York avenue to the intersection or crossing of Seventh street northwest, and said company shall cause said tracks to be laid upon an even surface with the pavement of the street, imbedded in concrete, and the space between the tracks and 2 feet beyond the outer rails thereof which this franchise is intended to cover, shall be at all times kept by said corporation well paved and in good order at its own expense, subject to the approval of the engineer commissioner of the District; and said company shall buy, lease, or construct a depot on the line of said New York avenue at some point between Fourth street and Seventh street northwest for the convenience of passengers on its said roads; and said company shall have the right to run its tracks and cars into said depot: That—

And insert the word "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the words "Sec. 10," to strike out—

That whenever the foregoing route shall coincide with the route of any other duly incorporated railroad company, or connect portions of such route, but one set of tracks shall be used, and each company using the tracks shall contribute equitably to the expense of laying and maintaining them; the amount to be contributed to be ascertained when the companies disagree by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, upon application of any company interested and on notice to and hearing of the parties interested—

And insert:

That when the road shall be completed to Boundary street and put in operation, the said corporation shall have the right to run its own street cars over the traks of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home road, on New York avenue, for the purpose only of transferring its passengers between Seventh street northwest and Boundary street, on such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by the two companies; and if they can not agree, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, upon the petition of either company and reasonable notice to the other, shall fix the terms and conditions upon which the tracks shall be so used; and if the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railroad Company shall have failed to construct its line of road on New York avenue from Seventh street northwest to Boundary street by the time that the Washington and Sandy Spring Narrow Gauge road is completed from Sandy Spring to Boundary street, the said Washington and Sandy Spring Narrow Gauge Railway Company shall have the right to construct a street railway on New York avenue from Boundary street to Seventh street northwest, on the same terms and conditions that are granted to the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railroad Company; and the said Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railroad Company shall have the right to run its cars over the tracks of said road between Seventh street northwest and Boundary street, upon terms and conditions to be agreed upon by the two companies, and in the event of their failure to agree, the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall fix the terms and conditions upon which the said tracks shall be so used.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend, in section 15, line 2, after the word "alter," by inserting "amend;" so as to read:

That Congress reserves to itself the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION TO GIRLS.

The bill (H. R. 5870) to amend the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, for the protection of girls and for the punishment of the crime of rape, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator who reported the bill [Mr. FAULKNER] being absent, it will be passed over, if there be no objection, until he shall return, retaining its place on the Calendar.

ALFRED HEAD.

The bill (H. R. 860) for the relief of Alfred Head was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Alfred Head, or his legal representatives, of $200, the amount of purchase-money paid by him for the west half of the southeast quarter and the east half of the southwest quarter of section 26, township 42, range 22 west, subject to entry at the land office at Fayette, Mo., and subsequently resold by the land office and repurchased by Head.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. COCKRELL May 25, 1888:

The Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 860) for the relief of Alfred Head, have duly considered the same and submit the following report:

In the House of Representatives the following report was made upon this bill, H. R. Report No. 297, Fiftieth Congress, first session, by Hon. C. H. MANSUR, from the Committee on Claims, to wit:

"This bill provides for the refunding by the United States Government of the sum of $200, the repurchase price of certain tracts of land which, after having once been sold to the party for whose relief this bill is designed, was improperly sold again by the Government and repurchased by said Alfred Head. Conclusive proof is presented by the said Head of all the facts relied on, and the case is clearly one calling for the relief prayed for. The committee had presented for examination and consideration the receipts of the officers of the Government who sold the land, together with receipts for taxes paid by said Head for the years intervening between the date of the original entry and second sale, together with the affidavits of himself and others, clearly establishing the justice of this claim. Therefore your committee respectfully recommends that the bill do pass."

At the instance of your committee Hon. JOHN T. HEARD addressed a letter to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and received in reply the following communication, to wit:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., May 17, 1888.

"SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of March 2, 1888, relative to the east half southwest quarter and west half southeast quarter section 26, township 42 north, range 22 west, Missouri, claimed to have been purchased by Alfred Head November 19, 1840, per Fayette cash receipt No. 22479. In reply I have to state that the only indication in this office that Mr. Head purchased said tracts is the following pencil note on the tract books, namely: 'There has been presented at this office a duplicate receipt signed by Uriel Sebree, receiver at Fayette, Mo., issued to Alfred Head for $200 for this land, dated November 19, 1840; number of receipt, 22479.' On the 19th of November, 1840, David Fizer entered the northeast quarter southwest quarter section 29, township 51 north, range 19 west, Missouri, per Fayette cash certificate No. 22479, for which patent was issued April 1, 1843.

"Alfred Head located the said east half southwest quarter and west half southeast quarter section 26, October 28, 1868, per warrant No. 14477, 160 acres, act of 1855, for which a patent was issued January 1, 1870.

"The papers received in your letter are herewith returned.

"Very respectfully,

"T. J. ANDERSON,
"Assistant Commissioner.

"Hon. JNO. T. HEARD,
"House of Representatives."

From the evidence in this case and the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, it is manifest that on the 19th day of November, 1840, Alfred Head entered, at the then Fayette (Mo.) land office, the 160 acres of land described in the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and paid for the same the sum of $200, the cash entry price, and by some error or omission the General Land Office failed to enter on their books this entry, and that subsequently, on October 28, 1868, Mr. Alfred Head located on the said land bounty land-warrant 14477, issued under the act of 1855, relying upon receiving back from the Government the $200 he paid the Government as the cash entrance money for said lands. Therefore your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROUND VALLEY INDIAN RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 1361) to provide for the reduction of the Round Valley Indian reservation, in the State of California, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On page 2, section 2, line 4, after the word "have," I move to insert the word "lawfully;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That said commission shall appraise the value of any and all tracts of agricultural lands within the Round Valley Indian reservation, with the improvements thereon, which have lawfully become the property of individuals by purchase, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, it is rather lonely on this side. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 3772) granting a pension to Perry D. Martin;

A bill (H. R. 4785) granting a pension to Rosanna K. Griffin;

A bill (H. R. 6057) to increase the pension of Edward Healy;

A bill (H. R. 6220) granting a pension to John Taaffe;

A bill (H. R. 6783) to place the name of John A. Griffey on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 7162) for the relief of Mary Nevels;

A bill (H. R. 7253) granting a pension to the widow of Samuel Clary;

A bill (H. R. 7708) to increase the pension of Annie Gibson Yates;
A bill (H. R. 9346) granting a pension to Frank H. Reed;
A bill (H. R. 9520) for the relief of Mary Fitzmorris;
A bill (H. R. 9808) granting an increase of pension to Rebecca Manlove;
A bill (H. R. 10212) to amend an act granting a pension to John Etzell, approved March 3, 1879; and A bill (H. R. 10356) granting a pension to J. T. Vincent.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 2170) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Burlington, in the State of Iowa;
A bill (H. R. 2625) authorizing the erection of a bridge across the Missouri River, at Ponca, Nebr.;
A bill (H. R. 3070) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, in Montana;
A bill (H. R. 3523) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, and to establish it as a post-road;
A bill (H. R. 5095) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Ockmulgee River in the State of Georgia, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 9816) to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Fort Smith, Ark.; and
A bill (H. R. 10128) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a railroad bridge by the Birmingham, Atlantic and Air-Line Railroad and Banking and Navigation Company across the Oconee River, in Laurens County, State of Georgia.

The bill (H. R. 10573) to provide for one additional associate justice of the supreme court of Dakota, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; and

The joint resolution (H. Res. 184) to amend the joint resolution approved May 14, 1888, relating to the disposal of public lands in certain States, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] for the reference of the President's message.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by Mr. SHERMAN December 19, 1887:

Resolved, That the President's annual message be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the people of the country have suffered for many years from excessive, unjust, and unnecessary taxation.

Our present revenue system is vicious, not to say criminal. It exacts from the citizen much more than is needed by the Government for any public or legitimate purpose, which in itself is a great hardship and a wrong; and by this means it withdraws from the channels of trade, commerce, and business of the country many millions of dollars annually and locks it up in the Treasury. Day by day this surplus revenue is increased, and the amount of money in circulation diminished in precisely the same ratio, thus crippling every business enterprise and menacing the country with all the evils consequent upon financial stringency, if not financial panic, and operates as a constant temptation to extravagant and unnecessary appropriations.

The reports of the Secretary of the Treasury show that the amounts thus unnecessarily collected and locked up for the last three years are as follows:

For the fiscal year ending June 30—
1885	$17,359,735.84
1886	49,405,545.20
1887, up to December 1	55,567,849.54

And we are informed by the message of the President that—

> Our surplus revenues have continued to accumulate, the excess for the present year amounting on the 1st day of December to $55,258,701.19, and estimated to reach the sum of $113,600,000 on the 30th June next, at which date it is expected that this sum, added to prior accumulations, will swell the surplus in the Treasury to $140,000,000.

This statement of the President, though based upon estimates, has been fully realized by the collections. At the end of the present fiscal year the surplus will amount to $140,000,000, independent of the fractional silver coin of about $26,000,000, which swells the surplus to $166,000,000. And this, too, notwithstanding the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury has gone to the full extent of his legal authority in the purchase of outstanding bonds for the sinking fund, having so invested $27,684,283.55, paying a premium for most of them as high as 24 per cent. And in order to further relieve the wants of the people and restore to circulation all that it was possible to restore legally, he anticipated the annual interest upon the bonded debt to a large extent.

But notwithstanding these expedients to reduce the surplus in the Treasury, the alarming fact remains that at the end of the present fiscal year, 30th June, 1888, we will have locked up in the Treasury from $150,000,000 to $166,000,000, with no legal method of restoring it to circulation except the purchase of bonds at whatever premium the holders may demand.

Year by year the excess of collections over necessary public expenditures has increased, and if our present revenue system is continued it would seem to be only a question of time as to when the Treasury will swallow up the entire circulation of the country.

In addition to this large sum, unnecessarily extorted from the people and withheld from circulation, technically called surplus, we have for several years kept in the Treasury $100,000,000 in gold coin with which to redeem the outstanding Treasury notes, which nobody wants to have redeemed. And in addition to that $100,000,000 reserve another fund of about $95,000,000 is held there for the redemption of the circulation of national banks which are retiring their circulation or have gone into liquidation.

This shows an aggregate of about $350,000,000 withheld from circulation and unnecessarily kept in the Treasury for no practical purpose.

It is the imperative duty of Congress to devise and apply a remedy for these evils at once. The first and most important of these remedies is to relieve the people from unnecessary burdens by reducing taxation to the strict revenue standard, to the lowest point that will produce a sum sufficient to meet the obligations of and support the Government honestly and economically administered.

The second is to restore to circulation this large surplus in the Treasury by investing it in interest-bearing bonds of the United States and cancel them.

And, third, invest the greater part of the $100,000,000 gold coin reserve held for the redemption of United States Treasury notes, and the greater part of the $95,000,000 of currency held for redemption of national-bank notes, in United States bonds, and hold the bonds, which can be converted into coin as and when money may be needed for the redemption of either Treasury notes or national-bank notes. The interest accruing upon the bonds while so held will more than cover any difference that can occur between the price paid for the bonds and the price at which they are sold, if, indeed, they shall be sold for the purpose of redeeming either Treasury notes or national-bank notes.

Confronted by this large and constantly increasing surplus, none will deny the absolute present and pressing necessity for the reduction of taxation; but the method of reduction is the point upon which there is a conflict of opinion. Certainly no Senator will deny that taxation should be so adjusted as to be least oppressive to the people who are compelled to contribute a part of their earnings to the support of the Government which protects their rights of life, liberty, and property. Nor will it be denied that justice demands that our revenues should be raised by a tax on luxuries as far as possible, so as to relieve to that extent the actual necessaries of life from taxation.

In readjusting our revenue laws we should endeavor to ascertain and adopt that system which will be least oppressive to the largest number of the people of the country.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, we collected—

Under our tariff laws	$217,286,893.13
Under our internal-revenue laws	118,823,391.22
And from sale of lands and miscellaneous sources	35,292,993.31
Making in all	371,403,277.66

Now, to put that $118,823,391.22 into the Treasury it cost the consumers of the distilled spirits, malt liquors, and tobacco, upon which it was raised, a small fraction over 3 per cent. That is, for every dollar the consumers paid, very nearly 97 cents went into the Treasury. And let it not be forgotten, but emphasized, that that amount was raised upon non-necessaries—upon luxuries that no man is compelled to use.

But how is it in respect to the $217,286,893.13 collected under our tariff laws? What did it cost the people to put that into the Treasury?

The following facts, material to this question, can not be truthfully denied:

First. That the importing merchant could not and would not continue from year to year to import any article of merchandise that he could not sell for a profit on what it cost in the foreign market, with the amount of the tariff tax and cost of transportation added.

Second. If the home manufacturer sold the same kind and quality of articles for less price than that demanded for the imported, the importer would be driven from the market and forced to abandon importation.

Third. As long as the importer continues to import and sell, and the home manufacturer continues to manufacture and sell the same kind and quality of article in the same markets, they sell at substantially the same price.

Therefore the conclusion is inevitable that by reason of the tariff tax upon the imported article the home manufacturer is enabled to increase the price of his product to an amount equal to the tax with the cost of transportation and the importer's profits added.

It is, therefore, too clear to admit of doubt or argument that the consumer pays the tax, transportation charges, and importer's profits upon the home-manufactured as well as upon the imported article.

In order to get an approximate estimate of the amount of bounty the tax-payers of the country were compelled to pay to manufacturers under our tariff laws, at my request the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics prepared for me the following table, taken from the official census reports of 1880, which includes only articles in general, if not in universal use, showing the aggregate value of these classes of articles imported for consumption in that year, with the amount of tariff tax imposed upon them, and the value of the home manufactured articles of the same kind consumed during the same year.

Statement showing the values of the principal articles of domestic manufacture consumed in the United States during the census year 1880, and of similar imported dutiable articles entered for consumption during the same year, with the estimated amount of duties collected and the average ad valorem rate of duty thereon.

Articles and classes of articles.	Home manufactured products consumed in 1880.	Imports. Dutiable imported articles of same character entered for consumption in 1880.	Imports. Duties collected 1880.	Imports. Average ad valorem rate of duty.

WM. F. SWITZLER, Chief of Bureau.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS,
May 8, 1888.

This table shows that the people of the country consumed of home-manufactured protected goods, in the year 1880, $2,399,075,706, and of imported dutiable goods of the same kind, sold to consumers in the same year, in competition with the home manufacturer, $307,350,673—more than seven times as many home-manufactured protected goods as imported dutiable goods; or, in other words, it shows that under the operation of tariff taxation the consumers were compelled to pay $7 of bounty to home manufacturers to $1 of revenue they paid into the Treasury.

Apply the same principle to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, when we put into the Treasury, under our tariff laws, $217,286,893.13; assume that the people consumed in that year, as they did in 1880, seven times as many home-manufactured protected goods as of imported dutiable goods, and it shows the startling result of $1,521,008,251 of bounty paid to a favored class in order to put $217,286,893 into the Treasury under this system.

Add the bounty of $1,521,008,251 collected by the manufacturers to the $217,286,893 of revenue collected by the Treasury, and it shows that the people have paid in a single year under this system the enormous sum of $1,738,295,144.

But when the people complain of exorbitant and unnecessasy taxation and a surplus hoarded in the Treasury, which endangers the business interests of the country, the protectionists answer, we must protect American labor. And the manufacturer says, we must have protection to the extent of enabling us to pay the difference in the cost of American labor and the pauper labor of Europe.

Declarations such as these appeal with much force to the mind of every laboring man, but are they true? Does protection protect labor? I will endeavor to show from authentic official data that they are not true, and that capital and not labor is the chief if not the only beneficiary of protection.

On the 17th May, 1879, the Hon. William M. Evarts, then Secretary of State, but now a distinguished Republican Senator from New York, addressed a letter to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, transmitting reports from United States consuls in relation to the state of labor in Europe, in which he gives tables showing the wages paid to certain classes of skilled laborers in the several countries in Europe, and in New York and Chicago.

While these tables show that, when measured by dollars and cents, higher wages are paid in this country than in Europe, and that breadstuffs, beef, mutton, veal, and pork cost a little more in Europe than in this country, they fail to show how much less the blankets, flannels, and every other necessary article of clothing costs the laborer in that country than in this.

But, on page 37 of that letter Mr. Evarts says:

One workman in the United States, as will be seen from the foregoing extracts, does as much work as two workmen in most of the countries in Europe. * * * We have no oppressed and stupid peasantry, little more intelligent than the tools they handle. All are self-thinking, self-acting, and self-supporting.

Within the last fifteen years we have demonstrated our ability, by the brilliant development of our own resources, to exclude, by honest competition, foreign manufactures, to a large extent, from our shores.

The question which now peremptorily challenges all thinking minds is how to create a foreign demand for those manufactures which are left after supplying our home demands. We can not stand still, for the momentum of increase will soon become so great that it will push us outward anyway; to push us safely and profitably is of so much importance as to almost overtop all other public questions of the hour.

This question appeals equally to the selfishness and patriotism of all our citizens, but to the laborer it appeals with tenfold force, for without work he can not live, and unless we can extend the markets for our manufactures he can not expect steady work, and unless our manufacturers can undersell foreign manufactures we can not enlarge our foreign market.

This statement of Secretary Evarts is the philosophic and statesmanlike view of the question with which we are confronted. Our capacity for manufacturing is superior to that of any country in the world.

The telegraph has put the civilized world on speaking terms, and steam navigation has practically annihilated distance between civilized countries, the products of every country being thus made available to every other country at small expense for transportation.

The question for the American people to decide is, will we encourage the policy of exchange on reasonable terms of our surplus commodities for the commodities of other countries, or will we build a Chinese wall around our country, in the shape of a protective tariff, which shall handicap, if not effectually prevent exchange of commodities of all countries with us?

The capitalists who own our manufactories and the product of these manufactories, are, by existing laws, protected from foreign competition by an import tax that averages 47.10 per cent.

The intent, purpose, and effect of this law is to enable the American manufacturer to sell his product to the American people for 47.10 per cent. more than the same kind and quality of article could be imported and sold for in our markets, and 47.10 per cent. more than they could be sold for on the markets of the world.

The product belongs to the capitalist, not to the laborer who produced it. The 47.10 per cent. advanced price goes to the capitalist, not to the laborer.

I assert, and it will not be denied, that the manufacturers buy their labor at the lowest price that competition in the labor markets of the world will bring it to, and that the American laborer has to compete with the laborers of the civilized world (except China), there being no tax on the importation of labor; and I further assert that when some ingenius inventor brings out a machine that will do the work of twenty or fifty hands at less cost than the work can be performed by manual labor, the machine is bought and the twenty or fifty hands are discharged to find work, food, and shelter elsewhere if they can.

This cry on the part of capitalist manufacturers for the protection of labor is a miserable false pretense; their real object is increased profits to capital.

There is no interest in this country so worthy of consideration as that of labor, but to what extent is the labor of the country interested in or benefited by a high protective tariff?

Does it increase the wages of the operatives in the manufactory? No. The manufacturer buys his labor at the lowest price he can get it, and labor comes here from all countries free.

Does it increase the wages of agricultural labor? No. It compels him to pay an average of 47.10 per cent. more for what he consumes, and handicaps the exporter of agricultural products by compelling him to demand in the foreign market at least 47.10 per cent. of the value of his cargo in cash, to enable him to pay the import tax imposed upon such surplus commodities of other countries as he may wish to exchange for and import.

The same is true with regard to the carpenter, the blacksmith, the tailor, the seamstress, and every other laborer in the country. They are all compelled to pay the average of 47.10 per cent. for what they consume, while laborers may come from all countries in the world (except China) free of tax and enter into competition with them, and their employers always buy their labor at the lowest price that competition will bring it to.

If ex-Secretary Evarts is right, as I doubt not he is, when he says, in the letter above quoted, that our intelligent American labor accomplishes twice as much in the same time as European labor, even if we pay our labor twice the wages that are paid in Europe, the product is twice as great, and therefore the cost of labor that enters into production in this country and in that is about the same.

But the question for the laborers in the American mills to decide for themselves is this: Is it better for them to continue a high protective tariff, which tempts the manufacturer to limit production to the demands of home consumption, because he can get 47.10 per cent. more here than in the markets of the world? If that policy is maintained, whenever supply exceeds demand the mills stop, to allow consumption to catch up with production and stimulate demand, and the laborer is thrown out of employment for the time. Would it not be infinitely better for labor to have steady employment, even at lower wages, than to have employment for half or two-thirds of the year, as at present, and be idle the balance of the time?

For more than a quarter of a century we have had a high protective tariff, and manufacturers have grown rich. Have the laborers they employed grown rich also? Has protection protected them? Let the almost universal discontent which prevails and the strikes and lockouts of which we see almost daily accounts from the manufacturing and mining districts answer.

I quote from the able argument of the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] the following data on that subject:

The organization of workingmen into unions, through which they act with a force and power unknown to the disorganized mass, is the cause and secret of the little increase that has occurred in wages in the last thirty years. The concession is made to their power to take care of themselves and to resent injustice by inflicting damage on their employers. It is to their own efforts on this line and not to the tariff that any amelioration in their condition is due. I have before me a table furnished, at my request, by Hon. Carroll D. Wright, Chief of the Labor Bureau, giving a summary of labor strikes in the United States from 1881 to 1886, both inclusive, which shows for the period named 3,903 strikes, in which 22,336 establishments were involved and 13,443 temporarily closed.

It shows that the employés actually engaged in these strikes numbered 1,020,832, and that those actually engaged with others involved aggregate 1,324,402. It shows that the loss to laborers from these strikes amounted to $51,819,163 and to employers $30,731,653. The year 1887 is not included in the table, but the strikes during 1886 numbered 1,412. It shows 2,182 establishments in which lock-outs—that is, expulsion of employés by proprietors—occurred because of their refusal to comply with conditions they deemed oppressive, and 158,548 employés were locked out. These figures speak eloquently of the fierce struggle being made by the American workingman for fair living wages, and of the dogged obstinacy with which his demands are being resisted.

What a commentary they are upon the professions of those who contend for the war tariff, which produces $160,000,000 per annum more than the Government can spend, simply, as they say, to enable them to pay good wages to our laboring people. The profound discontent of which these figures, embracing more than half of all the people laboring in the protected industries, are conclusive evidence could not exist except in consequence of a deeply exciting cause, and that cause can be no other than the inadequacy of the wages paid for the livelihood of the laborers. What better or more conclusive proof than that furnished by this condition of our laboring people of the utter falsity of the claim that our present high protective tariff is in the interest of American labor? Let Republican Senators who so eloquently describe the wretchedness of the pauper labor of Europe ponder well the condition of American labor as disclosed by the well-verified labor-strike figures I have given; and if still doubting let them turn to the three volumes of testimony on every Senator's table taken by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor in 1885, touching the relations of labor and capital.

They will find in this testimony taken by a committee presided over by a high protective Republican chairman (Mr. BLAIR, of New Hampshire), tales of destitution, misery, and wretchedness among American laborers rivaling in pathos any ever told of pauper labor in Europe. I can not refer at length to this testimony for want of time, but will read from the testimony of Thomas O'Donnell, of Fall River, Mass., commencing on page 451 of the third volume of testimony. I will ask that the Secretary read the paragraphs marked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

"Thomas O'Donnell examined.

* * * * * * * *

"LIFE OF A MULE-SPINNER.

"Q. What is your business?

"A. I am a mule-spinner by trade. I have worked at it since I have been in this country—eleven years.

"Q. Are you a married man?

"A. Yes, sir; I am a married man; have a wife and two children. I am not very well educated. I went to work when I was young, and have been working ever since in the cotton business; went to work when I was about eight or nine years old. I was going to state how I live. My children get along very well in summer time, on account of not having to buy fuel or shoes or one thing and another. I earn $1.50 a day and can't afford to pay very big house rent. I pay $1.50 a week rent, which comes to about $6 a month.

"Q. That is, you pay this where you are at Fall River?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Do you have work right along?

"A. No, sir; since that strike we had down in Fall River about three years ago I have not worked much more than half the time, and that has brought my circumstances down very much.

"Q. Why have you not worked more than half the time since then?

"A. Well, at Fall River if a man has not got a boy to act as 'back boy' it is very hard for him to get along. In a great many cases they discharge men in that work and put in men who have boys.

"Q. Men who have boys of their own?

"A. Men who have boys of their own capable enough to work in a mill, to earn 30 or 40 cents a day.

* * * * * * * *

"ONE DOLLAR AND A HALF A DAY FOR NINE MONTHS TO SUPPORT SIX PEOPLE TWELVE MONTHS.

"I have a brother who has four children, besides his wife and himself. All he earns is $1.50 a day. He works in the iron works at Fall River. He only works about nine months out of twelve. There is generally about three months of stoppage, taking the year right through, and his wife and his family all have to be supported for a year out of the wages of nine months—$1.50 a day for nine months out of the twelve to support six of them. It does not stand to reason that those children and he himself can have natural food or be naturally dressed. His children are often sick and he has to call in doctors. That is always hanging over him and is a great expense to him. And then if he does not pay the bill the trustee law comes on him. That is a thing that is not properly looked after. A man told me the other day that he was trusteed for $1.75, and I understood that there was a law in this State that a man could not be trusteed for less than $10. It seems to me there is something wrong in the Government somewhere; where it is I can't tell.

"Q. How much money have you got?

"A. I have not got a cent in the house; didn't have when I came out this morning.

"Q. How much money have you had within three months?

"A. I have had about $16 inside of three months.

"Q. Is that all you have had within the last three months to live on?

"A. Yes; $16.

"SUPPORTING A FAMILY ON $133 A YEAR.

"Q. How much have you had within a year?

"A. Since Thanksgiving I happened to get work in the Crescent Mill and worked there exactly thirteen weeks. I got just $1.50 a day, with the exception of a few days that I lost—because in following up mule-spinning you are obliged to lose a day once in a while; you can't follow it up regularly.

"Q. Thirteen weeks would be seventy-eight days, and, at $1.50 a day, that would make $117, less whatever time you lost.

"A. Yes. I worked thirteen weeks there and ten days in another place, and then there was a dollar I got this week, Wednesday.

"Q. Taking a full year back can you tell how much you have had?

"A. That would be about fifteen weeks' work. Last winter, as I told you, I got in, and I worked up to about somewhere around Fast day, or may be New Year's day; anyway, Mr. Howard has it down on his record, if you wish to have an exact answer to that question; he can answer it better than I can, because we have a sort of union there to keep ourselves together.

"Q. Do you think you have had $150 within a year?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. Have you had $125?

"A. Well, I could figure it up if I had time. The thirteen weeks is all I have had.

"Q. The thirteen weeks and the $16 you have mentioned?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. That would be somewhere about $133, if you have not lost any time.

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. That is all you have had?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. To support yourself and wife and two children?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Have you had any help from outside?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. Do you mean that yourself and wife and two children have had nothing but that for all this time?

"Q. That is all. I got a couple dollars' worth of coal last winter, and the wood I picked up myself. I goes round with a shovel and picks up clams and wood.

"DIGGING CLAMS TO EKE OUT AN EXISTENCE.

"Q. What do you do with the clams?

"A. We eat them. I don't get them to sell, but just to eat, for the family. That is the way my brother lives, too, mostly. He lives close by us.

"Q. How many live in that way down there?

"A. I could not count them, they are so numerous. I suppose there are one thousand down there.

"Q. A thousand that live on $150 a year?

"A. They live on less.

"Q. Less than that?

"A. Yes; they live on less than I do.

"Q. How long has that been so?

"A. Mostly so since I have been married.

"Q. How long is that?

"A. Six years this month.

"Q. Why do you not go West, on a farm?

"A. How could I go, walk it?

"TOO POOR TO GO WEST.

"Q. Well, I want to know why you do not go out West on a $2,000 farm, or take up a homestead and break it and work it up, and then have it for yourself and family?

"A. I can't see how I could get out West; I have got nothing to go with.

"Q. It would not cost you over $1,500.

"A. Well, I never saw over a $20 bill, and that is when I have been getting a month's pay at once. If some one would give me $1,500 I will go.

"Q. Is there any prospect that anybody will do that?

"A. I don't know of anybody that would.

"Q. You say you think there are a thousand men or so with their families that live in that way in Fall River?

"A. Yes, sir; and I know many of them. They are around there by the score. You can see them every day; and I am sure of it because men tell me.

"Q. Are you a good workman?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Were you ever turned off because of misconduct or incapacity or unfitness for work?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. Or because you did bad work?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. Or because you made trouble among the help?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. Did you ever have any personal trouble with an employer?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. You have not anything now, you say?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. How old are you?

"A. About thirty.

"Q. Is your health good?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What would you work for if you could get work right along; if you could be sure to have it for five years, staying right where you are?

"A. Well, if I was where my family could be with me, and I could have work every day, I would take $1.50 and be glad.

"Q. One dollar and fifty cents a day, with three hundred days to the year, would make more than you make now in three or four years, would it not?

"ONLY A DOLLAR'S WORTH OF COAL IN TEN MONTHS.

"A. Well, I would have no opportunity then to pick up clams. I have had no coal except one dollar's worth since last Christmas.

"Q. When do the clams give out?

"A. They give out in winter.

"Q. You spoke of fuel—what do you have for fuel?

"A. Wood and coal.

"Q. Where does the wood come from?

"A. I pick it up around the shore, any old pieces I see around that are not good for anything. There are many more that do the same thing.

"Q. Do you get meat to live on much?

"A. Very seldom.

"Q. What kind of meats do you get for your family?

"A. Well, once in awhile we gets a piece of pork and some clams and make a clam-chowder. That makes a very good meal. We sometimes get a piece of corn-beef or something like that.

"Q. Have you had any fresh beef within a month?

"A. Yes; we had a piece of porksteak for four of us yesterday.

"Q. Have you had any beef within a month?

"A. No, sir; I was invited to a man's house on Sunday. He wanted me to go up to his house, and we had a dinner of roast pork.

"Q. That was an invitation out; but I mean have you had any beefsteak in your own family, of your own purchase, within a month?

"A. Yes; there was a half a pound or a pound, one Sunday, I think it was.

"Q. Have you had only a pound or half a pound on Sunday?

"A. That is all.

"Q. A half pound of pork?

"A. Yes. About 2 pounds of pork I guess we have had in the month, to make clam-chowder with, and sometimes to fry a bit.

"Q. And there are four of you in the family?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How many pounds of beefsteak have you had in your family, that you bought for your own home consumption within this year that we have been speaking of?

"A. I don't think there has been 5 pounds of beefsteak.

"Q. You have had a little porksteak?

"A. We had half a pound of porksteak yesterday; I don't know when we had any before.

"Q. What other kinds of meat have you had within a year?

"A. Well, we have had corn-beef twice, I think, that I can remember this year—on Sunday, for dinner.

"Q. Twice is all that you can remember within a year?

"A. Yes—and some cabbage.

"Q. What have you eaten?

"A. Well, bread mostly, when we could get it; we sometimes couldn't make out to get that, and have had to go without a meal.

"Q. Has there been any day in the year that you have had to go without anything to eat?

"A. Yes, sir; several days.

"Q. More than one day at a time.

"A. No.

"Q. How about the children and your wife—did they go without anything to eat, too?

"THE CHILDREN CRYING FOR FOOD.

"A. My wife went out this morning and went to a neighbor's and got a loaf of bread and fetched it home, and when she got home the children were crying for something to eat.

"Q. Have the children had anything to eat to-day except that, do you think?

"A. They had that loaf of bread; I don't know what they have had since then, if they have had anything.

"Q. Did you leave any money at home?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. If that loaf is gone, is there anything in the house?

"A. No, sir; unless my wife goes out and gets something. I don't know who would mind the children while she goes out.

"Q. Has she any money to get anything with?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. Have the children gone without a meal at any time during the year?

"A. They have gone without bread some days, but we have sometimes got meal and made porridge of it.

"Q. What kind of meal?

"A. Sometimes Indian meal, and sometimes oatmeal.

"Q. Meal stirred up in hot water?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Is it cold weather down there now?

"A. It is very cold now.

"SCANT CLOTHING IN COLD WEATHER.

"Q. What have the children got in the way of clothing?

"A. They have got along very nicely all summer, but now they are beginning to feel quite sickly. One has one shoe on, a very poor one, and a slipper, that was picked up somewhere. The other has two odd shoes on, with the heel out. He has got cold and is sickly now.

"Q. Have they any stockings?

"A. He had got stockings, but his feet comes through them, for there is a hole in the bottom of the shoe.

"Q. What have they got on the rest of their person?

"A. Well, they have a little calico shirt—what should be a shirt; it is sewed up in some shape—and one little petticoat, and a kind of little dress.

"Q. How many dresses has your wife got?

"A. She has got one since she was married, and she hasn't worn that more than half a dozen times; she has worn it just going to church and coming back. She is very good in going to church, but when she comes back she takes it off, and it is pretty near as good now as when she bought it.

"Q. She keeps that dress to go to church in?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How many dresses aside from that has she?

"A. Well, she got one here three months ago.

"Q. What did it cost?

"A. It cost $1 to make it, and I guess about a dollar for the stuff, as near as I can tell.

"Q. The dress cost $2?

"A. Yes.

"Q. What else has she?

"A. Well, she has an undershirt that she got given to her, and she has an old wrapper, which is about a mile too big for her; somebody gave it to her.

"Q. She did not buy it?

"A. No; that is all that I know that she has.

"Q. You have had $1 or $2 worth of coal last winter?

"A. I think it was a quarter of a ton, and I believe it was $2.25 worth.

"Q. Is that all you have had?

"A. That is all I had last winter. All the rest I picked up—wood.

"Q. Did you try to get work?

"A. I was working last winter.

"Q. You say that a good many others are situated just like you are?

"A. Yes, sir; I should say as many as a thousand down at Fall River are just in the same shape, if not worse; though they can't be much worse. I have heard many women say they would sooner be dead than living. I don't know what is wrong, but something is wrong. There is an overflow of labor at Fall River.

* * * * * * *

"Q. You live in a hired tenement?

"A. Yes; but of course I can't pay a big rent. My rent is $6 a month. The man I am living under would come and put me right out and give me no notice either if I didn't pay my rent. He is a sheriff and auctioneer man. I don't know whether he has any authority to do it or not, but he does it with people.

"Q. Do you see any way out of your troubles—what are you going to do for a living—or do you expect to have to stay right there?

"A. Yes. I can't run around with my family?

"Q. You have nowhere to go to, and no way of getting there if there was any place to go to?

"A. No, sir; I have no means nor anything, so I am obliged to remain there and try to pick up something as I can."

In order to test the truth of the pretense that the protectionists want a tariff only high enough to cover the difference between the cost of labor in this country and in Europe, I present the following table prepared by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics at the instance of my friend Senator COKE, of Texas, and heretofore presented by him:

Table of specified manufactures, showing amount of capital, value of materials, amount of wages, and value of product, with the per cent. of material and wages, also the average ad valorem rate of duty on similar importations for the fiscal year 1887.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS, January 25, 1888.

Hon. RICHARD COKE, United States Senate, Washington City, D. C.

WM. F. SWITZLER, Chief of Bureau.

From this table it appears that the duties imposed by our present tariff laws are not only equal to the difference between the cost of labor in this and other countries, but are more than double the whole cost of the labor which produces the home article.

Take cotton cloth, an article in universal use. The labor that enters into its cost amounts to 21.88 per cent. The tax amounts to 45.49 per cent., the increased price paying the whole cost of labor and leaving a profit to capital of 23.61 per cent. Take woolen goods, used by every member of every family. The cost of labor in producing them is 16.08 per cent. The tax upon them is 67.21 per cent., nearly four times as much as the whole cost of labor. It leaves a net profit to capital of 51.13.

Take the various and multiform manufactures of iron and steel; the cost of labor that enters into their production is 18.77 per cent. The average tariff tax upon them is 40.92 per cent., leaving a net profit to capital of 22.15 per cent.

This table shows that labor receives a very meager part of the bounty extorted in the name of labor, and what he does receive is not bounty, not extra allowance, not profit, but the only compensation for his honest work, while capital appropriates to itself the lion's share. I can not state with precision the difference in the wages paid manufacturing operatives in this country and in England (our greatest manufacturing competitor) when measured in dollars and cents, but assume it to average 50 per cent. more in this country than in that.

But when measured by another and a truer standard, that is, by the necessaries of life that the wages of a week's work will buy, the English operative probably has the advantage. For while the American gets more money he has to pay an average of 47 per cent. more for all he buys than the Englishman pays, and unfortunately the manufacturing operatives of both countries are so poorly paid that their earnings have to go on Saturday evenings for the necessaries which have supported their families during the week.

But for the purposes of this argument we will assume that the wages paid manufacturing laborers in this country are twice as great as those paid in any other country, and let us see how much protection is necessary to enable the manufacturer to pay the difference in cost of labor. Referring again to the official table already quoted, we see that the whole cost of labor that enters into the cost of the following products is as follows:

	Whole cost of labor.	Ad valorem.
Manufactures of cotton cloths	21.88	45.49
Manufactures of iron and steel	18.77	40.92
Manufactures of woolen goods	16.08	67.21

From this statement it is clear that a tax of 20 per cent. ad valorem would not only pay the difference in the cost of labor in this and other countries, but more than pay the whole cost of the labor which enters into the production of these articles; and this would leave a net profit to capital of 27.10 per cent. under our present system.

But the argument of the protectionists for the protection of labor refers wholly to the labor employed in our manufactories and such supplies as that labor may draw from agriculture and other trades.

But when all the demands of the manufacturers have been filled the agriculturist finds himself with a large surplus that must find a market in foreign countries or perish upon his hands, in respect to which the foreign market fixes the home price.

Take the article of cotton. We raise more than three times as much as can be consumed in this country. We are compelled to send the surplus abroad; the Liverpool market controls the home price. Labor is the chief element of cost in its production. We are compelled to put it on the markets of the world in competition with the labor of all cotton-growing countries of the world. The laborer who produces it is not and can not be protected by any import tax, for no country would send cotton to this. Yet the cotton producer is taxed at the rate of 47.10 per cent. on every implement he uses and on all that he consumes to pay bounties to manufacturers, and embarrassed by the fact that he can not exchange his cotton for supplies that he would be glad to bring to this country unless he can get 47 per cent. of the value of his cargo in cash, to enable him to pay the duties on the articles for which he has exchanged his cotton.

By this system you force the agricultural laborer to work in competition with the labor, pauper or other, of the whole world, and to sell his commodity in the markets of the world at such price as that market may fix. The same is true with regard to breadstuffs, meats, dairy products, and tobaccos. Would anybody be fool enough to ship coal to Newcastle, or cotton, breadstuffs, meat, or dairy products to the United States? We have a large surplus of these that we are compelled to send abroad each and every year or allow them to perish on our hands, and being compelled to send them abroad we are compelled to take the exporter's price for them, and his price is fixed by what he knows he can get in the foreign market, less the transportation charges and such profit as he thinks reasonable.

The agriculturists interested in this question are very much more numerous than the manufacturing laborers, and as I think equally worthy of consideration.

You can not protect the cotton-grower, the producer of breadstuffs, meat, or dairy products by any import tax you could impose, for nobody would import any of these articles into this country. But you can, and you ought to relieve this agricultural labor from the unjust burdens that are imposed upon it by the high tax that it is compelled to pay on every implement it uses and every article it consumes.

In 1789, when manufacturing in this country was in its infancy, and an experiment, and the Government greatly in need of revenue, Congress levied a tax upon importations of 8½ per cent. The next year it was increased to 11 per cent., and in 1792 it was again increased to 13½ per cent., and even under these conditions manufacturing expanded and prospered. But we have now the skill that a hundred years' experience has given, and have become the greatest manufacturing country in the world. Yet we have a war tax of 47.10 per cent. on imports, which puts into the Treasury more than $100,000,000 a year that we have no public or legitimate use for, but our unselfish infant manufacturers only one hundred years old tell us if we reduce this tax we will bring ruin not only upon them but upon the whole country as well. So far as I am concerned I shall be glad to experiment with such ruin.

I do not mean by this, opposition to manufacturers. Far from it; I earnestly desire to see the labor of the country diversified, and to see all of our manufacturers, as well as all other industries, successful and prosperous. But I do mean that I am not willing to see every other interest, and every other industry and enterprise in the country unjustly taxed to pay bounties to a small class of capitalists who chance to have invested their money in manufacturing establishments.

But the present condition of affairs in this country indicates unmistakably that monopoly rules.

The favored few, whose products are protected as against foreign competition by an import tax of 47.10 per cent., fearing that competition amongst themselves might reduce the cost of the necessaries of life to the consumers, and to that extent reduce the profits of monopoly, enter into trusts and combinations to fix prices and limit production.

To illustrate, I will here read the agreement of a combination of the cotton manufacturers of North Carolina, entered into on the 28th day of April, 1888. This paper was sent me by a firm of wholesale merchants. I will not give their names, but will say that their commercial standing is excellent and their respectability unquestioned.

GREENSBOROUGH, N. C., April 28, 1888.

The following are the resolutions adopted by the Southern Plaid Manufacturers' Association, organized this day:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Southern Plaid Manufacturers' Association, this day assembled in Greensborough, N. C., that the condition of the plaids market demands a reduction of production, and to this end we, the undersigned plaid manufacturers, do hereby agree to reduce our production one-third each month, either by stopping our plaid looms two days in each week or by stopping one-third of our plaid looms from Tuesday, May 1, to the 1st day of August, 1888.

And we further bind ourselves that from and after this date, for the term of ninety days, we will not sell or offer to sell, either directly or indirectly, any 25-inch 5-yard plaids at a less sum than 5½ cents per yard, sixty days or 2 per cent. ten days; and we will not, for the term of ninety days from this date, sell or offer to sell, directly or indirectly, any 27-inch plaids at a less sum than 6 cents per yard, sixty days or 2 per cent. ten days, with no extra dating in either case.

That we agree and bind ourselves not to employ each others' hands unless application is accompanied by a written approval from the agent or superintendent of the mill from which said application comes.

We do hereby agree to make a weekly report to the secretary of this association upon a printed form to be furnished by said secretary, showing number of looms in our mills and number operated each week, number of days run, and number of pieces produced.

And upon failure to furnish said report on or before Tuesday of each week we agree to forfeit and pay the sum of $5, to be used in paying the current expenses of this association, and that the secretary furnish each member of this association a tabulated statement each week of the returns.

But our North Carolina friends are not entitled to either the credit or the blame of having originated this method of robbing the whole people to enrich themselves. It had been invented and put in operation by their brother monopolists all over the North long before the 28th April, 1888.

Here is a list of some of the trusts which antedate them, with a statement of the ad valorem tax on each article, which, to that extent, makes competition from abroad impossible, and the trust silences the voice of home competition, so that the consumer has no alternative but to submit to the exactions of the monopolists.

How tenderly these capitalist manufacturers guard the interests of the laboring man. They generously consent to give him, as full compensation for his labor, nearly one-half of the amount that tariff taxation, with the aid of trusts and combinations, increases the price of the article that his labor has produced; but when the single brain that controls the trust says production must stop until consumption catches up with supply and increases demand, the manufactory shuts down and allows the laborer to rest without pay and without inquiry as to how he is to live in the mean time, and allows the agriculturist to hunt for a market for his surplus products which the protectionists promised should be brought to his door by encouraging manufacturing.

It is shown by the census of 1880 that there were 17,392,099 of our population engaged in all kinds of industries.

This includes—

Persons engaged in agriculture	7,670,493
Persons engaged in the professions	1,139,362
Persons who were domestic servants and laborers	2,934,876
Persons engaged in trade and transportation	1,810,256
Carpenters and joiners	375,143
Milliners, dress-makers, and seamstresses	385,401

Butchers	76,241
Bakers	41,309
Plasterers	22,083
Persons engaged in manufacturing agricultural implements	4,891
Persons employed in such mining and manufacturing industries as it is claimed are benefited by a high tariff	2,623,089

There are about three times as many persons engaged in agriculture alone as in mining and manufacturing. They are entitled to consideration by reason of their superior numbers—but they are entitled to much higher consideration by reason of the fact that they are the producers of wealth that did not exist before. It is their production which gives life, employment, and prosperity to all other industries and vocations. They not only feed and clothe the people of our own country, but, from year to year, they furnish about 80 per cent. of our exports, which bring to us the money and products of other countries.

If class legislation was legitimate or proper in any case (which it is not), the agricultural interest is immeasurably most deserving and should receive the first and highest consideration. But instead of extending the strong hand of the Government to protect, foster, and encourage this greatest and most important of all of our great interests, the policy of the Government for the last quarter of a century has been to prostitute the taxing power to the illegitimate purpose of loading it down with burdens almost unendurable for no better reason than that the capital, not the labor, employed in manufacturing may reap illegitimate rewards.

The taxing power was given to Congress for no other purpose than that of raising the revenue necessary to enable the Federal Government to perform the duties devolved upon it by the Constitution (unless used as a retaliatory measure in the regulation of commerce). When exercised, revenue should be the object, and its exercise strictly limited to the actual revenue necessities of the Government honestly and economically administered.

It is safe to assume that with the present tax on distilled spirits, malt liquors, and tobacco we can raise annually $120,000,000; from the sales of public lands and miscellaneous sources, $30,000,000; making $150,000,000.

But it is said that the internal revenue is a war tax. Admitted; and so is the high protective tariff a war tax. But we have a rapidly increasing pension-roll, which, with the interest upon the war debt, is about equal to the receipts from internal-revenue taxation.

Let this war tax remain to pay a legitimate war debt, because, first, it is raised on non-necessaries, and, second, it costs consumers only about 3 per cent. to put it in the Treasury, while under the tariff taxation it costs them about seven dollars of bounty to put one dollar into the Treasury.

Certainly there are no more proper objects of taxation than non-necessaries, such as whisky, tobacco, and malt liquors; let those who consume them foot the bills, and put their $120,000,000 into the Treasury annually, and to that extent relieve from the burdens of taxation the actual necessaries of life which every man, the poorest as well as the most wealthy, must have.

Raising from these sources $150,000,000, ascertain the additional amount necessary, and so adjust your tariff taxation as to raise it by the imposition of the smallest duties that will accomplish the object, raising the largest amount possible upon luxuries. Put upon the free-list all articles except luxuries which do not come in competition with American production, so as to give to home producers such incidental protection as a strictly revenue tariff will give; but let revenue be the object and protection the incident. And let revenue necessities, not the demands of the manufacturer, limit the amount of the tax.

I deny the right of the Government to exert its power to favor any one class of citizens at the expense of another.

I quote from the decision of Mr. Justice Miller in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Loan Association vs. Topeka, 20 Wallace, page 663. Amongst other things Justice Miller says:

The power to tax is, therefore, the strongest, the most pervading of all the powers of government, reaching directly or indirectly to all classes of the people. It was said by Chief-Justice Marshall in the case of McCulloch vs. The State of Maryland, that the power to tax is the power to destroy.

A striking instance of the truth of the proposition is seen in the fact that the existing tax of 10 per cent. imposed by the United States on the circulation of all other banks than the national banks drove out of existence every State bank of circulation within a year or two after its passage. This power can as readily be employed against one class of individuals and in favor of another so as to ruin the one class and give unlimited wealth and prosperity to the other, if there is no limitation of the uses for which the power may be exercised. To lay with one hand the power of the Government on the property of the citizen, and with the other to bestow it upon favored individuals to aid private enterprises and build up private fortunes, is none the less a robbery because it is done under the forms of law and is called taxation. This is not legislation. It is a decree under legislative forms. Nor is it taxation. A "tax," says Webster's Dictionary, "is a rate or sum of money assessed on the person or property of a citizen by government for the use of the nation or state." Taxes are burdens or charges imposed by the legislature upon persons or property to raise money for public purposes.

It is a usurpation of power and a gross injustice to extort from one citizen a part of his earnings to increase the profits of another.

When taxation is imposed to meet the actual necessities of the Government, imposed for public not private purposes, every citizen will cheerfully respond; but when imposed or increased beyond the public needs in order to increase the profits of one class at the expense of other classes, it becomes legalized robbery, and the Government lending itself to such schemes is entitled to no higher respect than the common ruffian who demands of the traveler to stand and deliver. The Government and the ruffian occupy the same relation to society. The act of each is in violation of the Constitution, in violation of every principle of justice and right, and deserves the same rebuke at the hands of the civilized world.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. HARRIS. Let the resolution lie on the table, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table.

RAILROAD BRIDGE ACROSS BAYOU D'ARBONNE, LOUISIANA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2199) authorizing the Little Rock and Alexandria Railway Company to maintain and construct a bridge across Bayou D'Arbonne, in Louisiana, which was, on page 2, section 3, line 23, after the words "United States," to add:

And equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph companies; and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for postal telegraph purposes.

The bill and amendment were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

NAVY AND MARINE CORPS DESERTIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order for this day will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 62) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator in charge of that bill is not in his seat, and I ask that it may be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to consider Order of Business 1150, being the bill (H. R. 1508) to relieve certain appointed or enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps from the charge of desertion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the special order will be informally laid aside, and the bill the title of which has just been stated will be considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. This bill is intended to place the sailors on the same level in regard to the charge of desertion in which by law the soldiers of the Army have been placed, and it is intended to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to remove the charge of desertion against enlisted men and sailors on the same terms and under like circumstances as the Secretary of War is now authorized by law to remove the charge of desertion from soldiers.

At my instance the bill was passed over in order that I might prepare some amendment so as to make it conform more exactly to the law as it now exists in regard to the Army. I ask that the bill may be read, and as it is read I will offer the amendments that should be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, which was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs was, in section 1, line 6, after the word "war," to strike out "shall" and insert "may in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy;" so as to read:

That the charge of desertion now standing on the pay or muster rolls of the Navy or Marine Corps against any appointed or enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps who served in the late war may in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy be removed in all cases where it shall be made to appear, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move, in lines 3 and 4, where the words "on the pay or muster rolls" occur, to strike out the words "pay or muster," and after the word "rolls" to insert the words "and records;" so as to read:

That the charge of desertion now standing on the rolls and records of the Navy or Marine Corps.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. After the word "war," in line 6, I move to insert "in the volunteer service;" so as to read:

Against any appointed or enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps who served in the late war in the volunteer service, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be removed, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, in section 1, line 8, after the word "appear," to strike out "to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, in line 9, after the word "rolls," I move to insert "and records;" so as to read:

From such rolls and records.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 12 of section 1, after the date 1865, near the end of the line, I move to insert:

Having previously served six months or more.

So as to make it applicable only to those who served six months or more.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

Mr. COCKRELL. In section 2, line 3, before the word "rolls," I move to strike out "pay or muster;" and, after "rolls," to insert "or records;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to remove the charge of desertion standing on the rolls or records of the Navy or Marine Corps against any appointed or enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps who served in the late war, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 5, after the word "war," I move to insert "in the volunteer service;" so that it shall only apply to those who were in the volunteer service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of section 3.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 2 of section 3, before the word "rolls," I move to strike out "pay or muster," and after "rolls" to insert "or records," and in line 4, after the word "war," to insert the words "in the volunteer service;" so as to read:

SEC. 3. That the charge of desertion now standing on the rolls or records of the Navy or Marine Corps against any appointed or enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps who served in the late war in the volunteer service by reason of his having enlisted at any station or on board of any vessel of the Navy without having first received a discharge from the station or vessel in which he had previously served, shall be removed, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of section 4.

Mr. COCKRELL. After the word "any," in line 3, of section 4, I move to insert the word "such," so as to refer only to those in the volunteer service without inserting those words again.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of section 5.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 3, of section 5, before the word "appointed," I move to insert the word "such;" so as to refer to the same class of persons.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT NATCHEZ, MISS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1669) authorizing the Mississippi and Louisiana Bridge and Railroad Company, of Natchez, Miss., to construct a bridge over the Mississippi River at or near Natchez, Miss.

Mr. WALTHALL. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. VEST, Mr. CAMERON, and Mr. DOLPH were appointed.

BRAZOS RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. COKE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2831) for improving the mouth of the Brazos River, Texas, which is at the point where the call of the Calendar stopped.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 17, after the words "prescribed by," to strike out "the by-laws of said corporation, and in conformity with the laws of the State of Texas," and to insert "regulations that may be made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, in conformity with the laws of the United States;" so as to read:

That the Brazos River Channel and Dock Company, a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Texas, be, and are hereby, authorized, on the conditions hereinafter mentioned, to construct, own, and operate such permanent and sufficient jetties and such auxiliary work as may be necessary to create and permanently maintain, as hereinafter set forth, a navigable channel at the mouth of the Brazos River, Texas, between said river and the Gulf of Mexico, and so far into the mainland and between the banks of the said Brazos River as may be necessary to reach a place that will afford security from storms, swells, cyclones, and tidal waves, for the purpose of furnishing the vessels and boats adapted to the purpose facilities for navigating in and along the entire length of said channel, charging and collecting such toll therefor as may be prescribed by regulations that may be made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, in conformity with the laws of the United States; and for that purpose they may construct in the river, and likewise in the Gulf of Mexico, such walls, jetties, dikes, levees, and other structures, and employ such boats, rafts, and appliances as they may, in the prosecution of said work, deem necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 1, after the word "that," to strike out the word "if;" so as to read:

That at any time during the construction of said jetties, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 4, after "United States," to strike out—

May elect to pay the said Brazos River Channel and Dock Company the cost of constructing and maintaining the said jetties and auxiliary works, said cost not to exceed one and one-half million dollars, with interest, computed annually, at the legal rate as prescribed by the laws of the State of Texas, the United States may have the right to do so, and on such payment being made by the United States, together with interest as aforesaid, all right and liability on the part of the said Brazos River Channel and Dock Company in said channel, jetties, and auxiliary works shall cease and determine: Provided, however, That the United States shall thereafter maintain a depth of not less than 18 feet of water in said channel from 18 feet of water in the Gulf of Mexico to the point described in section 1 of this act, if the purchase of said works is made after 18 feet of water may have been obtained by said company; but if said works are purchased before 18 feet of water has been obtained, then the United States shall prosecute said improvement until said depth is obtained, and shall maintain the same as aforesaid.

And to insert—

Shall have the right to pay the said Brazos River Channel and Dock Company the value of their jetties and other works constructed under and by the authority granted to said company by the State of Texas, as well as by the authority of this act, and on such payment being made by the United States all right to said franchises and works on the part of said Brazos River Channel and Dock Company shall cease and determine;

So as to read:

SEC. 3. That at any time during the construction of said jetties and auxiliary works, or after said jetties and auxiliary works shall have been completed and said channel of 18 feet in depth has been obtained, the United States shall have the right to pay the said Brazos River Channel and Dock Company the value of their jetties and other works constructed under and by the authority granted to said company by the State of Texas, as well as by the authority of this act, and on such payment being made by the United States all right to said franchises and works on the part of said Brazos River Channel and Dock Company shall cease and determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6833) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year 1889, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BECK.

CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1701) authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa.

Mr. VEST. A number of those bills were sent over this morning with amendments made by the House of Representatives. I move that they be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills will be read at the desk by their number, and referred, with the amendments of the House of Representatives, to the Committee on Commerce, if there be no objection.

The bills, with the amendments of the House of Representatives, were referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

A bill (S. 1701) authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa;

A bill (S. 1882) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Clinton, Iowa;

A bill (S. 1526) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Caney Fork River, between Rock Island and Carthage, in Tennessee;

A bill (S. 1883) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Muscatine, Iowa;

A bill (S. 1405) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Oquawka, in the State of Illinois, and to establish it as a post-road;

A bill (S. 1524) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River, between Bridgeport and Sheffield, Ala.;

A bill (S. 2674) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Nebraska City, Nebr., and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 667) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North;

A bill (S. 1404) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River and to establish it as a post-road;

A bill (S. 560) to authorize the Columbia River Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River between the State of Oregon and the Territory of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road; and

A bill (S. 322) to authorize the Southwest Arkansas and Indian Territory Railroad to build a bridge across the Ouachita River, in Arkansas.

CHRISTOPHER COTT.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 956) for the relief of heirs of Christopher Cott.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business, being the special order, may be informally laid aside for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the bill he has indicated.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to say that it is not my intention to call up the fortification bill for action until there is a full Senate, but I should like to have the bill read as in Committee of the Whole, and the committee amendments acted upon, and the bill reported to the Senate and left where it can be amended and subject to discussion, and then it may go over until next Monday for aught I care.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us pass this little bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon object to the consideration of House bill 956?

Mr. DOLPH. I withdraw the objection.

The bill (H. R. 956) for the relief of heirs of Christopher Cott was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 8, after the word "cavalry," to strike out "from the 30th day of April, 1864, to the 30th day of November, 1864, the supposed date of the said soldier's death," and to insert "which may have been due and unpaid to him on October 24, 1864;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs of Christopher Cott, late a private in Company B, McLaughlin's Independent Squadron, Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, the pay, bounty, and all other allowances of a private of cavalry, which may have been due and unpaid to him on October 24, 1864.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "October" and inserting "November," and adding after the words "eighteen hundred and sixty-four," at the end of the bill, the words "the supposed date of the death of said soldier."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

STEPHEN M. COLLIS.

Mr. VANCE. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 478) to place the name of Rev. Stephen M. Collis on the muster-roll of the Thirteenth Tennessee Cavalry as chaplain thereof. It is a small matter, and is a unanimous report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the special order, being the unfinished business, will be informally laid aside.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place the name of Stephen M. Collis on the muster-roll of the Thirteenth Tennessee Cavalry as chaplain thereof, as mustered from the 1st of April, 1865, and mustered out on the 1st of September, 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9859) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over.

Mr. FRYE. I move to proceed to its consideration. I want to get it up so as to commence with it to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read first for action on the committee amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length and the amendments of the Committee on Commerce will be acted upon as they are reached, if there be no objection.

Mr. FRYE. I think I shall not ask the Senate to go on with the bill now. I wish to have it as the unfinished business for to-morrow morning.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it go to the Calendar then.

Mr. DOLPH. I supposed the unfinished business was laid aside by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Appropriation bills, under the custom of the Senate, have what is technically called the right of way. Should the consideration of this bill be proceeded with, at its conclusion the bill to which the Senator from Oregon refers will be taken up for consideration.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 26, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members rose.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the regular order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction and reference of bills and resolutions. Under this call, petitions and memorials from State and Territorial Legislatures are in order; also resolutions of inquiry addressed to heads of Departments.

BRIDGE ACROSS ARKANSAS RIVER.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (H. R. 10609) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Cummings Landing, Lincoln County, Arkansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 4474.

Mr. VANDEVER introduced a bill (H. R. 10610) to amend section

4474 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and ordered to be printed.

LAND OFFICES IN COLORADO.

Mr. TURNER, of Kansas, introduced a bill (H. R. 10611) creating three additional land offices in the State of Colorado; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. RAYNER introduced the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Whereas the Committee on Commerce has reported to this House a bill providing for the creation, construction, and maintenance of a Government postal telegraph; and

Whereas petitions have been presented to Congress at this session signed by a million and a half of citizens praying for the passage of said measure; and

Whereas the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads have announced their intention to raise a point of order in this House in reference to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce upon said bill so reported; and

Whereas the Committee on Commerce are prepared to sustain their jurisdiction, and it is a matter of great importance that the matter should be considered at the present session, and not be impeded and delayed by technical objections: Now,

Be it resolved, In view of the large public interest involved, that Monday, the 2d day of July next, be set apart for the consideration of the question of jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce over said bill and said report, and that each side be allowed one hour and one-half for the discussion of the same.

RELIEF OF SALESWOMEN IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BUCHANAN (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 10612) for the relief and protection of saleswomen in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Labor, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NATCHEZ, MISS.

Mr. STOCKDALE introduced a bill (H. R. 10613) for the erection of a public building in the city of Natchez, State of Mississippi; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION OF FOURTH-CLASS POSTMASTERS.

Mr. STOCKDALE also introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads be required to report back into the House House bill No. 5290, "to provide for the better compensation of postmasters of fourth-class post-offices of the United States," and that the said bill be placed upon the Calendar of the House for consideration.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. SPRINGER introduced a bill (H. R. 10614) to organize the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

FORFEITURE OF RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

The SPEAKER. The call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions is now concluded.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to report back with amendments from the Committee on Public Lands the bill (S. 1430) to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes. The committee, having made some corrections in the bill, desire that it be printed and recommitted.

The bill was recommitted to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

VIRGINIA EXPOSITION.

Mr. WISE introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 185) making an appropriation to enable the Department of the Interior, the Department of Agriculture, United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries, and the Smithsonian Institution, including the National Museum, to participate in the Virginia Agricultural, Mechanical, and Tobacco Exposition, to be held at Richmond, Va., from October 3 to November 21, 1888; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House, this day is set apart for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia. If the day is not claimed for such business——

Mr. HEMPHILL. We are ready to proceed with that business.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is insisted upon.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Committee on Public Lands are very anxious to proceed with the homestead bill, and would be very glad if the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], recognizing the importance of that bill, would permit it to occupy to-day. I hope there will be no objection to this course. We have had only an hour and a half on this bill, although it has been pending for about four months.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will recognize the fact that his committee is entitled in this House to preference to which the Committee on the District of Columbia and many other committees are not entitled. Our committee has had only one day for the consideration of business in the House since the famous "dead-lock" in the spring; and if this day be not given to us the chances are that we shall not get any day at all during the balance of this session. As Congress refuses to let the District of Columbia legislate for itself, it is as little as it can do to legislate for the District at the times set apart under the rules for the consideration of District business. I trust, therefore, that members of the House will not take away the day which belongs to the District of Columbia under the rules, and give it to a committee which has a preference for its business over most of the committees of this House. The gentleman from Indiana can call up his bill to-morrow. There are no appropriation bills to interfere, and as it is well understood that our friends on the other side who are now absent will not be here to-morrow, of course the tariff bill will not interfere.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina must bear in mind that——

Mr. ATKINSON. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now call up House bill No. 7901 to secure to actual settlers the public lands adapted to agriculture, to protect the forests on the public domain, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that the only way in which he can accomplish his purpose is to raise the question of consideration against such bill as may be called up under the special order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well; I will seek to get the sense of the House in regard to proceeding with the public-land bill to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill which was pending as unfinished business at the adjournment on the last day devoted to business of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7647) to incorporate the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] raises the question of consideration.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I desire that that bill shall be laid aside temporarily, in order that I may call up another.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection that can be done, and the gentleman from Indiana can raise the question of consideration on the other bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I prefer raising the question on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina that this bill be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I give the gentleman from Indiana notice that he will have to fight me on every bill on the list.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will yield as to this bill.

There was no objection, and the bill was temporarily laid aside.

DECORATION DAY A HOLIDAY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I give notice that I shall ask to call up this bill later in the day. I now call up the bill (H. R. 10053) making May 30 a holiday in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the 30th day of May in each year, usually called "Decoration Day," shall be, and hereby is, made a holiday within the District of Columbia as fully in all respects as are the days mentioned as holidays in section 993 of the Revised Statutes of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not raise any question on that bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALES FOR OVERDUE TAXES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up the bill (H. R. 10060) relating to notice of sales for overdue taxes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall prepare a list of all taxes on real property in said District subject to taxation upon which said taxes are levied and in arrears on the 1st day of July, 1888, and each year thereafter, including all taxes due to the late corporations of Washington City, Georgetown, the levy court of the county of Washington, and the District of Columbia; and said commissioners shall publish the same, with a notice of sale, in a pamphlet, of which not less than 5,000 copies shall be printed for distribution to tax-payers applying therefor. Said commissioners shall, on the first Tuesday in September, 1888, and of each year thereafter, give notice, by advertising twice a week for three successive weeks in the regular issue of two daily newspapers published in said District, that said pamphlet has been printed, and that a copy thereof will be delivered to any tax-payer applying therefor at the office of said commissioners, and that if the taxes due, together with the penalties and costs that may have accrued thereon, shall not be paid prior to the day named for sale the property will be sold, under the direction of said commissioners, at public auction, at the office of the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia, commencing three weeks after the first publication of said notice and continuing on each following day, Sundays and legal holidays excepted, until all such delinquent property is sold.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUBDIVISION OF LAND IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now call up the bill (H. R. 3329) to regulate the subdivision of land within the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to make and publish such general orders as may be necessary to regulate the platting and subdividing of all lands and grounds in the District of Columbia; and no such plat of subdivision made in pursuance of such orders shall be admitted to record in the office of the surveyor of said District without an order to that effect indorsed thereon by the engineer commissioner of said District.

SEC. 2. That all spaces on any duly recorded plat of land thereon designated as streets, avenues, or alleys shall thereupon become public ways, provided they are made in conformity with the provisions of section 1 of this act, and as such be under the protection of the laws and ordinances in force applicable to public roads out of said city.

SEC. 3. That if by the extension of any of the present streets or avenues, or the opening of any public way, it becomes necessary to traverse any grounds now used as a cemetery or place of burial, the commissioners are hereby empowered to secure a right of way through the same by stipulation with the proprietors thereof, or by condemnation, as in other cases now by law provided for.

SEC. 4. That the orders of the commissioners made pursuant to this act shall have the force and effect of law thirty days subsequent to the day of publication; and all laws and provisions of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The Committee on the District of Columbia recommended an amendment, in lines 6 and 7 of section 3, striking out the words "or by condemnation, as in other cases now by law provided for."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I desire to offer an amendment as an additional section, which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. 5. No further subdivision of land in the District of Columbia, without the limits of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, shall be recorded in the surveyor's office of the said District unless made in conformity with the general plan of the city of Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REFORM SCHOOL, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up the bill (H. R. 7762) authorizing the restoration to the Reform School of boys who have been discharged on probation, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever a boy is dismissed from the Reform School of the District of Columbia to his parents, or to otherwise care for himself, he shall be dismissed on probation merely, until he reaches the age of twenty-one years, and the board of trustees shall have power to send for him and return him to the school whenever, in the opinion of a majority of the members of said board, the interests of the boy will be promoted by his return.

SEC. 2. That the chief clerk of the Department of Justice shall be ex officio a member of the board of trustees of said Reform School.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

MUNICIPAL LAWS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now call up the bill (H. R. 8308) to provide for the examination, etc., of the municipal laws of the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia and the attorney for the District be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to examine certain manuscript volumes prepared by Josiah Quincy Kern, upon the submission of the same to them, at as early a date as practicable after the passage of this act; and if, after such examination, the commissioners of the District and the attorney for the District shall be of opinion that the volumes so submitted and examined comprise a complete and satisfactory revision and consolidation of all statutes and parts of statutes relating to municipal affairs in the District of Columbia in force on the 1st day of December, 1887, and of all orders, rules, regulations, and ordinances relating to such affairs made in pursuance of law and having the force and effect of law at the said date, and shall so state their opinion in writing, they shall thereupon purchase the said volumes from the said Josiah Quincy Kern, at a compensation not to exceed $5,000.

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of this act there is hereby appropriated $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to make the payment herein provided for, one-half thereof to be made out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. That the said commissioners shall report to Congress, on the first day of its next regular session, the action taken by them under the provisions of this act, and may make such recommendations as to them shall seem advisable in relation to any further action respecting the manuscript volumes hereinbefore mentioned.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, that bill I believe is subject to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that as this bill makes an appropriation it must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. The amount, I believe, is small, and if it will occupy but little time I shall not object. What is the amount involved?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Only $5,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not raise any question on this bill, but I must do it on the next.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I desire to offer two or three verbal amendments to the bill.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 17 of section 1, strike out the word "and" and insert "they." Strike out the words "their opinion," and strike out the word "they" and insert "and the commissioners of said District."

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. OATES. I would like to have some explanation of this bill from the chairman of the committee, as I do not quite understand its scope.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is a gentleman here of this city whose name is in the bill, Mr. Kern, who has for several years devoted himself to preparing a digest of the laws of the District of a municipal character, relating, for instance, to the public debt, how it was created, how it is to be paid, all acts and laws in relation to the water-works, laws governing the supply of water, regulations in regard to the wasting of water, etc. This bill now proposed for adoption in the House provides that the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have this compilation examined, and if in their judgment it contains a full and accurate digest of the laws of the District relating to its municipal affairs, that they should be permitted to purchase the same at the sum named in the bill, which is limited to $5,000.

Mr. OATES. It does not provide for a complete codification of all the laws of the District?

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, sir.

Mr. GROUT. No; there is another bill which provides for that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We have already passed a bill providing for a codification of the laws. I mean by that a codification of such laws as are administered in the courts of justice. But this embraces all ordinances which have heretofore been adopted by the municipality, and which are still in force as laws of the District, embodying all minor matters of law necessary for the use of the commissioners, as well as for the commissioner having charge of the debt of the District and having charge of the water-works, etc.

Mr. OATES. Would it not be more convenient as well as more economical to provide for a compilation of all of these laws?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think not. In the first place permit me to state that we have tried to get a codification or compilation of the laws more than once, and the House has acted upon such propositions; but the Senate has never concurred with the House. The work has been suspended from time to time and never completed; besides that, it is a work that will require time, while this work has already been done. It is said, I may state also, to be a very complete work in all of its parts. We have letters from prominent officials of the District having charge of the department matters and others who have examined this compilation, and all concur in saying that it is very full and accurate, and will be of very great convenience to their various offices. The commissioners have also recommended this.

Mr. RANDALL. Is this book published?

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, sir; it is not published; it is still in the hands of the compiler, and I believe the only copy in existence is that which he has, which is type-written.

Mr. RANDALL. Why can not the Government purchase a copy?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Because this has never been published at all; it is in the hands of the compiler, and until it has been printed, of course, no copies are on sale.

Mr. GROUT. It is still in manuscript.

Mr. OATES. Would it not be more economical to embody in one volume the whole compilation and codification of the laws of the District?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, sir, this embraces several volumes in itself. You can not put all of these laws in one volume. Besides that, there is no lawyer who has any practice who could devote himself to the compilation of the laws connected with the water-works, fire department, etc., and generally the laws as they are administered in the courts and the regulations of the Executive Departments.

Mr. OATES. And municipal ordinances.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir; and municipal ordinances. But all these are embodied in this one volume. It will be remembered that this District has undergone a great many changes of government, and I do not know any man who could properly undertake to prepare such a compilation. It would certainly take a long time to do it.

Mr. BLOUNT. When was the last compilation made?

Mr. HEMPHILL. There never has been one.

Mr. BLOUNT. I thought the Government had published at one time a codification of the laws?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, they have; or there was something of the kind attempted in the past; but it never amounted to anything.

Mr. FELTON. Is this is a codification of the laws?

Mr. HEMPHILL. So far as they relate to particular branches of the subject that it covers, it is a codification; but it is not a full codification or compilation. This relates to the municipal regulations and ordinances.

Mr. BLOUNT. The difficulty with the efforts heretofore made to secure a complete codification or compilation of all District laws has been that legislation was attempted which could not be enacted, and hence such efforts failed in this House.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, I think the fact is they have undertaken to do too much by one bill. That explains the trouble, I think. I can only give the opinion of the committee and the testimony furnished us by gentlemen whose business it is to administer the affairs of the government and who are capable of judging of the merits of such a publication named, that this is a most excellent thing. We do not provide the payment at once, but that it shall be paid only when the commissioners ascertain that it contains a complete and accurate synopsis or compilation of every statute, order, or ordinance relating to the various municipal affairs of the District.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is there anything in the bill authorizing the adoption of it as the law?

Mr. HEMPHILL. It is a compilation of what is the law now. It is simply a gathering together of existing laws. The idea is to put it in some shape so that it can be gotten at conveniently. Take, for instance, the District Committee. In the consideration of our business in connection with the District we can not tell what the law is until either we have obtained the opinion of some lawyer here upon the subject or have gotten the opinion of the District attorney. We are obliged to adopt that system because there is no code to which we can have access to get the information as to the status of the law here upon any particular question.

Mr. SPRINGER. Allow me to ask this question: If this is a perfect compilation of the laws of the District now in force and our public officials need copies, why not make an appropriation sufficient to supply our city officers, the courts, and the committees of the two Houses with this compilation, and allow private individuals to purchase it in the book-stores for whatever it will bring.

Mr. HEMPHILL. That can be done when we once get possession; but the work is not ours yet.

Mr. SPRINGER. We do not need to get possession except as to the number of copies required by the Government.

Mr. WEAVER. The owner would not part with it on those term.

Mr. HEMPHILL. No; he would not part with it on those terms. This compilation is the result of a great deal of labor and care. He says it is thorough, complete, and accurate. He is willing, not to give his opinion and judgment, but to let the House of Representatives appoint anybody it sees fit to examine the work before a dollar is paid. If the report is favorable, then the commissioners of the District are authorized to pay for it. When it is paid for of course it ought to be published in such numbers as will supply the various officers of the District, and also the committees of the House and other persons who desire to obtain the information the work will give.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] if this is the proposition: That money is to be paid for this compilation, the commissioners appointed by virtue of the act are to determine the question as to whether it is a correct code, and it is to be binding on the people of the District hereafter?

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, sir. We do not enact this compilation into law at all. It is simply a compilation of what is already the law in this District from the time the Government was established up to the present time. This gentleman has undertaken the work with the purpose of course of selling it when he got it completed. This bill does not provide that anybody shall compile the law; but it says the commissioners of the District shall have a thorough examination made of the compilation which has already been prepared, and upon being satisfied that it contains the law and that the work is necessary, then they are authorized to pay for it. When it is paid for of course Congress ought to publish it in such numbers as are necessary.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then there is no other acceptance of the compilation than the payment for it. That is to say, there is no legal force——

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, no; we do not enact this into a statute.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then of what value is it?

Mr. HEMPHILL. For this reason: Suppose you want to know what is the law in this District upon any point. Where would you go to find out? You would not know where to go. I do not know where to go.

Mr. DOCKERY. In the States you go to some codification or compilation made by authority.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Exactly; that is what we want to have here.

Mr. DOCKERY. A codification with some imprint of authority upon it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. That is what we want here. We want something that the committees of Congress, the commissioners of the District, and the heads of the Departments will know is authoritative and is the law.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then the effect is to make it the law.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, no. We want to take the compilation and get satisfactory evidence through the commissioners of the District or anybody they may appoint that it does embrace the law already passed; and then we can enact a simple statute saying this compilation which has been accepted by the commissioners shall be the law of the District relating to these various subjects. That is the plan we have in view.

Mr. RANDALL. How much will the examination cost which you propose to make to find out whether the compilation is accurate or not?

Mr. HEMPHILL. It is not to cost anything.

Mr. RANDALL. Who is to do it?

Mr. HEMPHILL. It is to be done by the commissioners themselves.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. How much money is appropriated by this bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Five thousand dollars is appropriated, to be paid if the compilation is satisfactory.

Mr. MACDONALD. Why should not the District of Columbia itself pay this money instead of asking Congress to pay it?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The expenses of the District are paid one-half by the District and one-half by the United States Government.

Mr. MACDONALD. The public at large has no interest in this matter.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It has as much interest in this as in any other part of the District affairs. The Government owns half of the property here. It would be very hard upon the people if the Government, owning half of the property, should compel the people here to pay all of the taxes.

Mr. RANDALL. Ought not the District to pay half of this expense?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes; I think it ought to do so.

Mr. RANDALL. Is that provided for?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think it is provided for. I am not positive. If it is not, it ought to be.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not hear the provision read. The people are almost exclusively interested in this.

Mr. HEMPHILL. That will be added by amendment. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that this bill provides that if the volumes so submitted and examined—

Comprise a complete and satisfactory revision and consolidation of all statutes and parts of statutes relating to municipal affairs in the District of Columbia in force on the 1st day of December, 1887, and of all orders, rules, regulations, and ordinances relating to such affairs made in pursuance of law and having the force and effect of law at the said date, and shall so state their opinion in writing, they shall thereupon purchase the said volumes.

I now desire to offer an amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina whether the District commissioners are lawyers and are in the habit of doing this sort of work?

Mr. HEMPHILL. One is a lawyer.

Mr. BLOUNT. The other two are not?

Mr. HEMPHILL. One of the District commissioners is a lawyer; another is a business man; and the third, as the gentleman understands, is an engineer. But this compilation embraces laws relating to the engineer department, to the water-works, to the fire department, and everything of that sort. Of course the commissioners, in examining this compilation, will have the assistance of their own attorney.

Mr. HERBERT. Will the gentleman from South Carolina allow me five minutes to make a statement?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] for five minutes.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, this seems to be a proposition to pay $5,000 for the manuscript of this digest, and then to have a report upon it by the commissioners.

Mr. MACDONALD. Is it a digest?

Mr. HERBERT. It seems to be a digest of the laws and regulations in force in the District of Columbia, and the proposition is to authorize the payment of $5,000 for this digest, which the commissioners at a subsequent session are to report to Congress, when it will be for Congress to decide whether this digest or compilation shall be printed or not. It seems to me that a better proposition would be that the printing of this work be left in private hands, that it be printed by the author, and that Congress agree to take as many copies of the work as may be necessary for the use of the District officers. If it be necessary in this way for us to pay $1,500, $2,000, or $2,500 for a certain number of volumes which Congress may see proper to take, let us do that. But let this work be printed as a private enterprise, if it is to be printed at all. According to the present proposition, the manuscript is to be bought, and then the Government is to print that manuscript at its own expense. It seems to me this course will entail a much greater cost to the Government than is necessary. I submit that if Congress will agree to subscribe for a certain number of volumes—how many I do not know—the gentleman who is the author of this work ought to be willing to print the work at his own expense. All we want is to secure the printing of the work; even upon the statement of the chairman of the District Committee, we want it printed, and the method I suggest seems to me a much better way of reaching this result than the proposition now pending, and is, as I understand, the mode generally adopted by the States in matters of this kind. What is the necessity for the Government itself undertaking to do this printing?

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I asked the gentleman from South Carolina a few moments ago whether there had been any code adopted by Congress for the District of Columbia. The gentleman replied that he did not know. I have before me a volume called "Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia and post-roads and public treaties." This revision and consolidation of the statutes relating to the District of Columbia was made in the Forty-third Congress and embraces all the laws relating to this subject up to that time. The laws which have been passed since and which are embraced in the volumes of the Statutes at Large, furnish, together with this compilation, very ready information for any gentleman who seeks to know anything in relation to the laws applicable to the District of Columbia. The laws since enacted relating to the water-works, the police force, etc., are small in number and very accessible. I can not therefore see any necessity for a new codification. We are not in the dark as to the laws passed in former years relating to the District. The revision to which I have referred, made in the Forty-third Congress, became after examination by the House and the Senate the permanent law in relation to this District, and this revision, as I have said, together with the few laws since enacted, which are to be found in the Statutes at Large, meets, it seems to me, every public want in this regard. Why should there be anything additional?

The compilation now proposed would, I think, prove unsatisfactory. The gentlemen who will undertake this work will, in the first place, take what has already been done up to the Forty-third Congress, and will incorporate with that revision the legislation since adopted. But by whom is this work to be done? This difficult work, which my friend from South Carolina thinks could scarcely be performed by any living man except the person who has prepared this manuscript revision, is to be passed upon by three gentlemen, two of whom are not even lawyers; and after this is done somebody is to have $5,000.

There are continually being prepared in the various Departments of the Government compilations by one officer on one subject and another officer on another subject, with the view of having such compilations recognized by Congress and their authors paid from the public Treasury. I can not see that anything more than this is proposed in the present case; and the compilation of District laws having already been completed as far as the Forty-third Congress, the charge proposed appears to be an outrageous one. I trust that under the circumstances the House will not agree to the proposition.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think that if the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] had read the bill he would not have made the speech which he has made.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend will allow me to say that I have read the bill, though I may not have done so as intelligently as the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The revision of the statutes to which the gentleman has referred undertook to give in a consolidated form the laws of the United States so far as they relate to the District of Columbia.

Mr. RANDALL. Do they not govern here?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Those statutes do govern in this District; but that revision does not pretend to embrace all the ordinances passed by the old cities of Washington and Georgetown; it does not pretend to contain the regulations of the levy court, which was in existence here for a number of years; it does not pretend to include all the laws, ordinances, and regulations relating to the water supply, the fire department, etc. These do not appear anywhere in the Revised Statutes of the United States, and it is very proper that they should not.

This that we are endeavoring to get hold of now is a thorough compilation of what have been the city ordinances of this city and of Georgetown, the levy court of the District of Columbia, and the other bodies which have had authority at different times to pass ordinances and to make laws and regulations relating to the various departments of the city government; so that the statutes to which the gentleman refers have nothing whatever to do with this matter. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] is about three or four months behind time. We have already passed a bill providing for a compilation of the laws of the District of Columbia, and that bill is now pending before the Senate.

This simply provides for getting a compilation of matters in relation to which lawyers have no special knowledge. A lawyer who has any practice in the courts does not undertake to keep up with the regulations relating to the various departments of the city government, and therefore it is not necessary that lawyers should examine this compilation, although if it were necessary there happen to be lawyers on the board of commissioners.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the very ordinances to which he is referring have not been printed by the District, and whether they are not to be found in the Library?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, sir, if they are to be found there, all I can say is that it is impossible for the District Committee to get hold of them. I am told by gentlemen who ought to understand the matter, by the commissioners and by an officer in the Treasury Department who has to do with the debt of the District of Columbia, that it is simply impossible for any man to know what these laws and regulations are, unless a man devotes his whole time to inquiring into the matter.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does my friend mean to say that it is impossible to get at a statement of the District indebtedness?

Mr. HEMPHILL. No; I do not mean that.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then what does the gentleman mean, and to what debt does he refer?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I speak of the rules, regulations, and city ordinances that have been passed from time to time, and I say no man can tell what they are unless by long and patient investigation.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman referred to the debt of the District by way of illustration, and I want to know whether he proposes to stand by that statement.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I propose to stand by it to this extent, which is all that I mean. I say we have a letter from the gentleman who is particularly charged with that subject in the Treasury Department—I do not recall his name at this moment—to the effect that he has examined this compilation, and that he gives it the highest commendation possible, and thinks it particularly desirable that it shall be gotten hold of.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend referred to the District debt awhile ago, and said that we could not get a statement of it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. No; I never said that you could not get a statement of the District debt.

Mr. BLOUNT. In what connection did you speak of the "debt?"

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If my friend from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] will permit a suggestion, is it not the best plan for Congress to pass a law providing for a commission to prepare a code for the government of the city, and then pass that code into a statute, and repeal all these unknown laws and rules and regulations?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think that would be a capital idea, but as soon as you brought your proposition in here somebody would object to it; so that as to this bill it is only a question whether we shall do something or nothing in this direction.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is a volume, published in 1875, entitled "Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia."

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, we heard of that from the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. SPRINGER. That compilation contains the laws of the District up to 1875.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It contains the statute law.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, if you publish this compilation it will be simply this gentleman's opinion as to what old statutes of Maryland are still in force in this District.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, no.

Mr. GROUT. No. It does not relate to that subject at all.

Mr. SPRINGER. And also his opinion as to the various statutes that remain unrepealed.

Mr. RAYNER. Does that book which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] refers to contain the municipal regulations of the District and the city ordinances?

Mr. SPRINGER. There are no city ordinances here.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, there are.

Mr. SPRINGER. There are none since the city government was abolished.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, yes, there are. What regulates the fire department?

Mr. SPRINGER. Those are not ordinances.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Certainly they are.

Mr. SPRINGER. They are simply orders executing the laws of Congress.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman assumes that the District commissioners are a board of aldermen who can pass laws for the District of Columbia. I do not so understand it. They are executive officers and are required to execute the laws of Congress. Their orders are simply directions they give to city officials to carry out the laws. If these commissioners are assuming legislative authority here they are transcending their powers.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman does not know what he is talking about. The commissioners have some powers.

Mr. SPRINGER. I say legislative powers.

Mr. HEMPHILL. They have power to make rules and regulations—you may call it legislative or what you please; they have some privileges, and when they lay down rules and regulations the people of the District are obliged to obey them.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no difficulty about knowing what are the orders, rules, and regulations of the commissioners of the District of Columbia. There is nothing mysterious about it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If you knew as much as you claim to know, you would not make the speech you are making.

Mr. SPRINGER. I know nothing about it, except that the gentleman from South Carolina is trying to get Congress to buy a compilation in manuscript.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I am trying to do no such thing.

Mr. SPRINGER. What then?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I am pressing upon Congress and asking them to pass a bill which has been already once passed in this House.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen must come to order. Gentlemen must address the Chair.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am not through.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois can not be interrupted except by his own consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from South Carolina stated that I misstated his position. I simply stated he is asking Congress to pass a law—yes, it is before me—to purchase a compilation of the District laws, rules, or regulations, or ordinances, or whatever you may call them, of the District commissioners.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, no; the gentleman does not state the proposition fairly.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the bill? Let it be read. I will read the title.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman knows that the title has nothing to do with the particular kind of bill this is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to state what the bill is if I can, and that the House may understand it I will read it. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia and the attorney for the district be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to examine certain manuscript volumes prepared by Josiah Quincy Kern, upon the submission of the same to them, at as early a date as practicable after the passage of this act; and if, after such examination, the commissioners of the District and the attorney for the District shall be of opinion that the volumes so submitted and examined comprise a complete and satisfactory revision and consolidation of all statutes and parts of statutes relating to municipal affairs in the District of Columbia in force on the 1st day of December, 1887, and of all orders, rules, regulations, and ordinances relating to such affairs made in pursuance of law and having the force and effect of law at the said date, and shall so state their opinion in writing, they shall thereupon purchase the said volumes from the said Josiah Quincy Kerr, at a compensation not to exceed $5,000.

Now, is that understood?

Mr. BLOUNT. Will my friend, just here in connection, state what he is reading?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly; I am reading the bill that is pending.

Mr. BLOUNT. You have been referring to a District code.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have referred to it.

Mr. BLOUNT. You have. Will the gentleman allow me? Is his time limited?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will give way.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from South Corolina stated a few moments ago this code included rules in reference to water rates.

Mr. HEMPHILL. No; I did not, sir. I said there was nothing in relation to orders and regulations for water.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understood him otherwise.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not like to take up the time of the gentleman from Illinois, but I am unfortunate in misunderstanding my friend from South Carolina.

Mr. SPRINGER. All I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, is this: It occurs to me if we have a revision of this book, a consolidation of the statutes of the United States, general in their nature, in the District of Columbia, in force on the 1st of December, 1887, then all that is required to secure the consolidation of the statutes since that time, and such orders in the District of Columbia as have had the force and effect of laws since that time, those orders, whatever they have been, have all been printed and are accessible to everybody in the District who has had anything to do with them.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Will the gentlemen state what has been printed in this connection?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have already stated; I have the volume before me.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, yes; you refer to the Revised Statutes of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; and I have stated further that all acts of Congress since this codification was made are in print, and the ordinances and regulations and orders and rules of the District of Columbia, I presume, have been printed if they expect anybody to obey them.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, you presume they have been printed.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes. If they are orders directed to municipal officers they are presumed to be printed; because no one is expected to take cognizance of them except the officer to whom they are addressed.

Mr. ROWELL. Does my colleague know that once there was a District Legislature here which passed laws, and which laws are now in force?

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, yes; but they are presumed to be consolidated in this volume.

Mr. ROWELL. Oh, no; you are entirely mistaken.

Mr. SPRINGER. Why, it so states here in the very caption of it which I have read.

Mr. GROUT. Oh, no; that says the statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia. That is all.

Mr. SPRINGER. The District is now under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, in fact it has always been, and whatever statutes were made here by the municipal government were made in pursuance of the laws of the United States.

But, Mr. Speaker, the proposition here is to pay $5,000 for the manuscript compilation to which reference is made in this bill, the impression being that the laws and ordinances therein contained are still in force in the District of Columbia. After this volume is printed, which is already in manuscript, what does it amount to under this bill? It is simply the expression of opinion on the part of the compiler as to what laws are in force. It is not given the force of law by the passage of this act. It can not be given the force of law unless it is enacted as law by Congress. It may prove to be true that through inadvertence statutes have been omitted altogether, or else that laws which have been heretofore repealed are re-enacted by this compilation. That is one of the dangers arising from this method of legislation. The fact is that the statutes are now either in force in the District or they are not in force; and the only advantage that this digest would produce would be the convenience of reference and facility of reference it would afford which has heretofore not existed. That is the only advantage, the convenience of reference, and it would be of advantage to the profession in this city in that connection. The gentleman desires to appropriate $5,000 by this bill for that purpose; that is to say, the bill proposes to purchase the compilation outright.

Now, if we desire to use it after purchasing it we must print it at the Government Printing Office, and copyright the book. What I was going to suggest is that if it is necessary to have the compilation at all, and I admit it is valuable, then instead of buying the manuscript for $5,000 and having it copyrighted and printed at the Government Printing Office, and thus deprive the profession of the means of securing copies of it in the ordinary method, being only able to get them through the members of Congress, beg them at the Departments, or buy them in the junk-shops, let us do it in a business-like way, and say, as the book is probably valuable, we will buy some copies to supply the District authorities.

We will buy 500 copies of it for the use of the District, which will be enough to supply the various District officials, the courts of the District, and the Houses of Congress, and you can yourself have it printed, and retain your own copyright on it, and sell to the members of the profession in this city, or any other persons who choose to purchase it. We are willing to pay you $3 a volume for 500 copies, which is a good price. Then he will own the copyright himself, and he can sell it to anybody else. The Government, I repeat, has no use for the book except to supply such officials of the District as it may be necessary to supply, and it is not the business of the Government to furnish the profession in Washington with their law-books.

I yield now so much time as the gentleman from Georgia may want.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the remaining part of an hour.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, my friend from South Carolina gets a little nervous upon this subject——

Mr. HEMPHILL. I trust the gentleman from Georgia will not begin his remarks in that way. He totally misapprehends me. It is a matter of entire indifference to me whether the bill passes or not. I am only doing my duty.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman would hardly have told me that I did not know what I was talking about, I presume, if he had not been a little nervous.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, I thought you knew something about what you were talking of.

Mr. SPRINGER. And I am glad to know that the gentleman from South Carolina is assuming his usual equanimity.

Mr. BLOUNT. I assume the gentleman from South Carolina to be a little nervous, because he has been kind enough to insinuate that I had not read the bill, and that——

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think the gentleman is mistaken. I did not say exactly that.

Mr. BLOUNT. That was apparently the intimation, and the gentleman from Illinois was charged time and again with ignorance of the laws of the District——

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, that may be.

Mr. BLOUNT. Which indicates decided nervousness on the part of my friend from South Carolina, for it is not his ordinary style.

But, Mr. Speaker, I asked the gentleman whether there had been a codification of the laws of the District. He was uncertain. He did not remember whether there was a code or not. I think the notes of the stenographer will show that there was a lack of information, according to the statement of the gentleman from South Carolina, in respect to the water regulations; and he made a further statement that there was lack of information in regard to the public debt of the District, about which, Mr. Speaker, there is just as much reasonable doubt as there is as to the public debt of the United States, and that it was necessary by this compilation to supply this deficiency.

But, sir, we have the code here. I have it before me. It has been said that there was nothing in it with reference to regulations about the water-works and what had been done in reference to the water taxes, levying assessments for water, collection of water rents, the levy court, and other matters of that kind. I find in this code a compilation upon all these subjects, and that in reference to the water-works covers all subjects relating to that branch of the city's service: "the unlawful tapping of the water mains;" "penalty for tapping, or for injuring the pipes or fixtures;" "how prosecuted;" "schedule of water rates;" "how established and collected;" "not to be a source of revenue for any other purpose, but to constitute a fund for the maintenance of the water service;" "water rents derived from Washington Aqueduct;" "how applied;" "water service;" "supply from aqueduct main, or pipes;" "how regulated;" "water rates;" "how established;" "waste of water to be prevented;" "water may be shut off, when;" "use of water for mechanical and manufacturing purposes allowed, when;" "for private purposes, etc.;" "regulation of supply to manufacturing establishments;" water rents;" "how to be applied;" "penalty for unlawful tapping;" "injuring water pipes," and various other regulations of the city made by the District of Columbia to which reference has been made in the general title under this head in the volume before me.

Then it has been said that there was nothing here in reference to the laws of the levy court and those provisions of law and ordinance that have continued in force: in relation to the collection of money, the enforcement of contracts, the collection of unpaid taxes; suits for or against not abated by the act of February, 1871; property of county vested in District, etc.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think I have made a statement here in reference to matters that have not heretofore appeared and that are likely to be of some value in reaching a proper conclusion in relation to this bill. So far as I am individually concerned I do not care a great deal about it. I have happened in times past to come across compilations made by Government officials, first in one Department of the Government and then in another. Their preparation has generally been accepted by the House as a very nice scheme, perhaps not wanting in some convenience to the public, but largely impelled by the idea of compensation to the person doing the work. I have had some experience in this regard, and when this matter came up I took the liberty of expressing my dissent, nothing more.

Mr. McCOMAS. I should like to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question. I did not quite hear him. The gentleman was referring to the statutes, general and permanent, codified in the general revision. Is not that so?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes.

Mr. McCOMAS. What did the gentleman say with respect to the ordinances and regulations passed by the District Legislature and by the several boards of control at different times, which have now the force and effect of law and are not included in that book?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not understand they are not included.

Mr. McCOMAS. Does the gentleman from Georgia understand that this codification embraces all the acts of the District Legislature?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do. Was it not made the law? Why should it not be?

Mr. RAYNER. It does not, though. It is the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me I will say that I find in the index—I have not time to hunt it up now—what laws and ordinances of the levy court continue in force, etc.

Mr. McCOMAS. In force at what time?

Mr. BLOUNT. At all times.

Mr. McCOMAS. In force up to what time?

Mr. BLOUNT. In force in 1875.

Mr. McCOMAS. In force up to 1875.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCOMAS. The District government was not changed until after that time.

Mr. BLOUNT. To what time do you refer now?

Mr. McCOMAS. Eighteen hundred and seventy-eight.

Mr. BLOUNT. That would be three years afterward.

Mr. McCOMAS. That was prior to that time, and since the ordinances, regulations, and municipal statutes which were made by bodies and authorities competent to enact them, which have the force of permanent law, and are not statutes of the United States. But I am taking up the time of the gentleman from Georgia, and unless he is willing to yield to me——

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly; the gentleman may go ahead.

Mr. McCOMAS. The gentleman will yield me a little of his time?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly; I am not interested in this matter.

Mr. McCOMAS. These important municipal regulations are nowhere contained in that volume. They are a floating and nebulous mass. They are in the books of the old District government in their several board regulations which under the authority of the Legislature had the right to pass certain health and other ordinances which would have the binding effect of law.

Mr. RAYNER. Will the gentleman allow me to say a word?

Mr. McCOMAS. Yes.

Mr. RAYNER. As I understand it that book contains none of the ordinances of the levy court, no municipal legislation, no District legislation. It is a book containing the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to the District of Columbia; nothing else.

Mr. BLOUNT. Just there, under the head of "levy court," there is a declaration in terms of what laws and ordinances of that levy court are continued in force.

Mr. ATKINSON. Turn to the text and see what it says.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will hunt it up.

Mr. McCOMAS. Meantime I want to say this, that it is simply a codification of the statutes of the United States passed by Congress relating to the District of Columbia, which are general and permanent in their nature; and it contains nothing else. The immense body of municipal regulations of the recent District government and of the several boards of control which from time to time by act of Congress or by act of the District Legislature had the power to make ordinances—all those permanent ordinances are now floating out in a chaotic way.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. McCOMAS. I will.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to know for information whether there has not been a printed compilation of the ordinances, rules, and regulations sought to be printed under the bill.

Mr. McCOMAS. I will say to the gentleman that the history of attempts at codification and compilation in this District has been just what the gentleman can see this morning here.

When I was a member of the committee in the Forty-eighth Congress I had a bill providing for the codification of the criminal code of this District, and looking back over twenty years to find out what had been done in this direction, I found that effort after effort had been made and had been killed in Congress; so that after six years spent in this body I am now in favor of anything that comes up for this purpose, either for a compilation of the general code or the criminal code. Three or four years ago I saw a part of this compilation which was then being made by the same gentleman. He came to me with letters from the then commissioners, or from one of the judges of the court, and I spent three or four evenings looking over the volume and also over another volume by the same compiler, the publication of which I understand this House has already provided at this session. There were, as Mr. Kern well knew, two distinct bodies of law. The other compilation to which the gentleman from Georgia refers is a compilation of the statutes which are general and permanent in their nature, and I am informed by my friend on the committee that nearly three months ago a bill providing for the publication of that compilation passed this House and is now pending in the Senate. The compilation we are now considering is to cover the rules and ordinances of the various bodies which have had jurisdiction from time to time of the municipal affairs, not of the District of Columbia, but of the municipality of Georgetown and the municipality of Washington, and therefore it will cover the two combined.

Mr. DOCKERY. How was the compilation which the gentleman says passed three months ago authorized?

Mr. McCOMAS. I understand that this House passed a bill providing for a commission to make a compilation of the statutes, and this bill simply proposes to supplement that, not for the whole District, but for the most important parts of it—the city of Washington and the city of Georgetown. Now, I confess that I think it would have been better to have had the District court examine and approve this compilation, but having seen how for twenty years every attempt to get these laws and regulations into definite shape has been defeated, I am now prepared to vote for any proposition that will tend to clarify and make certain the rules and regulations and ordinances relating to the municipal affairs of the District. The general laws have already been provided for. The municipal ordinances and regulations of Georgetown and Washington are cared for in this bill, and though it is not in the best shape, yet I am in favor of it in any shape.

Mr. GROUT. If the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] is through I wish to say a word, although I hardly think it is necessary after the explanation which the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] has given in reply to the position taken by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] on this subject. The gentleman from Maryland, however, has said that he would have this compilation settled and approved by the District court.

Mr. McCOMAS. I shall vote for this bill.

Mr. GROUT. I understand that; but I was about to tell the House why the committee did not recommend that this should be referred to the District court. They thought that as inasmuch as there is always at least one lawyer among the District commissioners, and inasmuch as this is a subject purely municipal in its character coming so little to the knowledge of the court and so entirely within the knowledge of the commissioners as the executive power of the District, the commissioners would be the more suitable tribunal to review and consider the completeness of the compilation. If, however, the committee was in error in that respect, the court can be substituted as the tribunal to pass upon the compilation; but it still seems to me that the commissioners are the better judges of the matter. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] says that the compilation of statutes which has been referred to keeps in force the laws of the levy court and of certain other municipal organizations. So it does. It leaves them in force, but it nowhere gathers up those laws and tells us what they are. It may do so to some extent, but it certainly does not do it fully. I ask the gentleman from Georgia to read the provisions which keep these laws in force, as I see he has the volume before him.

Mr. BLOUNT. Those very statutes are referred to in this codification and are published.

Mr. GROUT. Published where?

Mr. BLOUNT. They are printed like the other documents cited by Congress in the adoption of this very statute.

Mr. GROUT. Laws running through the whole history of this territory since its colonization, because at one time it was under the laws of Maryland and was afterwards ceded to the United States.

Mr. BLOUNT. Those were general statutes; and my friend does not undertake to say that those laws are not embraced in this codification.

Mr. GROUT. I undertake to say that those laws are not arranged and set forth in the compilation to which the gentleman refers. They are recognized as in force, but we are left to struggle through mazes of uncertainty in order to ascertain what they are, not only in regard to municipal matters but in regard to general provisions of law relating to the District. Here and there we may have a gleam of light upon the subject; that is all.

Gentlemen, when they look carefully at this bill, will find that it provides simply for a revision of all the laws, rules, regulations, etc., relating to the municipal affairs of the District—relating to the city of Georgetown as well as to the city of Washington—for the provisions of law relating to these two divisions of the District are not in all cases the same, because these two cities had separate municipal organizations for many years.

Mr. OATES. But you do not propose to embrace in the compilation all the laws of the District.

Mr. GROUT. That is provided for in a bill which has passed this House. Steps were taken some weeks ago, as the chairman of the committee has stated, to ascertain what those laws are. That bill I had the honor myself to report; it looks to inquiry in that direction. But the present bill relates to a system by itself; it applies to municipal affairs.

Now, as to the revision of the statutes of the District of Columbia. When you find there something in relation to the water-works of the city you find but a mere outline or skeleton; you find provisions giving the executive authorities of the city certain powers to make rules and regulations. Those rules and regulations of recent date have been printed and preserved and can be found; but when you undertake to go back to the regulations of the levy court, relating not to the water supply, but to taxes, you must, of course, refer to the municipal enactments—the city ordinances of Washington and Georgetown; and in that respect the enactments applying to the District are, as my friend from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] has said, nebulous, so that only the most diligent inquiry can ascertain what they are.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. What do we want at any rate with those old rules?

Mr. GROUT. I must say that when the subject was first brought to my attention I was inclined to say as the gentleman from Illinois would now suggest, "Let us clean out all these old rules by a codification of the laws of the District; let not the spectacle longer exist of the capital of the country being absolutely in confusion as to its public and municipal laws. But I found a sentiment strongly prevailing with the courts, with the bar of the District, and with the commissioners that these old rules be got together and retained as a system; and finally, as one member of the committee, I came to the conclusion that these old rules, when collected and intelligently presented in a compact form, would probably answer every purpose.

The commissioners have recommended this legislation. If, when they come to make the examination contemplated, they find this proposed revision is not in proper form, they will reject it, as they have the right to do.

Mr. BLOUNT. Allow me a suggestion. It was stated a few moments ago—I do not know whether by the gentleman himself or by one of his associates on the committee—that efforts heretofore made to codify the various laws, ordinances, etc., relating to the District have failed in previous Congresses.

Mr. GROUT. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] said that.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask my friend whether the discussion, the delay, and the failure attending such effort did not grow out of an attempt to ingraft new legislation into that codification.

Mr. GROUT. No, sir. As I read the records of those debates, the difficulty grew out of objections of gentlemen who had not made a careful study of this matter and were not quite willing to credit the District Committee with the ability to instruct them. The failure was due also in part to various other causes which operate in a large body like this—such as the fact of the District legislation failing to receive its proper share of consideration, and other causes entailing delay from which legislation often fails.

Mr. BLOUNT. Allow me to state a single fact which I am quite sure the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Indiana will remember, that in the Forty-sixth or Forty-seventh Congress there was a failure of the proposed codification of District laws, principally because of attempted changes in the laws relating to taxation. That is why the proposed codification was opposed and why it failed.

Mr. GROUT. The gentleman from Illinois has asked me, why not wipe out the old rules and bring in new rules? In reference to that suggestion, I for one finally concluded that the safe way was to gather up these fragments scattered through the history of the District and collect them together with the hope that they would be a sufficient rule.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am not complaining at all of that suggestion; but I did not want the statement to go uncontradicted that hitherto codifications have been obstructed, when in fact those attempts were not for codification, but for new legislation, to a very large extent.

Mr. GROUT. I presume the gentleman is right with reference to the matter to which he has referred. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL].

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, everybody who has had anything to do with the District laws knows how difficult it is, how much time it takes, to find out what are really the existing laws applicable here. There are the laws of the old corporation of Georgetown, which apply within the corporate limits of what was once Georgetown. There are the laws of the District Legislature as it existed for some time. There are the laws of the municipal councils, which regulated the government of the District when it had not a local legislature. There are the laws of the old levy court, under which all the roads were laid out. These various provisions of law are only referred to in the Revised Statutes of the District, and are not incorporated there.

Now, this manuscript volume which this bill proposes to have examined I have examined quite critically. It purports to gather up and put into a volume all of the various enactments pertaining to municipal affairs, with a complete index showing where each one of them may be found—a complete tracing up of the history of municipal legislation.

So far as I have been able to examine it, it will supply completely the purpose for which it was intended. It will enable Congress and the committees of Congress, without searching for weeks, to find out exactly the situation of the law here, and if there is anything wrong to apply the remedy with certainty, with exact knowledge of the law as it is, and therefore with opportunity to wisely change whatever is wrong. Without it it is utterly impossible to properly revise the laws of the District. Without it it is utterly impossible for the District Committee to wisely consider questions coming before it.

Whenever there is any question about a change of regulation we have to resort to the District commissioners and they to the attorneys, who hunt down and trace out what it is through those printed volumes and all those manuscript books, and even then we have no certainty they have not overlooked something. Here is a proposition to consolidate, to properly index all these laws for the information of the people of the District and for the information of the committees of Congress.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe there ought to be a complete codification of the criminal laws; that there ought to be a new code here as we have it in the States. I believe there ought to be a new civil code for the District of Columbia. Such codes could be readily prepared by the Committee on the District of Columbia if they had this volume printed and accessible, but they could not be prepared without it, and without it in the hands of members of Congress such a code could not be passed by Congress.

I do not know how we could spend money better, not only for the District of Columbia, but for the members of Congress themselves.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to consume the further time of the House in reference to this bill. It is a simple question whether the municipal ordinances and orders passed by the various tribunals here shall be codified in a way that they shall be accessible to the people who shall have to use them or not. I have heard nothing since my remarks which has shaken my view as to the passage of the bill. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman permit me to move an amendment striking out "$5,000" and inserting "$2,000?"

Mr. HEMPHILL. If you do that I do not think he will sell for $2,000, or, if he does, he ought not to.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the value of the book has been exaggerated.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not want any such amendment introduced if I can help it. I withdraw the amendment which I submitted providing for the payment of one half by the District and the other half by the United States, as I learn it is already provided for in the second section.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the gentleman allow my amendment to be submitted.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will withdraw the previous question for that purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to strike out "$5,000" and insert "at a sum not to exceed $2,000."

Mr. HEMPHILL. I demand the previous question.

Mr. GROUT. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to ask him if the commissioners think this manuscript volume worth $5,000, if after examination they are satisfied of that fact, I do not see why they should be limited to the payment only of $2,000? Why not let the sum remain as it is in the bill, and then let the commissioners pay what they are satisfied the volume is worth?

Mr. RANDALL. My experience is that wherever you appropriate money in a bill the full amount appropriated goes out of the Treasury.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I agree with the gentleman about that.

Mr. GROUT. This is not appropriated.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, yes, it is appropriated. I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he has seen these volumes.

Mr. RANDALL. No, I have not, but I do not think they are of the value you expect in reference to this District.

I know the fact that the police attend to such regulations as the gentleman refers to; and whatever may be the course of the committee, whether they purchase this compilation or not, that must be the end of it after all. All these things must be looked after by the police authorities.

Mr. OATES. I would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania as a fair compromise to make it $3,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well; I have no objection. The trouble is that it will be sent over to the Senate, and, speaking with the utmost respect of that body, it is very apt to be enlarged after it reaches there. If I could get the assurance of the chairman of the committee that he will stick to $3,000, then I will feel more confident.

Mr. HEMPHILL. My information is only such as we have been able to gather in committee. I know the book is admirably compiled. It is hard to fix the value of such a thing. It has, of course, no value outside of the District. It could not be sold to advantage anywhere else than here.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, it is of more value to the lawyers who come in contact with the city government than anybody else.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, we can make the lawyers pay for it, and just in the same way that they pay for the Supreme Court reports.

Mr. RANDALL. This looks also to the printing of this compilation after we have paid the money to obtain possession of the right.

Mr. HEMPHILL. When it is found to be satisfactory after this investigation, then we may also have it printed and give the right to purchase it to anybody who is willing to pay the price which may be fixed upon it at the Government Printing Office.

I call for the previous question upon the bill and pending amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment to allow another amendment to be pending under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. HEMPHILL. What is the amendment?

Mr. SPRINGER. To insert after the word "purchase," in line 18, page 2, the words "five hundred copies of—at the sum of $3 each." This provides for the purchase from the compiler of 500 copies at $3 each.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I can not yield for that. It changes the whole scope of the bill and the scheme of the committee in framing it as it is.

The previous question was ordered; on a division there being—ayes 34, noes 13.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. RANDALL.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the amendment be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 19 strike out "five" and insert "two;" so it will read "not to exceed $2,000."

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I did not gather from the reading of the amendment that the gentleman had modified it as I understood him to agree to do.

Mr. RANDALL. Upon reflection, and after conference with others, it is thought that $2,000 is enough.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 32, noes 18.

So the amendment of Mr. RANDALL was adopted.

The same amendment was adopted in line 2 of section 2.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The question being upon the third reading of the bill, the question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 37, noes 12.

So the bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred upon the passage of the bill as amended.

Mr. SPRINGER. Pending that, I move that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Is that debatable?

The SPEAKER. The previous question not having been ordered, the motion is debatable.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move to amend the motion to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. The motion to recommit is susceptible of amendment, and whether before or after the previous question is ordered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Then I move to amend the motion to recommit by instructing the Committee on the District of Columbia to report a bill providing for the appointment of a commission to codify the laws of the District.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will withdraw my motion and agree to the motion to recommit with that amendment.

Mr. GROUT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask that he limit the expenses of that commission to $50,000?

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman will allow me, I will put a limit upon it that it shall not exceed $1,000.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move that it be done by convict labor [laughter] or Chinese labor.

Mr. Speaker, I trust the House will not send this bill back to the committee. We all know that it amounts to nothing to pass a bill providing for the codification of the laws of the District. It has been tried for twenty years without success. This is a provision to get something like a compilation of the laws as they exist, in order that the District Committee may have something to act upon when they come to consider matters relating to the District.

I call the previous question upon the motion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I hardly think it fair that the gentleman should call the previous question upon the motion of this side.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Very well, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The idea in making the motion is that every compilation of the laws of the District of Columbia is a step in the wrong direction. That every attempt to obtain a compilation of these laws, many of them being obsolete, part being the old common law system, part the laws of the State of Maryland, and part the ordinances of the city council or municipality of the city of Washington under the various forms of the city government extending back for nearly a hundred years is, I repeat, a step in the wrong direction; and the right thing to do is for a code to be prepared for the government of the District, which code can be enacted into law by the Congress of the United States, which will work a repeal of the old obsolete forms of law; and in that manner alone can we make a satisfactory system of laws for the District.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Do you not know that has been attempted here and has failed every time?

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman will allow me, I would like to say there has been a so-called attempt to codify, but the effort has gone beyond a codification and aimed at important legislation. There has been resistance to that legislation, not to codification.

Mr. HEMPHILL. You are obliged to have new laws in a codification; otherwise it is a compilation.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. In a certain sense the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] is right. There may be new laws in the codification in the sense that they have new validity given to them by the legislative act of Congress. But a codification of the laws that ought to govern the District of Columbia is not an impossibility. It has been done in various States under the name of revised statutes, general statutes, and other names. There are a number of lawyers at the bar of the District of Columbia that can do it. The gentleman himself is wholly competent to do it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I agree to everything you say; but it never has been done. You know perfectly well we never can get a quorum here to pass a District bill. We have only one day at a time. Unless we get a compilation of the laws, so we can know what they are before we undertake to codify them, we never will get a codification

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The whole argument of the gentleman, when reduced to plain English, is that the Congress of the United States will not perform its duty and is incompetent to codify the law for the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Not incompetent, but it will not do it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am not willing to pass a law to print a compilation of certain laws of the District of Columbia upon the hypothesis that Congress will not perform its duty and is incompetent to perform its duty.

Mr. BLOUNT. The three commissioners, two of which are not lawyers, can do it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I believe it is easier to prepare a code for the government of the District of Columbia than it is to make an intelligent and reliable compilation of the various laws which may apply to this District. It is a very doubtful legal question concerning many of these statutes and ordinances as to whether they do now have the validity of law or whether they have been repealed by subsequent acts. That legal question is to be decided by the compiler. It does not have to be decided by the codifier who is making a statute which is to be enacted. That is the ground upon which I moved to amend the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], that it was a step in the wrong direction to attempt to make an authoritative compilation of the laws that might now apply to the District of Columbia, for it postpones the possibility of doing what ought to be done, to wit, the codification and enactment of a statute which ought to be passed by Congress for the government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman allow me to say a word?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. HEARD. It is this: We concede the importance of the codification of the laws; but I ask the gentleman if it is not necessary, or certainly if it is not a step in the right direction, to have a compilation of the District laws, or what is understood to be the District laws, to make the foundation of the codification?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Undoubtedly the more the man who is to codify knows of the law and its history the better he will be competent to discharge his duties; but it is not worth $2,000 to purchase this compilation for the purpose of codifying the law. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] will undertake to draw up a code for the District of Columbia I have no doubt they would draw a better code than the law now in existence in the District of Columbia. I think I can say that without being guilty of any fulsome flattery of the two gentlemen.

Mr. HEARD. I thank the gentleman from Kentucky for his flattering remark——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not flatter. I am only just.

Mr. HEARD. But I think it is a very doubtful compliment when he says that we or any other two lawyers could draw a better code. I believe the District of Columbia has the poorest apology for a code that exists on the earth to-day.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. And yet you think you can not draw a better one.

Mr. HEARD. Yet, Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to know what is understood to be the law here to-day. I believe in order to get an intelligent code we ought to have a compilation of the law as it is supposed to be to-day.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as to whether it is worth $2,000 or $1,000, that is a question for the House to determine. The committee have given the matter a good deal of attention. I submit this to the gentleman from Kentucky. He says our suggestion proceeds upon the hypothesis that Congress is incompetent to codify these laws. I say the gentleman is wrong. We do not proceed upon any such hypothesis. We do proceed upon the hypothesis that the gentleman meets us on that these laws ought to be compiled and codified, that there ought to be put before the people of the District and the country a code of laws for the District that can be understood. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether the gentleman proposes to have Congress itself codify these laws? Does he propose to raise a commission from the membership of this House to codify these laws?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What I proposed was that the Committee on the District of Columbia, in whose intelligence I have great confidence, should themselves, under the instructions of the House, report a suitable mode of carrying out the will of the House, which, if this resolution is adopted, will give us a code drawn up by a commission which shall be appointed in the mode reported by the committee.

Mr. HEARD. Now I think I clearly understand the gentleman's proposition. It is that the House in the first place shall disagree to our proposition to have the laws as they are supposed to exist compiled as the material for a codifying committee when raised.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That the House disagree with the proposition of the committee to have printed at the expense of the Government the present manuscript compilation. That is what the House does, not merely by disagreeing and stopping at that point, but by going a step further and directing a codification, the mode of which shall be left to the commission; and if they choose this mode I for one have no objection.

Mr. HEARD. Then I accept the issue as made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], and I submit that it is the judgment of the Committee on the District of Columbia that there ought to be a compilation of what is supposed to be the existing law as a predicate for the work which he recommends. Whether the price named here is too great or not is a matter to be determined by the House, but it is the judgment of the committee that there should be a compilation of what are supposed to be the existing laws as a predicate for the work which the gentleman from Kentucky himself recommends.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is correct as far as it goes; but I know of nothing which is more needed than a thorough compilation and codification of the laws of the United States as applicable to the District of Columbia. When I came here in the early part of this session I had occasion to examine a question in which it was necessary to ascertain what were the laws appertaining to the District of Columbia upon a given subject. I inquired of one or two of the very reputable lawyers in this District where I could find a code or compilation of those laws, and nowhere could they point me to it. The proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], it seems to me, is, however, defective in this. With regard to many suits now in existence, or that may hereafter be instituted, it becomes necessary to know, not only what is the existing code of laws appertaining to the District, but also what have been the laws heretofore under the various forms of government which have existed at different times in the cities of Washington and Georgetown and the District of Columbia. In such cases a codification or compilation merely of the future laws of the District would not of course apply.

You want to know not merely the existing law but the former laws, and in order to get that knowledge a compilation of this general character is necessary, and, as I have already said, I know of no work which is more imperatively demanded by the people resident in the District, by the Congress of the United States, and by the attorneys who practice law in this District than such a compilation of the laws and regulations appertaining to the District. This bill proposes to give the commissioners of the District discretion, under the advice of their District attorney, to examine the work which has been done by the gentleman named in the bill, and ascertain whether it constitutes a proper compilation of these laws and regulations, and whether it is worthy of being purchased and published as such. The commissioners are given discretion, under the advice of their attorney, to examine the work and pass upon it, and the sum of $5,000 which is named in the bill is in my judgment a mere bagatelle in view of the importance of this work.

Mr. MCADOO. I want to make a suggestion to the chairman of the committee. I have been voting against this bill, and my idea has been this: I have thought that we could get for about a thousand dollars a compilation of the laws of the District which would serve every purpose. It ought not to be difficult to get the work done. The city which I represent is a large city; it has a legislative history of nearly sixty years; our legislative sessions are annual, and the number of charters and enactments with reference to the city is very great; yet the whole body of these charters and laws was very intelligently compiled at a cost of about $500. I admit that it is necessary that there should be not only a compilation but a codification relating to the District; but the first step is a compilation, and I suggest to the able chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia that he allow this bill to be recommitted, and let us have some one or two men designated to make such a compilation as the first step.

Mr. HEMPHILL. But here is a compilation already made, which is to be subjected to the scrutiny of the commissioners and of the attorney for the District, four gentlemen who are certainly as well qualified to pass judgment upon it as any that we could find here. The work is already done. If it is satisfactorily done we may as well buy it. Of course, if it is not properly done we shall not buy it and shall not pay a cent for it.

Mr. MCADOO. It seems to me that the price is very high.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, the bill does not say that we shall pay $2,000; it simply says that the price shall not exceed that sum.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Does not the gentleman know that when we authorize the purchase at not more than that price, it necessarily means that we shall pay that price? I do not myself object to the price. In fact, I do not know but $5,000 may be a proper price for the work.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, the amount has now been limited to $2,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I did not object to the price. My idea was that the compilation would rather postpone than hasten the codification.

Mr. HEARD. Not at all. It is the first step toward codification.

Mr. MCADOO. The greatest code ever made in this country was the New York State code, by Mr. David Dudley Field and his associates, and I think you will find that the price which this bill proposes to pay for codifying the laws of this District is very much larger than what was paid to that distinguished lawyer for his code, which has attracted international attention.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will call the previous question and let us dispose of this matter.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the motion to recommit. Did the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] propose to modify the motion so that the expenditure shall not exceed $1,000?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will not press that modification; that matter can be arranged in the committee.

The question being taken on the motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia with instructions, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 10, noes 31.

The bill was then passed; there being—ayes 40, noes 12.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RECORD OF WILLS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now call up the bill (H. R. 1514) relating to the record of wills in the District of Columbia. This bill has been returned from the Senate with an amendment, in which the District Committee recommend concurrence.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentlemen from South Carolina will now permit the Public Lands Committee to go on with their bill. I think the gentleman ought to consent to that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman will be patient a little while, I think we shall soon get through with our business.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall have to raise the question of consideration. We are losing a great deal of time on unimportant measures.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that the amendment proposed to this bill is simply to insert a few words.

Mr. HOLMAN. If this is merely a formal amendment I do not object to its being acted upon.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "Columbia," insert "or by the late orphans' court of said District."

The amendment was concurred in.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now call up another bill which has been returned from the Senate with an amendment—the bill (H. R. 3290) to amend section 685 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on the District of Columbia recommend non-concurrence in this amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. With the consent of the members of the committee I withdraw the recommendation for non-concurrence and ask the House to concur in this amendment. It simply provides that in case of serving a summons, the party shall not be bound by service at his residence upon a person who is less than sixteen years of age.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In line 11, page 1, strike out "twelve" and insert "sixteen."

The amendment was concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now call up House bill No. 7647 to incorporate the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company of the District of Columbia. This bill was the unfinished business of the last District day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that at the adjournment on the last day when District business was under consideration, House bill No. 7647 was pending upon a motion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], not now present, to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. HOLMAN. I raise the question of consideration against this bill and in favor of the land bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina, on behalf of the Committee on the District of Columbia, calls up House bill No. 7647, to incorporate the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company of the District of Columbia. On this bill the gentleman from Indiana raises the question of consideration, stating that he desires the House to consider the bill known as the public-land bill. The question is, Will the House now proceed to consider House bill No. 7647?

The question was decided in the negative—ayes 15, noes 34.

REFORM SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will now be no objection to permitting the public-land bill to be called up. I shall have to raise the question of consideration against any bill which the gentleman from South Carolina seeks to have considered.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up the bill (H. R. 1361) to incorporate the Reform School for Girls of the District of Columbia. This bill has been returned from the Senate with amendments.

The SPEAKER. Upon this bill the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] raises the question of consideration, for the purpose already indicated. The question is, Will the House now proceed to consider this bill?

The question was decided in the negative—ayes 15, noes 28.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of the expression of the sentiment of the House, I hope my friend from South Carolina will not further press District business. I call up the public-land bill, which is unfinished business.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There are a number of bills which are very important, as the people of the District believe, to their interests. There has been but little opportunity to have such business attended to. Later in the day, if my friend from Indiana wants to take up this bill, or even if he wants an evening session, I will not object. I ask the gentleman from Indiana how long his bill will take.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are forty-two amendments to the bill; and the amendments are the important matter.

Mr. WILKINS. It will take a week.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman will agree that the District business shall not extend beyond 2 o'clock——

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like to make a statement: There are two measures which were left in an unfinished state on the last District day—one the bill to incorporate the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company, which was reported from the Committee of the Whole to the House; the other the joint resolution in regard to the case of Samuel Strong, which, when we adjourned, remained in Committee of the Whole. If we can get through those two bills, I will then yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. They will occupy the whole day.

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, they will not. We will soon get through with them.

Mr. HOLMAN. Call up the first bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will make that proposition. I desire to dispose of the resolution in the Strong case, and then the bill in reference to the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let them be read, and let us vote upon them.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does this require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Let there be fifteen minutes of debate on each side upon the resolution in the Strong case. Does the gentleman agree to that proposition?

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HEMPHILL. My proposition is that the debate shall be limited on the Strong resolution to fifteen minutes on each side, and on the Georgetown railway bill to five minutes on each side.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does this require unanimous consent?

Mr. SPINOLA. Say fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. HOLMAN. With the understanding that it is not to run beyond 2 o'clock.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

SAMUEL STRONG.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now call up joint resolution (S. R. 26) to arbitrate and settle the questions at issue between the District of Columbia and Samuel Strong.

The SPEAKER. That is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of that resolution; and pending that motion I move that all debate be limited to fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. HOLMAN. The question of consideration can not be raised.

The SPEAKER. It can not.

Mr. HOLMAN. The question is as to whether the House will go into committee or not.

The SPEAKER. That is a question which will have to be voted on. The question now pending is on limiting the debate.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to say, when this matter was under consideration two weeks ago and the hour expired within which it could be considered, I had the floor for the purpose of offering an amendment in connection with one of the sections of the bill. If I may be recognized for a limited portion of the time, I have no objection to consenting to the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. As the proceedings took place in committee, the Chair has no knowledge of the status of the resolution.

Mr. PAYSON. If I may be recognized when this matter shall come up in the committee, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina limiting debate to fifteen minutes on either side.

The motion was agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 12.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. SPINOLA. If we are not permitted to have a vote on this joint resolution, I give notice I shall object to everything else and demand the presence of a quorum.

Mr. HOLMAN. If this will occupy but a half an hour I will yield, but if it is to occupy longer I will not.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw the point of no quorum?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of joint resolution (S. R. 26) to arbitrate and settle the questions at issue between the District of Columbia and Samuel Strong; and by order of the House debate is limited to fifteen minutes on either side. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas for many years there has been vexatious and expensive litigation between the District of Columbia and Samuel Strong that is likely to continue for many years to come, involving each year additional expense to the parties concerned; and

Whereas experience shows that matters of account so complicated and extensive consume the whole term of the court trying the same, to the delay of other causes; and

Whereas it is the duty of the Government and the interest of the citizen that such controversies should be ended as speedily and satisfactorily as possible: Therefore,

Resolved, etc., That the matters in controversy, as shown by the pleadings, between the District of Columbia and Samuel Strong, known in the circuit court of the District of Columbia as causes at law numbered 14706 and 14736, be submitted to the arbitration of three persons to be appointed by the President of the United States, and the award of said arbitrators, or a majority of them, shall be final and conclusive as to the matters in issue between the parties under the pleadings in said causes, which award shall be filed in the papers of the said causes in the district court of the District of Columbia, and noted on the records of said court; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed, should the award be in favor of the said Samuel Strong, to pay said award, when duly certified to him by the clerk of said court, in the same manner that judgments against the District of Columbia are paid when rendered by the Court of Claims.

SEC. 2. That it shall be lawful for said arbitrators to consider any competent evidence heretofore taken either before any of the courts where said causes were pending, or before any of the referees heretofore appointed, including the evidence taken before William Penn Clark, Albert E. Payne, and Edward Clark, and if, in the judgment of said arbitrators, further evidence shall be deemed necessary, the same may be taken by them under the rules now governing the taking of evidence to be used before the courts of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. That before the President of the United States shall appoint the said arbitrators, the said Samuel Strong shall consent in writing to the appointment of the said arbitrators as provided in this joint resolution, and, further, that any award made by them, or a majority of them, shall be final and conclusive as to matter in issue between the parties to these causes, which consent shall be entered of record in the court in which the cases are pending, and shall be certified by the clerk of said court to the President of the United States.

SEC. 4. That the said arbitrators in passing upon any questions of law involved in the pleadings in said causes shall follow and be bound in making their award by any judgment or decision heretofore rendered in the said causes, or either of them, by the supreme court of the District of Columbia in general term, and in stating the account between the parties shall credit the District of Columbia with the face value of the certificates issued.

SEC. 5. That the compensation of said arbitrators shall not exceed the sum of $1,000 each.

Mr. GROUT. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] to make his amendment.

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman favors the resolution and should be heard first.

Mr. GROUT. I occupied considerable time the other day in explaining the provisions of the resolution and its purpose, which I do not think have in any sense been answered. Unless the gentleman has something to offer I am ready to take the vote now without further debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised by the Clerk that the motion is to report the bill back with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. SPINOLA. Who makes that motion?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed it was made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. GROUT. Let us take the sense of the committee, then, if nobody wishes to be heard. But I think, Mr. Chairman, there is some mistake here, and that the motion to strike out the enacting clause refers to the Georgetown Railway bill and not to this joint resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont is correct. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Vermont in favor of the joint resolution.

Mr. PAYSON. If you will look at the RECORD you will discover, Mr. Chairman, that when the joint resolution was last up for consideration I had the floor explaining my amendment.

Mr. GROUT. Whatever may be said in favor of the joint resolution, perhaps, had better be said now.

Mr. PAYSON. Very well.

Mr. GROUT. Well, I said that if there was nothing to be urged against the bill, the friends of it are ready to take the sense of the House at any time. So we are now, and I call for a vote upon the pending proposition.

Mr. PAYSON. This resolution, Mr. Chairman, in substance proposes a reference of all questions in dispute between Samuel Strong and the District of Columbia to a board of arbitrators to consist of three members to be appointed by the President of the United States, whose decision, as to the amount found to be due Mr. Strong, shall be conclusive, and shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States upon the certificate of the board thus organized. As appears by the report submitted by the Committee on the District of Columbia, this controversy grows out of the performance of certain work by Mr. Strong for the District of Columbia in years past, for which a large amount is claimed to be yet due the beneficiary of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, this matter has been pending in the courts for many years, and the principal argument presented by the friends of the bill to the House in favor of the adoption of this course of procedure, which two weeks ago I characterized as being one of the most extraordinary character, is the fact that this account is old, that the litigation has been long protracted, and that it is a desirable thing that there should be an end to litigation; and as these proceedings will bring the matter to a summary end, that therefore the resolution now before the House ought to pass.

In the litigation which has already taken place in years past it appears from the report of the committee that the first findings by a judicial tribunal in favor of plaintiff was for $15,413, which was the finding of a judge, for it was a chancery proceeding.

Mr. GROUT. The gentleman is mistaken there. That was the amount found due to a subcontractor from Strong.

Mr. PAYSON. That was the first finding in the courts. Again, on the 3d day of June, 1878, it appears that there was a finding by an auditor, appointed in conformity to law under the District, in favor of the plaintiff of $32,958.

That finding was set aside. Then, again, there was a jury called in the same case, and a verdict rendered by the jury for $133,000 in favor of the plaintiff. That verdict was subsequently set aside, it being held by the judge, as I glean from the report, that there was no authority of law for the incurrence of the indebtedness upon which the suit was prosecuted; and that finding was subsequently reversed by the next court, being the supreme court of the District of Columbia. By agreement of the parties, later on, there was a reference of the whole question of dispute to a board of arbitration, and an award by that board of $234,798, which was made in 1883. The legal questions involved in the case were presented, and the award was also set aside, it being held by the supreme court of the District that one item in connection with the award allowed to the plaintiff ought not to have been allowed for this reason: that it was made up of an allowance to him of the discount he had suffered in disposing of certain certificates of indebtedness which had been received by him from the District on account of the work; and the board of arbitrators allowed him in this settlement the benefit of that discount. The supreme court of the District held, however, that he was not entitled to it.

That is only essential, in my view of the case and the position I shall take in reference to it, to show that there have been wide ranges of individual opinions as to the amount to be obtained from the District for the work done, ranging from $15,000 in the first amount awarded to $234,000 in another award.

Mr. GROUT. The gentleman is mistaken about the $15,000 award.

Mr. PAYSON. Very well; the next award, $32,956. There is this wide range of opinion as to the amount due.

Now, I have no objection; indeed, I am in favor of the submission of this claim to a board of arbitrators. It is evident from an inspection of this report that the amount involved necessitates an inquiry into a great volume of small transactions, matters of computation, matters of account, work done, and the different prices to be paid for the work when performed, and it is especially that kind of a situation or dispute between parties that demands a reference to a board of arbitrators and that such a board is especially adapted to consider.

But I am opposed in this case, as in every other case where the Government is interested, to provide first for a board of arbitration, to be composed of citizens of this District, to adjust a matter between the Government on the one side and an individual on the other, and say that Congress shall then step in to declare that whatever they determine shall be a finality in the matter, and particularly where the matter involved is a quarter of a million of dollars, because of the point made by the plaintiff that litigation has been delayed because of vexatious, not to say malicious, action on the part of the law officers of the District, for it has been so asserted on the other side. I shall propose at the proper time to amend the bill to provide that the arbitration may be had; and instead of the provision of the bill that the award of the arbitrators shall be final, that the award when made shall be entered as a judgment in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and from that decision an appeal may be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, as in other cases, by either party, and that the appeal shall not be prosecuted by the District of Columbia unless it shall be approved by the Attorney-General of the United States.

That is a protection against any case of an award which is extortionate, or to an amount that ought not to be allowed, and at the same time it protects the plaintiff in the case from any claim that his rights will either be retarded or frittered away by reason of any personal feeling on the part of the officers of the District which may have grown out of this vexatious litigation. No rights can be lost to him, the rights of the Government can be preserved, and it seems to me it will be a concession to the plaintiff that his friends ought to be perfectly satisfied with. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I move that the words in section 3, which I send to the Clerk's desk, and which are underscored, be stricken out, and in lieu thereof the amendment be inserted, which I also send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to insert, in the fourth line, after the word "resolution," striking out all the balance of the section, the following:

"And the award of the arbitration shall be entered as a judgment in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and an appeal shall be allowed to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, as in other cases, but shall not be taken by the District unless approved by the Attorney-General of the United States."

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment in substance was carefully considered by the committee, that is, the question of giving the right of appeal from the decision of these arbitrators. Upon full consideration of the matter the committee at last decided that it was best, under all the circumstances of the case as it seemed to them, not to make this provision. It may seem differently to the House, although the House can not understand this matter in its fullness in a talk of fifteen minutes or three times as long, for it took seventy-nine days to hear the case before a jury.

It seemed to the committee the best course to have a board of arbitrators, appointed by the President, to hear and decide upon this controversy and have an end of the whole business. This decision was reached not because the courts do not ordinarily offer an ample source of relief for parties litigant, but because this case has been so long in court and is so involved and complicated in its character, involving so many questions of law and fact. It should be said that most of the questions of law have already been determined by the supreme court of the District, to which the case has been four times on appeal; once from the $32,000 judgment spoken of by the gentleman from Illinois, which was reversed; again from a verdict of a jury of $133,000, and reversed upon the ground that there was an understanding by which the case was to have been continued, as the court found, at the time it was tried.

Again it went to the supreme court, having been taken away from the jury by the presiding judge after seventy-nine days of trial, the jury not being allowed to find the sum due at all, upon the ground that there was no appropriation at the time the board of public works entered into these contracts, and hence the contracts were invalid. After that case had been on trial seventy-nine days, the District managers were able to get that ruling from the court and the case was taken from the jury and went to the supreme court of the District. Again the court below was reversed. The supreme court of the District said that would not answer; that while it might be true there was no appropriation and so, so far as the law was concerned which authorized the board of public works to act, it might not be valid, yet Congress by subsequent legislation had validated these contracts and the work had been performed and never fully paid for, and therefore that objection ought not to obtain. The case came back and was then sent to three referees.

I have here their report, running through 204 pages of closely-printed matter, Mr. Chairman; their report simply of the facts, in which they found two hundred and odd thousand dollars due to the plaintiff. Now I ask the attention of the House to what I am about to say. That case went to the supreme court and was reversed. The contract, in the first place, was that Mr. Strong was to have his pay in lawful money; but after he worked for a time he called for his pay and there was no money in the treasury. So he informed the board of public works that he must withdraw his men; that he could not work, for he had not the means. It was then arranged, not that he should have pay, but that they would issue to him certificates of indebtedness, which he could use as collateral with his own notes with which to raise money and prosecute the work. He did so. He concluded that rather than abandon the job he would go forward under that arrangement. He received these certificates of indebtedness and put them up as collateral security.

The District treasury was bankrupt. There were no funds available to meet the certificates. The result was that these certificates had to be disposed of at less than 50 cents on the dollar; some forty-odd cents on the dollar. This bankrupted Mr. Strong. Now he claims that he never agreed to take the certificates in payment. He only took them as an accommodation arrangement to help him raise money on his notes, with the expectation that with the money he could go forward with the work, and in due time the District would pay as they had agreed to pay for his work. The whole matter became involved. Mr. Strong went into bankruptcy. He finally brought forward a claim for extra work that was done for laying certain sewers, especially the Slash Run sewer, making it much longer. There were a great many changes in almost all the sewers he constructed, forming a basis for a charge for extra work. He brought suits against the District, making claim of course when he brought the suits that he should be allowed the difference between the certificates and good money of the United States.

It was finally decided by the District court that Mr. Strong, having taken these certificates and put them up, he was bound by that action and so must be the loser. Now, that was allowed by those three referees, and it entered into almost every item throughout the whole account; but the supreme court have reversed that decision, and Mr. Strong, for the sake of having an end of the matter, has agreed, as gentlemen will see by consulting the report, to waive all claim on that score, and this joint resolution provides that all law already established by the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall be accepted by arbitrators in finding their result. Now, the reasons why it seemed to the committee wise, and fair, and honest, and equitable, and proper in every way to let this old man have a conclusion of the controversy in this way is because he has been kept dancing attendance upon the courts of this District for fifteen years, and every time they have got the judgment of men as to what he was entitled to a large balance has been found due to him. But counsel, ingenious in conducting defenses, have raised all manner of questions, and it is a fact that in one of the last bills of exception there were between forty and fifty exceptions.

It seemed to the committee fair that this old man, who is now seventy-nine years of age and who is broken down and ruined by the failure of the District to keep its contract with him—it seemed, I say, only fair that having now waived his claim to that item, and asking only for this extra work, he should have whatever little pittance there may be left passed upon by a board of arbitrators to be appointed by the President, and have an end to the matter.

These are the reasons why the committee recommend the bill. As other gentlemen wish to speak upon the question, this perhaps is all the time I ought to occupy, and I yield now to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], reserving the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. PAYSON. How much time remains in opposition to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Six minutes.

Mr. PAYSON. There is one point that I would like to have the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] inform us about. The delay in the hearing and final determination of this case since 1883 is owing entirely to the fact that the plaintiff claimed as against the Government the difference between the face value of the certificates and their market value.

Mr. GROUT. It is not.

Mr. PAYSON. Why not?

Mr. GROUT. I have already stated that when they had completed a trial of seventy-nine days before a jury the District counsel persuaded the judge to make an order that the plaintiff could not recover.

Mr. PAYSON. That is not an answer at all.

Mr. GROUT. Yes, it is; because you say that was the cause of the delay.

Mr. PAYSON. If the gentleman will answer my question—

Mr. GROUT. I am answering your question.

Mr. PAYSON. You are not. I ask the gentleman's attention to my point. On the 24th of May there was a reference to a board of arbitration, which board of arbitration found $234,000 against the District. In that sum a large item was the discount on the District certificates.

Mr. GROUT. Yes.

Mr. PAYSON. And that was a year and a half after the jury trial to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. GROUT. That is true.

Mr. PAYSON. Now, I say to the House that the reason of the delay since 1883 has been the fact that the plaintiff's lawyers have claimed that the discount upon the District certificates should be charged up against the District; and if the plaintiff had been content with claiming the money that the supreme court decided he was entitled to as a matter of law, there is nothing appearing to show that he might not have had his judgment years ago. But because he claimed that the District should be saddled with this discount, and because he claimed the $234,000 which the court had decided he was not entitled to, that is the reason of the delay for the last five years.

Mr. GROUT. A part of it.

Mr. PAYSON. And in this bill there is no provision that he waives any claim to this discount now.

That is the point I am making as against the provision in this bill—that it should not be left to the judgment of three men to decide finally and conclusively all questions of law and fact against the Government of the United States, the District being prohibited from taking any appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. GROUT. That matter is provided for in the bill.

Mr. PAYSON. I know it is provided in the bill that the law as decided by the supreme court of the District shall be the rule by which the arbitrators shall be bound; but we all know well enough as lawyers that if it should happen to be the judgment of the board of arbitrators that this old gentleman had been badly treated, and if they should want to apply a salve to his wounds by an extortionate award, it would be the easiest thing in the world for them to find a pretext for doing so.

Mr. GROUT. That is only the gentleman's supposition.

Mr. PAYSON. I submit that no fault can reasonably be found with such an amendment as I offer, under which an appeal by the District will not be permitted unless approved by the Attorney-General of the United States. This ought to be satisfactory, unless gentlemen here desire that the entire control of this matter shall be given over to three gentlemen, the hands of the Government being tied. I submit that the amendment I have offered ought to be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] is now entitled to the floor for four minutes.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Chairman, the question which will be submitted for the decision of the arbitrators under this bill will be simply a question of fact. The report on this matter has been presented both in the Senate and the House without a dissenting voice, and I wish to call attention to the question of fact as presented in the report:

There seems to be no question that the contractor furnished the material and performed the work and labor required by the terms of his contract.

On that point there is no question.

And it is equally clear that the board of public works failed to comply with the thirteenth clause in the contract, which provided that the work should be paid for in legal money of the United States.

In regard to the question raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], why Mr. Strong did not want to give full credit for these certificates, I have on my desk ten or fifteen affidavits setting forth the fact that the District of Columbia, through its legal representatives, paid pretty much all its contractors at that time in these same certificates, representing about 50 cents on the dollar. Hence, when that question came up Mr. Strong said, "I am willing to take those certificates at the same rates as other contractors have taken them." The court so adjudged and gave him credit accordingly. But the higher court set aside that judgment upon the ground that the full face value should have been allowed, although all other contractors had been paid in certificates representing only 50 cents on the dollar of their indebtedness. This resolution provides that Mr. Strong, under this arbitration, shall take those certificates at their face value.

Here is a man who did his work faithfully under a contract; who fulfilled his contract to the very letter, as could be shown by reference to the facts if my time allowed. This joint resolution is recommended by the chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, who says:

In every point of view, it seems to me economical, just, and desirable to have a reference of the cause to some competent referee or referees.

This is the language of a letter of Hon. William M. Merrick, chief-justice of the supreme court of this District.

I appeal to gentlemen of the House not to adopt the amendment which has been offered. This man has been struggling during fourteen years to obtain his rights; he has won his suit every time it has gone to trial, and would have obtained justice through the courts if he had not been set back by technicalities. He has had to contend with what appears to have been a piece of malicious persecution on the part of an officer of the District. The District has had the advantage of this man's labor; it is now enjoying the benefits of the work he performed in carrying out his contracts. The improvements in this city which have done so much to beautify and ornament it and in which every man here claims to feel pride, are due in a large degree to the labors of Mr. Strong.

If I had more time for the presentation of this case, I think I could put it before the House in such a way that there would not be a dissenting voice upon the passage of this joint resolution.

In regard to the selection of the arbitrators, that is left entirely to the opponents of Mr. Strong. The District of Columbia, through the President of the United States, will select three disinterested, honorable men, who are to make the decision. Mr. Strong will have nothing to do with the selection, but will be bound by their decision, whatever it may be. Something is due him beyond all question; and that something, whether $1 or $25, or $50,000, this old man ought to have paid to him. He did his work for the District faithfully as an honorable, honest man. He is to-day a bankrupt, and will die in the poor-house unless he gets some relief at the hands of the representatives of the people. I appeal to the humanity and justice of every man here not to adopt this amendment, because it will tie up the proceedings to such an extent as practically to defeat the securing of this old man's just rights.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed by the order of the House for debate on this question has expired. The question is first on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 28; noes 20.

Mr. SPINOLA. No quorum; let us have tellers.

Mr. REED. I call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Ayes 28, noes 20. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] make the point of no quorum.

NOMINATION OF HARRISON.

Mr. PAYSON. Let the dispatch be read which I send up to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no objection it will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Western Union Telegraph Company bulletin.]

Harrison nominated.

[Loud applause on the Republican side and waving of handkerchiefs and flags.]

SAMUEL STRONG.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum having been made, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] as tellers.

Mr. SPINOLA. I think if we can have the vote taken over again there will be no necessity for having tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, by unanimous consent the present proceeding will be dispensed with, and the amendment and pending section of the joint resolution will be read for the information of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The question recurred on Mr. PAYSON's amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move that the committee rise and report the joint resolution back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had under consideration joint resolution (S. R. 26) to arbitrate and settle the questions at issue between the District of Columbia and Samuel Strong, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGETOWN AND TENNALLYTOWN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7647) to incorporate the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina to the fact that the pending motion is to strike out the enacting clause, made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], not now in his seat, and acting on the principle which has controlled us heretofore, I hope the bill will not be taken up in his absence, but that we will allow it to go over; otherwise I must raise the question of consideration on it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I am sure I would not do anything which would interfere with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] in the discharge of his duties touching the interests of his own constituents, but it is not a bill concerning him or his constituents, but it is a bill in which he can take no special interest. If it were, I would of course not ask the House to consider it. I think it is hardly fair that the people who are interested in a bill should be compelled to stand over because the gentleman is not present. I therefore prefer the House should pass upon it.

I should state when the bill was up before one ground of complaint was that there was no petition presented in favor of it. I have a petition signed by 234 persons living along this route. I have also a letter——

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the question debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable. The question is, Will the House now proceed to the consideration of the bill?

The House divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 41.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move to take up the land bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman from Indiana will allow this railroad bill to go through, it will be the end of the business of the District of Columbia for to-day. I do not see why I should give up everything while he gives up nothing.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman has now taken up nearly the whole day with this business.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The people of the District of Columbia are entitled to some consideration. Is the gentleman from Indiana willing to allow ten minutes on each side?

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well then; say ten minutes on each side. I agree if the debate on this bill shall not go beyond ten minutes. After that let the vote be taken, and let it be passed or rejected.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I agree to that.

The SPEAKER. The House has determined not to consider it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move to take the vote over again.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, if my friend will allow the homestead bill to be called up——

Mr. ATKINSON. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. REED. What was the proposition?

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to consider the bill, and proceed to its consideration with an understanding between the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from South Carolina that there would be not exceeding ten minutes' debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the House will reconsider the vote.

Mr. REED. What is the vote upon?

The SPEAKER. The Tennallytown railroad bill.

Is there further objection to the request to reconsider the vote and consider the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7647) to incorporate the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Under the agreement the general debate is to be limited to five minutes on each side.

I desire to state, gentlemen, that when this bill was up for consideration the other day objection was made on the part of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] that it was not demanded by people living along the line; and that the real estate through which the road passed, and which would be benefited by its construction, was owned by a syndicate in the northwestern part of the city who were the only people who would be benefited by the bill. I have taken some occasion to investigate the map showing different lots occupied or owned by people along the proposed route of this road, and I am prepared to say that the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was an entire misapprehension. I am prepared to say that the map of the District in that locality is cut up into a large number of lots, and they are owned by a very large number of different people.

Some gentleman, whom I do not know, but he lives out in that part of the city, sent me the other day through one of the doorkeepers a petition signed by two hundred and thirty-four persons living along the line of the road, asking the House of Representatives to pass the bill. They, as I am informed, have no pecuniary interest whatever in the road itself, but simply desire to have some convenience to go from their homes into the city and back to their homes whenever it is necessary for them to do so. At present there is no such facility. I have in addition to that a letter addressed to me and signed by General Drum, who lives in that part of the city, and who says that he has noticed the debate upon the subject, and that it was an entire mistake to state that he and other people living out there, and who may not be able to keep private conveyances, were not interested in and anxious for the passage of the bill. On the contrary, he says that they are interested, and this letter and this petition I think are complete answers to the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] upon such information as he had at the time. It is simply a question now as to whether or not this railroad, which will pass through a certain portion of this District, and which will lead from the city to a town of about seven or eight hundred inhabitants on the edge of the District, shall be constructed; but whether it shall be constructed or not I do not believe that there is any reason whatever for refusing to grant this right of way. There is not a single protest or objection on the part of anybody in the District of Columbia along the line of the road or elsewhere against the bill.

I ask a vote, unless some gentleman wants to be heard further upon it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to strike out the enacting clause.

The motion was not agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, there being on a division—ayes 56, noes 8.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REFORM SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have agreed to yield to the gentleman from South Carolina one minute longer to ask concurrence in Senate amendments to a House bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Under that agreement I call up House bill 1361, to incorporate the reform school for girls of the District of Columbia, simply to ask concurrence in certain Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "Columbia," insert "subject to the approval of the commissioners thereof."

Page 1, lines 14 and 15, strike out "District of Columbia" and insert "United States."

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole; but if there be no objection, the committee will be discharged, and the question will be taken in the House.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF LAND LAWS.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the unfinished business, being the bill (H. R. 7901) to secure to actual settlers the public lands adapted to agriculture, to protect the forests of the public domain, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

By Mr. PAYSON:

At the end of section 3 add, "but no patent shall issue except to a citizen of the United States."

By Mr. NELSON:

Add to the amendment offered by Mr. PAYSON, the words "or when he has declared his intention to become such."

Mr. McRAE. I desire to call attention to the fact that there are several other amendments to that section that ought to be considered first, and may make the consideration of the present amendment unnecessary.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk has reported the amendments in the order in which they were offered. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the amendments in the order in which they will appear in the bill.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done as to all these amendments when they shall be reached; that the amendments shall be presented and taken up in the order in which they would appear to the bill, rather than the order in which they were offered.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that order will be pursued.

Mr. HOLMAN. That has been agreed to heretofore.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that the committee has had these amendments arranged in conformity to the understanding that they should be considered in the order in which they stand as applicable to the several sections of the bill. There are quite a large number of the amendments here. They have been printed and any gentleman desiring to see the amendments can be supplied with copies. I have already sent a copy to the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will be governed by that copy.

The Clerk read as follows:

By Mr. CUTCHEON:

Insert in line 3, section 1, after the words "United States," "now belonging to the public domain, or which may be hereafter restored to the public domain from lands heretofore granted to any State or corporation for the purpose of aiding in the construction of any railroad or other public improvement."

Mr. PAYSON. I think that amendment was determined upon by the House when the matter was under consideration before.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that amendment was not adopted.

Mr. McRAE. We have already reached section 3 of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised by the Clerk that this amendment has been agreed to heretofore, and that the House has reached section 3.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The amendment first reported by the Clerk a few moments ago is the one now pending.

Mr. McRAE. That was not the first amendment to section 3. There were several other amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. The first amendment to section 3——

The SPEAKER. The Clerk has a record here which shows that some amendments were rejected by the House. The question seems to be on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

Mr. PAYSON. That was the pending question when the bill was last under consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is my understanding.

The SPEAKER put the question on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment offered by Mr. PAYSON was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. NUTTING:

"Strike out the words 'or who has declared his intention to become such,' in lines 5 and 6, page 2."

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk reported the next amendment, as follows:

Strike out the words "or who has filed his declaration of intention to become such, as required by the naturalization laws," in lines 5 and 6, page 2; lines 5, 6, and 7, page 8, and lines 7, 8, and 9, page 12 of the printed bill.

Mr. PAYSON. That is the same thing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCMILLIN). The Chair is informed that that amendment was voted down.

Mr. PAYSON. It is the same thing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that there were amendments pending to the first section which were not disposed of, and the Chair desires to ask whether it is the purpose of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to go on or to recur to that section now?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be no objection to disposing of the amendments to the first section as we are proceeding now. I ask that they be reported. My understanding was that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] offered an amendment to the first line of the first section——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that that amendment was adopted.

Mr. McRAE. It was voted down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendments that have been adopted will be read.

There was no objection.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In section 1, line 3, after the words "United States," the following amendment was inserted: "Now belonging to the public domain or which may hereafter be added to the public domain."

Also insert after the word "tin," in section 2, line 3, the words "or other valuable mineral deposit."

In the same line strike out the word "contiguous," and in line 4, after the word "in," insert the word "contiguous."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that those are the amendments that have been adopted to the first section. There is another amendment pending, which was proposed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS], which the Clerk will read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the words "United States," in line 3, add the words "including No Man's Land or the neutral strip lying immediately south of Western Kansas and Eastern Colorado."

Mr. HOLMAN. It will be seen by the amendment adopted to the first section that that is unnecessary.

Mr. STONE of Missouri. That amendment was withdrawn. The record shows that it was withdrawn by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, there were two amendments offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON], to strike out parts of lines 6 and 7 in section 3 and certain words in lines 12 and 13.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed by Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, to amend section 3 by striking out all after the words "Revised Statutes," in line 2, and inserting the words "is hereby repealed."

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I think the amendment to which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] refers is one which was offered earlier than that. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment in lines 6 and 7.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out in lines 6 and 7 of section 3 the words "or any association of persons severally qualified as above;" and in lines 12 and 13 of section 3 strike out the words "or 320 acres to such association."

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say to the gentleman from Kansas that after quite a careful consideration of the matter the Committee on Public Lands think that the words included in the last amendment, "or 320 acres to such association," ought to stand. The entry is limited to 160 acres.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes, for a person; but what object is there in making any provision in this bill for an association?

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the objection to it?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Simply because we ought to profit by the experience of Pennsylvania, where the coal lands have gone out of the hands of individuals and into the hands of large corporations or associations.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Kansas whether he is insisting upon this amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I shall be glad to hear his reasons.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Because, in making provision in the land laws for an individual, a person, you go as far as I think you ought to go. The public domain was not intended, in my opinion, to be given away except to persons, to individuals; but it is provided here that associations may be formed and may take these lands. Now, if the gentleman has looked carefully into the condition of the Eastern coal fields he has found that the great difficulty to-day is in the fact that associations control the whole of them. There are three or four railroad companies which to-day absolutely control the whole anthracite coal region. That being the case, when you are making provision for the disposition of that portion of the public domain which still remains in the control of the Government, and all of which is in the West, I can not see why it is necessary for us to make any provision by which associations shall be recognized and by which these coal lands shall be given to them.

Mr. PAYSON. They are not given; they are sold.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Well, sold. I do not want any association about it, so far as I am concerned. We have had "trusts" enough.

Mr. PAYSON. I do not desire to consume the time of the committee, but it seems to me that the amendment of the gentleman ought not to prevail. Briefly stated, the proposition is this: The bill proposes to dispose of coal and iron lands for so much money per acre, and it proposes to sell lands in quantities not exceeding 160 acres to an individual, or not exceeding 320 acres to an association, either a partnership or a corporation.

As a matter of practical experience in reference to mining in the West, it goes without saying that such business is always carried on by an association of capital; it is never, so far as I know, an individual enterprise. Take my own State, or take the iron region of Michigan, or any part of the West where these mining operations are carried on. They require the outlay of such an amount of capital that for this reason, as well as for convenience in other respects, partnerships and associations of capital are formed for the purpose of developing coal and iron mines. And I know of no reason why the Congress of the United States should say that it will sell 160 acres of coal land to me individually for the purpose of development, but will not sell to a partnership composed of the gentleman from Kansas and myself. There is no logic in such distinction. There is nothing in this matter involving the question of monopoly or anti-monopoly; it is simply a business proposition. The coal and the iron, as they lie undeveloped, are absolutely valueless; their value consists only in their availability when worked. It seems to me, therefore, without going into an argument (for the statement of the matter carries with it all the argument necessary), that the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas to strike out the provision allowing a partnership or association to acquire these mining interests ought not to be adopted. I hope it will not prevail.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] to page 5 of the list of amendments. He will find there an amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH] which ought to be considered in connection with this proposition—at least this amendment ought to be adopted or rejected with reference to that amendment, which is yet to be voted upon—an amendment which, if adopted, will nullify this section altogether.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, there were—ayes 6, noes 14.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I think, Mr. Chairman, there ought to be a quorum on this question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit to the gentleman that this amendment is of no practical importance; the result is exactly the same whether the grant be made to two or three persons individually or as an association. The gentleman's other amendment is an important one, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I will not insist on a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is rejected.

The second branch of the amendment of Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, was read as follows:

In lines 12 and 13 of section 3 strike out the words "or 320 acres to such association."

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit that the words struck out should be simply "three hundred and twenty acres to such," making the language read: "not exceeding 160 acres to such individual, person, or association," etc. This modification seems to be necessary in order to make the concluding language harmonize with the preceding portion of the section.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I think the preceding portion of the section is a humbug.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the amendment so as to strike out simply the words "three hundred and twenty acres to such."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment as amended was adopted.

The next amendment (offered by Mr. LIND) was read, as follows:

Add to section 3 the following:

"Provided, however, That Congress shall always have and does hereby reserve the power to regulate, by laws general in their provisions, the management and conduct of the business of mining coal on any of the lands entered in this act, and also the right to prevent any person or corporation engaged in operating or mining on such lands from charging an unreasonable price for the production thereof."

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The next amendment (offered by Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas) was read, as follows:

Amend section 3 by striking out all after the words "United States," in line 2, and insert the words "is hereby repealed."

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. STONE, of Missouri. There is some mistake about that.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No; the effect of this amendment will be to make the beginning of section 3 read: "That section 2347 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed," striking out the words "be amended so as to read as follows." This will of course annul this section altogether instead of amending it.

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman tell us the substance of section 2347?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I suppose it to be quoted in that portion of the bill embraced between lines 4 and 14, on page 2.

Mr. PAYSON. Why does the gentleman want that repealed?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. For the simple reason that I do not want to give the lands to these associations.

Mr. PAYSON. What would the gentleman do with these coal and iron lands, if he would not sell them?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Let the Government keep them.

Mr. PAYSON. Well, that makes a straight issue.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Certainly. This thing of being so intensely liberal to associations in giving to them the complete control of the coal and iron lands now remaining as a part of the public domain is to my mind a mistake; and this amendment raises the whole question as to whether we want to do that or not.

For my part, Mr. Chairman, I believe it is the true policy of the Government in reference to these mineral lands to dispose of them with great slowness if at all. Then in the future we will be in a far better condition in reference to them. That is the point in the amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. I believe the amendment I offered to section 2, which will be found on page 5 of the amendments to the bill, will cover the whole question. We ought to refer back and settle that question before we proceed any further. If we adopt that or the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan it will settle the whole question so far as coal lands are concerned.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I hope that will be done. These amendments have been passed over for the time being. Really the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH] is the decisive one.

Mr. HOLMAN. If that amendment is adopted we will have to go back to that section. We will have to provide some means of disposing of the lands even if the Government determines to retain the coal lands. There is no period in our history when the disposition of coal lands was suspended. This has been found to be impracticable. I do not see how we can embrace it without embracing in some form the disposal of coal lands.

Mr. PAYSON. The amendment by Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, as printed reads:

Amend section 3 by striking out all after the words "United States" and insert the words "is hereby repealed."

Now, the words "United States" do not occur in line 2 at all.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Instead of "United States" the words should be "Revised Statutes."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, to amend section 3 by striking out all after the words "Revised Statutes," in line 2, and inserting the words "is hereby repealed."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 6, noes 25.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I move to strike out the words "or coal."

Mr. WEAVER. That has been withdrawn.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I desire to offer not exactly with the recommendation of the committee, but after consultation with members of the committee, the substitute for section 4 which I send up to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I have an amendment to section 3.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Michigan to move his amendment to section 3.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I send the amendment to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 3 the following:

"No railroad corporation or corporation formed to carry on the business of common carriers shall have a right to enter any land under this section or at any time undertake to acquire by gift, grant, or devise any land entered under this section under said railroad corporation or corporation formed to carry on the business of common carriers at any time in the future to carry on the business of mining either in their own name or in the name of other persons on land so entered."

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the fact that we have passed over the amendment to the second section which should be considered in this place.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us vote on this proposition first.

Mr. WEAVER. There is an amendment pending by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH] to section 2 of this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. That has been passed over. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his amendment for the present.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH] is now pending, and the Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

By Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin:

Amend by striking out all of the section after the word "provided," and inserting as follows:

"Provided, however, That all deposits of coal or iron on the lands of the United States are hereby reserved to the United States, and no future grant or patent from the United States shall be held to include such deposits: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the owner of any land acquired subject to the exceptions and reservations of this section from using such deposits for his own private use: And provided further, That neither the right of the Government of the United States to control and regulate the use and disposition of such deposits and working thereof, nor the right of said Government to enter upon the lands containing such deposits, either by its officers, agents, or lessees, shall ever be questioned, and the provisions of this section shall be expressed in all grants and patents for lands hereafter disposed of by the United States."

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. The House will understand this bill provides for the disposition and sale of timber lands and of the iron and coal lands now belonging to the Government.

It seems to me that that is a proposition to place the future inhabitants of the region now owned by the United States, and known as the public domain—to place them in the hands entirely of the coal monopolists and timber monopolists of this country.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not that the law or the practice now?

Mr. WEAVER. Well, it may be; but if that be the law now it is bad law.

Now, look at this matter for a moment, Mr. Speaker. Take 160 acres of land with an 8-foot coal vein underlying it. The amount of coal underlying that tract is wholly out of proportion to any wants that may ever arise on behalf of the owner of the 160 acres of land. It was never placed there, if I may be permitted to refer to the laws of nature, for the use of any one single individual, but it was placed there by the Great Power that controls the universe for the benefit of the people, the multitudes living in the cities in the vicinity of the coal, and who are just as much at the mercy of the elements, and who are just as much dependent upon its use as the man who happens to live on the 160 acres of land and finds the bed of coal below the surface.

It is adapted for fuel for all the people, and the Government ought to protect the people from the mercy of the monopolists, whose operations we have witnessed in this respect in other parts of the country.

A MEMBER. We do protect the mineral lands now.

Mr. WEAVER. I know that we have protected them to a certain extent. We have embraced upon our statute-books laws to reserve the title to the coal deposits. I am not so particular about the iron deposits, because iron is not so much an article of daily necessity; but I am strenuous in my demand that we should protect the coal deposits. It is provided expressly in this bill that these deposits of fuel—timber and coal—shall be protected; and this simply provides a reservation of the title to the coal and timber deposits, or rather to the coal and iron deposits under the United States.

I repeat, I am not so particular about iron, and am willing to strike out the words in this amendment, "or iron," and shall offer an amendment with that view.

But I do insist, sir, that we should retain the title to all coal deposits, reserving the simple right to the owner of the soil to use so much as may be necessary for his private purposes, and guard the balance carefully for the use of the people, so as to protect them against paying tribute to monopoly.

We own the land now; but when once we have parted with its possession, either under this or any other provision of law, we will never regain title, for it has passed out of the hands of the United States and it is beyond our control and beyond the reach of legislation. No general statute of the United States or State statute can reach it.

The people thereafter are forever at the mercy of the monopoly. Let us pause right here before we take another step, and let us, with the remnant of the public domain, inaugurate the careful policy which should have been the policy in this respect from the foundation of the Government.

I hope no gentleman will vote against the amendment.

I move a further amendment, to strike out the words "or iron" from the amendment in line 3.

Mr. PAYSON. Before the gentleman from Iowa takes his seat will he foreshadow what his policy would be as to the disposition of the coal for general use now on the lands reserved by the bill?

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. That is not so easily done.

Mr. WEAVER. The Government might dispose of it in small quantities; they may lease the lands even, without charge if you please, and in the lease and in the law authorizing the lease they may prescribe the maximum price beyond which the coal shall not be sold. In this and other ways protection may be afforded to the people. I do not wish to retain it as a source of revenue to the Government, as in Spain, and for some time in England and other countries—a source of profit to the Government. I do not want the Government to undertake the leasing of coal lands or enter into mining operations; but what I do want is that the Government shall retain sovereign control over the source of the fuel supply in this country, and I would be willing to let the Government lease the lands to individuals under proper restrictions, regulations, and conditions, free of cost.

It must be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that we are not legislating for to-day, but we are fixing conditions which will exist through the whole future of this country, and in that future millions of people will be dependent upon this fuel deposit in order to keep them warm when the mercury is below zero; and I am unwilling, in view of what we know will come in the future, to say here, as a legislator, that these lands and these people shall be placed under the control of monopoly. I would retain for all time the power in the Government to control this business.

Suppose the Government had to-day control over the anthracite region. You would have no anthracite coal monopoly, such as now disgraces our civilization.

Mr. McRAE. I want to ask the gentleman this question, with his consent: if he knows of any such region belonging to the public domain? The question is not whether corporations are controlling the coal lands by any organization, nor whether a syndicate or corporation own them, but whether we shall dispose of what we have in the manner suggested here in the bill? Have we any such large public coal lands?

Mr. WEAVER. There are vast coal deposits, I will tell the gentleman.

Mr. McRAE. Whereabouts?

Mr. WEAVER. In the region known as No Man's Land, and in many regions of the country. I presume there is not any considerable portion of the public domain remaining to the United States that is not underlined with coal deposits. It is one of the wise provisions of nature and of nature's God, and we are here legislating for the future, not for to-day, but for all time to come; and I hope this House will not shut its eyes to follow a bad precedent that ought to have been reversed years ago.

Mr. PAYSON. Before the gentleman takes his seat let me ask him now, assuming what we want is a practical solution of this thing, whether he sees any constitutional difficulty in the way of Congress attempting to control the management, output, prices, etc., in the States, and where this Congress can get any such power if it undertakes to exercise that right?

Mr. WEAVER. Congress has the right to dispose of all the property that belongs to the United States. If the United States retains the title to this coal it will be Government property, and therefore the Government can control it. There is no constitutional provision in the way that I can see.

Mr. HOLMAN. My sympathy is entirely with the gentleman from Iowa, but I object to his criticisms of this particular measure.

Mr. WEAVER. I do not offer it as a criticism at all. It is simply a matter of correct policy.

Mr. HOLMAN. The law has been as is proposed by this bill for a great many years, except in one respect. The general law provides now that coal lands may be disposed of in quantities of not exceeding 360 acres to any association of persons at $20 an acre for land within 15 miles of a railroad and $10 an acre where situated further from a railroad than 10 miles. The committee thought it was just as well at once to establish one price, and therefore fixed upon $10, and so recommend. As we understand the proposition now pending, the Government can not well retain the title of the land. There are embarrassments in the way. Yet all must admit there is great force in the suggestion that in some form or other the Government should seek to obtain control. I submit that if the land is sold subject to an express condition, that condition will not be affected by the fact that the land ultimately comes to be in a State rather than a Territory. The Government retains an express right and controlling power in the entire property, in the coal mine itself. I therefore ventured to draw up a proposition upon this subject, although I must say I am not satisfied with anything I have seen. It is, I think, quite a mild proposition, which does not propose to retain the title of the land in the Government. I felt embarrassed by another fact, and I think the committee all did. Some of these lands are reported on returns to the Land Office as coal lands, and are ultimately found valueless for any purpose. This is the case in the State of Alabama, in the State of Arkansas, perhaps other States in the South, and to a very large extent in the West.

The lands are not really coal lands. They are valuable only for agriculture. There the Government ought not be embarrassed nor the citizen embarrassed by a complicated state of title resulting from a Government reservation. So I venture to suggest the amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting:
"Provided, however, As to coal lands hereafter sold, Congress reserves the right to regulate by general laws the business of mining the coal deposits therein; also to prohibit the consolidation of the interests of coal lands and the ownership therein in trusts or otherwise beyond the original entry thereof by any person as authorized by this act, and to control and regulate the disposition of the product of any coal mine on any such land and prohibit unreasonable charges for the same."

Mr. HOLMAN. While that proposition permits the sale of the land it simply seeks to retain Government control over the mineral deposits.

Mr. WEAVER. It seeks to do what it can not do.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not?

Mr. WEAVER. Because you pass the fee-simple of the land. After that is done the coal belongs to the individual, and you can not retain it. You have got to retain the title in the property in order to get jurisdiction. The jurisdiction can not be severed from the ownership of the property.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the criticism of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] is not exactly correct. I can not see why the Federal Government can not sell the land, reserving a property interest in this way.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mineral rights.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; just as any individual may do.

Mr. WEAVER. That does not reserve the right of property.

Mr. HOLMAN. The power of regulation and control in this case is vested in the Government. It is a retention of the property interest in the property. It does not seem to be a matter of any consequence as to the difference between the powers of a State and the powers of a Territory. Of course this legislation is admissible in a Territory and I think it is also in a State. The Government retains the power of control.

It seems to me this would be far better than for the Government to enter into the business of leasing coal lands. Our Government has too much upon its hands to look after, and should not go into a business so remote from the legitimate objects of Government. I would be glad to see such control retained as that the Government could prevent monopoly, and secure the coal to the people at a fair and reasonable price. I think the amendment I offer will accomplish that result.

Mr. WEAVER. I want to say in reply to the gentleman that I did not in the remark which I made awhile ago mean any unfriendly criticism of the bill. The general object of the bill is perfectly humane and patriotic. But it was the particular feature of the bill of which I was speaking.

Now, with due respect to the gentlemen, I think the amendment just offered will probably be of doubtful force and effect. I can not conceive how the Government can part with the fee-simple title, with all the property interest that it has in these lands, and still retain the right to legislate with regard to how the purchaser shall dispose of the land which he has purchased and paid for. But, on the other hand, there can be no doubt about the effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH], which I will now read:

Provided, however, That all deposits of coal or iron on the lands of the United States are hereby reserved to the United States and no future grant or patent from the United States shall be held to include such deposits: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the owner of any land acquired subject to the exceptions and reservations of this section from using such deposits for his own private use: And provided further, That neither the right of the Government of the United States to control and regulate the use and disposition of such deposits and working thereof, nor the right of said Government to enter upon the lands containing such deposits, either by its officers, agents, or lessees, shall ever be questioned, and the provisions of this section shall be expressed in all grants and patents for lands hereafter disposed of by the United States.

It seems to me, sir, that is broad, humane, and most unobjectionable.

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Speaker, I have a sincere desire to see this bill become a law. I believe that this land law in its general modification as presented by the Committee on Public Lands is surpassed in merit by very few measures that have been presented to Congress, and while that is true of the bill as a whole, this proposition to reserve the coal which underlies so much of this land in the West, is an exceedingly important one. For nearly twenty years of my life I have been the land agent of the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company. A few years ago they withdrew all their land contracts and patents and inserted just the provision which we are seeking to have ingrafted into this bill. They are reserving the ownership not merely of the coal, but of all mineral that underlies their lands.

Mr. WEAVER. And the Northern Pacific Railroad Company is doing the same thing.

Mr. MANSUR. Yes, and we know that that reservation holds in law. We know that you can deed lands and make a reservation of anything that lies underneath. These lands are not sold to-day for the value of the coal that underlies them. It is discovered later. It makes the purchase of lands a perfect lottery, and there is no reason why the man who merely discovers the coal or other mineral should have that which is worth ten times more than the land cost him originally, or even than it is worth with all his improvements at the time of the discovery. We understand from general newspaper reports that so far as commercial purposes are concerned the supply of timber in this country will soon be exhausted.

Fire-wood is already very costly in the neighborhood of cities, and, besides that, it is bulky. We know, also, what quantities of coal are being mined everywhere for the use of people who are located in a cold and inhospitable climate. Great discoveries of coal are being made all through the West. I understand that extensive discoveries have been made in the Indian Territory and in Colorado and elsewhere in the West. It is said that the Rocky Mountains are underlaid with it, and if that coal supply can be reserved and kept under the control of the Government it will be a great advantage to the people at large. If at any time coal mines are discovered and opened on these lands, and the parties who are working them do not seek to make a monopoly of them, but sell the coal at reasonable rates, the probability is that there will not be any attempt to interfere with their operations; but, inasmuch as no laches can ever be attributed to the Government, whenever such parties attempt to take advantage of the people, whenever an effort is discovered on the part of those who have the usufruct of the land to monopolize this product and charge extortionate prices for it, then the Government can step in and put a stop to such proceedings.

The question of fuel and of fuel supply is a very important one, not only for the people generally for their domestic uses, but also for all the great manufacturing enterprises of the country, and I do believe that the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH] is one which we ought to adopt because it is in line with the precedents set by these great corporations, and they would not introduce such a provision into their land patents unless they knew that it would hold water.

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read the reservation which is inserted by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in its deeds when it sells land.

The Clerk read as follows:

And also reserving and excepting from said described premises so much and such parts thereof as are or may be mineral lands, or containing coal or iron, and also the use and the right and title to the use of such surface ground as may be necessary for mining operations, and the right of access to such reserved and excepted mineral lands, including lands containing coal or iron, for the purpose of exploring, developing, and working the same.

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the provision just read is inserted by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in every grant of land which it makes; it excepts and reserves from such grants all mineral lands, including lands containing coal or iron.

Mr. WEAVER. Those are lands which the company obtained from the Government of the United States.

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. Exactly. Now, Mr. Speaker, many things have been stated pro and con in reference to the amendment which I have offered. I will only say I have offered it in good faith. We know that every manufacturer in the United States is dependent upon fuel for his motive power; and I believe we have a constitutional right to reserve these great resources of nature for the people of the whole country. If a full and honest vote of the people of the United States were taken upon this question, I believe a proposition of this kind would be carried by such a majority as would astonish members of this House; and we would not hesitate a moment about adopting such a provision.

Mr. VANDEVER. Mr. Speaker, we know from experience that it requires a combination between the railroad companies and the owners of coal lands to enforce a monopoly of the fuel supply of the country. Such provisions as that inserted in the deeds given by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company show that the transportation companies are sensible that in order to exercise a monopoly over the fuel supply it is necessary that provisions of this kind be inserted in their contracts.

Now, as a protection for the public at large against the exactions of these monopolies sought to be consummated by the combination of railroad companies and coal companies, it is but natural and reasonable that the Government should step in and when giving the privilege of cultivating the surface of the public lands should reserve the minerals below the surface.

The Government reserves to itself the privilege of mining the precious metals—gold and silver—so that there can be no monopoly in this respect. Why not extend a similar reservation to the fuel supply, the material which produces the motive power of the country, which warms and comforts the people, which is one of the absolute necessaries of life? Why is it not the highest wisdom to prevent these overshadowing monopolies from gaining the absolute control of the fuel supply as they have of the transportation facilities of the country?

I do not say anything as to the particular form of the amendment proposed by my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH], or as to the form of the provision submitted by the chairman of this committee; but these propositions involve a vital principle essential to the interests of the people at this time, and it is well that they should arrest the attention of the committee and the House.

Now, that we have under consideration this bill in regard to the disposition of the public lands, I submit that it is a question demanding consideration whether we can not put some restriction upon the power of those who are seeking to control the fuel supply. At present, in many parts of the country these monopolies own the great coal beds, and they regulate the output of them, not for the purpose of promoting the welfare of the people at large, but in order to control prices and put money in their own pockets, irrespective of the interests of the people. The principle involved here is a right one, and should be fully and fairly considered. We should not fail to incorporate in this bill some provision which will guaranty to the people at large that they shall no longer be subject in regard to their fuel supply to these overshadowing monopolies.

Mr. MCRAE obtained the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am very anxious that we shall limit debate on this question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What time does the gentleman from Indiana suggest?

Mr. HOLMAN. Ten minutes.

Mr. WHEELER. I shall object to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] has been recognized. If he yields for the purpose, the Chair will put the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this section be limited to five minutes on each side.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Oh, no; this is a very important amendment. I would like five minutes myself.

Mr. CHIPMAN. And I desire five minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that, by unanimous consent, we let this paragraph be passed over, to be recurred to when the remainder of the bill is finished.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the pending paragraph be passed over for the present.
